Buckingham Town Council Decides To Lodge Protest

Buckingham, Que., March 21— (CP)—After a lengthy meeting, Buckingham town council decided Monday night to lodge a formal protest with Defence Department officials over the recent "Back to Our Hearth" accordant German prisoners of war brought here from a farm camp at nearby Lac Simon, Que. for medical and dental treatment.

A resolution said prisoners are being allowed "altogether too much liberty in the town" when brought in under military guard and M. J. Gorman, secretary-treasurer of Buckingham, was instructed to write the Defence Department to say council "strongly protests the allowing of undue liberty to prisoners of war brought into the town in future."

The resolution followed complaints received by Mayor Fulford Matte that certain of the Veterans' Guard of Canada in charge of a group of prisoners were "fraternizing" with them in taverns and hotels and that the prisoners recently enjoyed beer-drinking sessions and went "joy riding" with Buckingham girls.

Defence Minister Ralston and Labor Minister Mitchell last night assured the House of Commons that the situation was being investigated. "The townspeople are not pleased with the way things have been going on and have no intention of standing for it in future," Mayor Matte told the press. "The idea of German war prisoners wandering at large and sometimes without even a guard over them, is unbelievable. The whole situation is unreasonable."

Sugar Beet Production Causes Sharp Exchanges in Commons

By JAMES McCOOK
(Canadian Press Staff Writer)

Ottawa, March 21 (CP).—The Congested debate yesterday ranged from international air policy to the treatment of prisoners of war, but the sharpest exchanges of the day centred on the subject of beet sugar production.

New Prince Rupert Leader Blackmore, who previously had expressed suspicions of what he called a sugar "trust and combine," returned to the subject on a motion to go into committee of supply.

He said the government had failed to answer his question as to what relationship there was between the government and those sugar companies, and between the government and the head of the corporation (Rt. Lawrence Sugar Refinery), one John W. McConnell.

Prime Minister Mackenzie King had made a statement by reply, but did not give a "yes" or "no" answer to the direct question of whether the Liberal party does not solicit any campaign funds' contribution from the sugar companies, Blackmore or Mr. McConnell said Mr. Blackmore.

"The Prime Minister must have known the answer," said Mr. Blackmore. "He did not give the answer, I am sorry he is not in his seat at the moment. Why?"

Mr. Howe Answers

Minister of Munitions Howe: "I can assure my honorable friend that the Prime Minister did not know and I do not know. The members of the government do not handle campaign funds."

Mr. Blackmore, in whose Alberta riding of Lethbridge sugar beet sugar is produced, said cane sugar interests "will go almost any length" to avoid having beet sugar production increased. He said he believed beet sugar production had been deliberately restricted by the Liberal government ever since it came to power.

The Dominion apparently felt itself bound by a world agreement for the restriction of sugar output made in London in 1937.

Mr. Blackmore said he had not suggested the Liberal party would necessarily be doing a reprehensible thing if it received campaign funds.

"I wonder whether he (the Prime Minister) was doing what he did with respect to beet sugar in this country because he wanted to help the friends or because those interests were so powerful that he did not dare do otherwise," he continued.

Mr. Howe: "My honorable friend is suggesting that the Liberal party has entered into an agreement with sugar companies not to extend the sugar industry."

"I would point out to him that there has been more expansion of the sugar industry in the last five years than in any other five years."

Minister Defends Pensions

Pensions Minister Mackenzie: "I also wish to point out to the honorable member that under a section of the Criminal Code, if he is making allegations of this kind he should proceed in the customary fashion, according to that section of the Code; otherwise he has set up much of a smoke screen."

Mr. Blackmore: "Yes, I know the Minister of Pensions is a champion of prosecutions, but does not limit me and I am perfectly aware of the protection I have in the House. I would point out that a man, in order to allege indirectly that the head of the ones I am trying to move, needs all the protection he can get, because he is the president of it."

Speaker J. A. Glen said he was not so much concerned with Mr. Blackmore's remarks about the government, but he had considered it his duty to say the Prime Minister was "responsible for this reprehensible practice."

Mr. Blackmore: "I think you will find that the record will show that is not the case."

Closing the discussion on sugar, Mr. Howe said that the government had encouraged production, which had in fact increased in recent years.

Mrs. Dorise Nielsen (Unity — North Battleford) had the support of opposition groups when she called for tabling of correspondence on the release from internment of Alderman E. Seidler of St. Walburg, Sask. Her motion was defeated by a vote of 108 to 51.

Stanley Knowles (CCF — Winnipeg North Centre) and M. J. Coldwell, C.C.F. Leader, expressed the party's support for the civil aviation policy enunciated in the House Friday by Mr. Howe.

Parachute Incident

Lt.-Col. Arthur Ross (P.C.-Souris) and George White (P.C.-Peterborough West) moved to press reports that German prisoners enjoyed themselves freely in the town of Buckingham, Que., last week.

Defence Minister Ralston and Labor Minister Mitchell both said the incident would be investigated. Col. Ralston said the report in charge of the prisoners, who were brought into town from a labor camp for treatment, was under close arrest.

The Ministers said that Canada should not attempt to match the brutality of the Japanese in the treatment of prisoners.

Col. Ralston said that he had warned the House last year there was some risk in using prisoners of war for labor, but that he had understood they be used for this purpose. It was normal to take prisoners to town in small groups when they required medical or dental treatment.

Sharp Clash on Air Issue

Mr. Civil Aviation debate was preceded by a brief clash between Mr. Grayson and Mr. Coldwell, C.C.F. leader. Mr. Coldwell said he thought parties should have been ready to take part in the discussion.

Mr. Grayson asked if that was a "lecture" and Mr. Coldwell replied that he had no lectures from Mr. Grayson and saw no reason why he should not "express my regret that the official opposition parties had been unable to arrive at a decision regarding this particular matter."

"I have just the leader of the C.C.F. Party play this whole game of ping-pong quite often, but I have never seen him in quite as good form as he is today," said Mr. Grayson.

He demanded that Mr. Coldwell withdraw his remarks and the C.C.F. Leader said he would accept Mr. Grayson's word that the delay was not because the Progressive Conservatives were trying to arrive at a decision. He said he thought, however, that it was unfortunate the House could not proceed.

38 Escort Carriers Given to Britain Under Lend-Lease

Washington, March 21. (AP) — Navy Secretary Frank Knox announced today that 38 escort aircraft carriers built in the United States have been delivered to Great Britain under the lend-lease program.

"This fleet of 38 carriers will be a part of the anti-submarine fleet of the Allied nations," Knox said at his press conference.

The escort carriers, of approximately 7,800 tons displacement each, have been one of the most potent weapons against the German submarines in the Atlantic.

Knox pointed out that with the gift of 38 of the deadly little craft to Britain fifty remain in operation with the United States fleet.

He said the carriers were delivered by the Navy to Britain without their complement of planes and that he was not personally acquainted with how and when the planes were obtained.

Like all other lend-lease ships, he said, title to the carriers remains with the United States and

DREW, JOLLIFFE EXCHANGE WORDS IN LEGISLATURE

C.C.F. Leader Tells Premier He Will Not Withdraw Statements Made

DREW GIVES ANSWER

Toronto, March 21 (CP) — The Ontario legislature resumed the debate on the budget presented last week by Provincial Treasurer Frost, budget critics of the official opposition will be keynoted by Fred J. Wilson, C.C.F. member for Toronto Riverdale and former editor of a Communist paper.

The budget brought down last Thursday carried net debt reduction of $12,951,171 and an over-all surplus of $982,171. The debt reduction charges are doubling the tax on winning parimutuel tickets at the province's tracks, from five to 10 per cent.

Mr. Wilson yesterday witnessed another clash between Premier Drew and C.C.F. Leader Joe Jolliffe arising from statements made by Jolliffe in the Dr. Penfield-Hallstead by-election campaign. Premier Drew charged that the C.C.F. was trying to "restore stolen property to the owner" when it was compared to back it up.

Mr. Jolliffe said he had no reason to withdraw any statement that he had made. "I am the Legislature or outside of it. "I believe an apology is due from Dr. Penfield," Mr. Jolliffe "but not from me. It is most regrettable that the Prime Minister has descended to conducting political controversy with the people's money."

Premier Strikes Back

Premier Drew declared: "Those who deliberately set out to undermine public morale, this critical hour by spreading the corrosive evil doubt, cynicism, defeatism, malice and hatred for the one purpose of advancing their own selfish interests, deserve the bitter loathing and contempt of all decent people who believe in the right of this country as a nation to preserve freedom, justice, honesty and truth."

Mr. Jolliffe then said the Premier's statement would carry more weight if the Premier would offer to reveal publicly all sources of campaign funds for his party and others.

The exchange arose over the action of the Ontario Hydro-Electric Power Commission in taking over the hitherto private power plant at Griffiths at Decew Falls for development purposes. As several other members interrupted the discussion, the Speaker, W. J. Stewart, finally warned that if the rules of debate were not observed he would have to clear the House.

Debt Second Reading

The Legislature again delayed second reading of the government's bill to empower municipalities to set up health services after William Dennison (C.C.F. — Toronto St. David) and J. R. Salsberg (C.C.F. — Toronto St. Andrew) complained the measure was inadequate. Attorney-General Blackwell explained the measure was simply a framework providing health services to those desiring them.

Third reading was given an act continuing the subsidies on cheese and hog production at their present levels. Acts respecting the Township of Scarborough, the County of Essex and the city of Ottawa Public School Board were reported from committee. An act to amend the Credit Union Act was held over.

Members of Service Clubs Asked to Donate Blood at Clinic

In an effort to create greater interest in the Blood Donor Clinic and to get increased numbers of donors from the city of Belleville, officials of the Belleville Red Cross Blood Donor Clinic have contacted the three local service clubs — Kiwanis, Rotary and Kinsmen, for volunteers for blood donations.

According to clinic officials, a great percentage of the donors attending the clinic in recent weeks have come from the district towns and rural areas while the small percentage of the number being from the city. Clinic officials thing feel that city residents should have a greater part in supplying the blood plasma so badly needed on the battlefronts if the lives of wounded fighting men are to be saved.

Russel T. Kelley, speaking at Rotary Club Monday noon complained the Blood Donor Clinic on its work in Belleville and in reference to the suggestion of service club members for donors intimated that in Hamilton there had been inaugurated a "Get One Club."

"It is not always possible nor advisable for all members of a club such as this to donate blood, but in Hamilton we have inaugurated a "Get One Club" by which members agree to bring at least one donor to the clinic." The club was meeting with gratifying success, according to Mr. Kelley.

"If we want to exercise options", they can be reclaimed after the war.

In announcing the delivery of the carriers, he remarked it was tremendous task to build 38 destroyers were delivered to Great Britain under the lend-lease program in exchange for 99-year leases of British naval bases in Newfoundland and the West Indies.

Newspaper Advertising Most Economical Because Widely Read

Russel T. Kelly, Head of Advertising Agency, Speaks to Rotary Club

All the different types of advertising commonly used to get the commercial message before the people, newspaper advertising is the most economical because of its wide, most widely known advertising agencies.

Mr. Kelley predicted a great future in the advertising field, as that experience had proven that the right kind of advertising, correctly followed up, was definitely an investment rather than the expense which many industrial firms had considered it to be.

The six different types of advertising commonly used were termed by the speaker as being newspaper, direct mail, billboards, magazines, radio and talking moving pictures.

Direct Compete With News

The first essential for newspaper advertisers to consider was that in their advertising they must compete with the news for attention. The idea behind advertising was first to get the attention of the reader, then create an interest in the particular product, thirdly, to create a desire to purchase, and the fourth to clinch a sale by creating a conviction in the potential purchaser to buy.

In speaking on newspaper advertising Mr. Kelley stressed the value of local newspapers, claiming they received closer attention from the readers owing to the fact that they emphasized the news from a local standpoint.

Magazine advertising had its proper place in that this is directed toward certain channels.

Mail Advertising Good is Claim

If there was any way in advertising through which money could be thrown away without the advertiser realizing benefit, it was through direct mails, according to the speaker. Mail was the first form of advertising. Mr. Kelley stressed the value of proper selection of lists and the proper method of mailing lists. Billboard advertising was also a valuable side issue, more than the creative side of advertising.

Radio as an advertising medium, so far, the talking moving picture were cited as having a definite place in the advertising field and were mediums through which a great deal of money was being spent. This type of advertising was something like a sugar-coated pill, he said. In many instances the advertisers were getting in their plug without the people realizing it.

Mr. Kelley cited the procedure by which a national advertising firm takes a contract with a large industrial firm to advertise its product. First essential was for the advertiser to give the agency its full confidence thus permitting the getting of all facts and information about the product required. He told how an agency had as its finger-tips all the required data regarding the circulation of all newspapers and the newspapers and magazines by which a certain district could be best covered.

Ted Reid Introduces Speaker

"This business of advertising is something like selling," concluded Mr. Kelley. "The first thing that it must do is to create the attention of the reader, to create an interest in the product and finally to get a resolution on the part of the reader to purchase."

Mr. J. Owen Hertiy, in his own inimitable style, introduced the guest speaker with a few appreciation being expressed by Jamieson Shaw, President Jack Deacon presided and during the meeting favored with two vocal solos. Two new Rotarians, Mr. R. B. Petherly and Dr. Jack Marshall, who will shortly be formally initiated into the club were present at the meeting.

Group Capt. 'Larry' Wray Missing After Raid Over Enemy Territory

Only recently having taken over command of an R.C.A.F. bomber squadron station in England, Group Captain Lawrence "Larry" Wray, D.F.C., son of Capt. Jack Wray, of this city, is reported as missing following a low-level raid over enemy territory. Word that his son was piloting a bomber on the fatal raid reached Capt. Wray yesterday.

Prior to his duties with the R. C. A. F., Group Captain Wray is a member of the permanent force, having joined the service prior to 1930. He had been in England several times on special courses but was posted overseas only last November. Prior to command of the R.C.A.F. bomber group he had promised a desire to participate in active operations.

Group Captain Wray is a native of Belleville, where he is survived by his father, Capt. Jack Wray, one brother, Harley Wray and a sister, Mrs. Jos. Imlah.

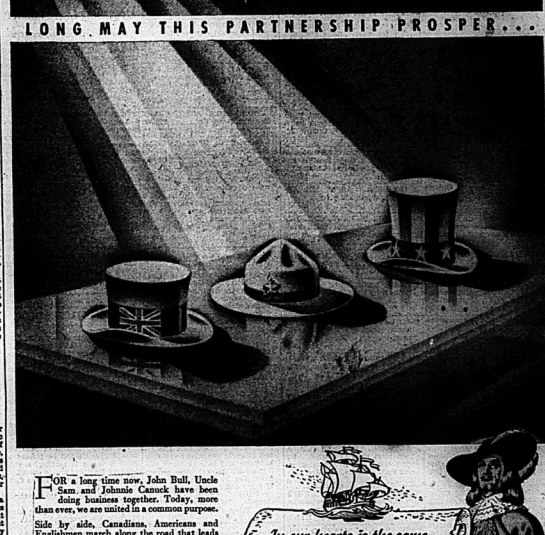
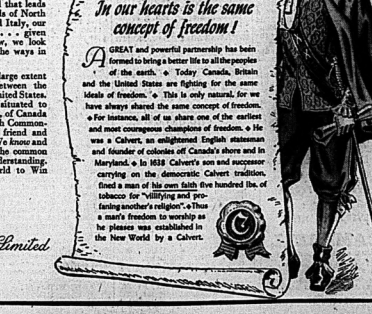
LONG MAY THIS PARTNERSHIP PROSPER...





In our hearts is the same concept of freedom!

A GREAT and powerful partnership has been formed to bring a better life to all the peoples of the earth. • Today Canada, Britain and the United States are fighting for the same ideals of freedom. • This is only natural, for we have always shared the same concept of freedom. • For instance, all of us share one of the earliest and most courageous champions of freedom. • He was a Calvert, an enlightened English statesman and founder of colonies off Canada's shore and in Maryland. • In 1638 Calvert's son and successor carrying on the democratic Calvert tradition, fined a man of his own faith five hundred lbs. of tobacco for "villifying and profaning another's religion". • Thus a man's freedom to worship as he pleases was established in the New World by a Calvert.

Future world security rests to a large extent upon continued co-operation between the British Commonwealth and the United States. Of all nations, Canada is best situated to assure such co-operation. For we, of Canada . . . a major member of the British Commonwealth, have long been a close friend and neighbour of the United States. We know and like them both so well, we are the common meeting-ground for mutual understanding. Thus will Canada help the world to Win the Peace!

NEW DESTRUCTION SHOWERED ON BERLIN

1,000 U.S. Planes Drop 1,500 Tons Bombs During Day

Many Hundreds Of Fighters Accompany Bombers on Long Journey to Capital

LAST ATTACK MARCH 9

By LEWIS HAWKINS
Associated Press Staff Writer

London, March 22 — (AP)— More than 1,000 American planes showered new destruction on Berlin today, returning to the German capital for the first time since March 9. They dropped probably 1,500 tons of bombs.

"Strong forces" of four-engined bombers attacked industrial and military targets in Berlin, U. S. Air Headquarters announced, indicating that 500 to 750 heavy bombers made the 1,130-mile round trip. Many hundreds of fighter planes accompanied them.

Monday's bombers struck in western Germany last night for the 12th straight night.

It was estimated 750 to 1,000 fighter planes took part in today's raid, making the total force between 1,250 and 1,750 planes.

The U. S. Eighth

This was the fifth U. S. heavy bomber attack against Berlin.

Lightning fighter planes started the visits with offensive sweeps March 4, a small force of Fortresses bombed the Berlin district the next day and on March 6 about 600 heavy bombers dropped 2,000 tons of bombs on the capital. Twenty-two several hundred bombers made return visits March 8 and 9.

The R.A.F. overnight operations, which included laying of gas-mines in enemy waters, were carried out without the loss of a plane, the Air Ministry said.

This morning the German radio declared Allied heavy bombers had poured lethal bombs on Germany.

English coastal observers reported several squadrons of medium bombers thundering toward the cliffs of France, which were visible in clear weather.

Aerial activity Tuesday consisted mainly of sweeps over the French and German-occupied territory.

American fighters also swept easily-occupied territory Tuesday, destroying four enemy planes, bringing heavy bombers attacked targets in the Pas-de-Calais area of northern France. Seven American fighters were lost.

Three Airmen Taken Off Floe By Ice-Breaker

Montreal, March 22. — (CP) — Three men aboard a Quebec Airways plane, stranded on an ice floe in the Gulf of St. Lawrence for a week, were picked up last night by the ice-breaker Sorel which will take them to port.

The news of the rescue was contained in a message picked up here.

The radio message said that the stranded men were rescued east of Anticosti Island.

A searching aircraft sighted the slowly-drifting "island" after several days in which the search was hampered by fog and snow-storms. Ice-breakers were established with the floe for a time and supplies of food and rubber boats were dropped. The three men were seen to pick up the supplies.

Since then, the floe could not be located again in spite of frequent search by R.C.A.F. Radio reports from the stranded plane faded out Friday, and no word of the airmen's condition was available until it was sighted from the air yesterday.

British Govt. Not Consulted

London, March 23 (CP)—Foreign secretary Anthony Eden told the commons today emphatically the British government was not consulted beforehand in the Russian recognition of the Badoglio government in Italy and is asking Moscow why.

"The British government is in communication with the Soviet government concerning the establishment of diplomatic relations between Moscow and the Badoglio regime in Italy," Eden said.

In Washington last Friday, Cordell Hull, U.S. Secretary of State, made clear that the United States was consulted before Russia exchanged diplomatic representatives with the Badoglio government.

Airmen Given Suspended Sentences In Women's Deaths

Charlottetown, March 22—(CP) Suspended sentences of prison in liquor deaths of two Charlottetown women, Mrs. Royal Gay and Mrs. Somers were sign a year's suspended sentence Tuesday when they pleaded guilty to charges of causing grievous bodily harm.

Both R.C.A.F. Sergeant D. West and LAC. George W. Gilbert, both of Regina, faced the charges produced from manslaughter. They were arrested after the death certificate of Mrs. Ada Vickerson and Winnifred Somers Royal Gay, whose inquiry revealed the women became ill after drinking an alcohol and ginger-ale mixture which, it is claimed by the airmen here.

'Whole Question' Being Examined

London, March 22 — (CP)—Foreign Secretary Anthony Eden told Commons today that the "whole question of the mechanism for administering French territory when it is liberated is now under examination by the British government and the United governments concerned."

He replied to a query by Frederick Seymour Cocks, Labor member, who also asked whether Eden had noted the statement from J Washington that President Roosevelt has already come to a decision on this subject."

President Roosevelt told Washington reporters March 17 he had arrived at a decision three days before on the French question, but that there was no clue to the decision or its trends.

Eden did not think the honorable member's underlying assumption is correct." Many questions of the most governmental are examining the position together. Whatever we say and do we do it as we say and do together."

The Foreign Secretary was similarly wary in replying to a wide range of questions put by Labor and foreign policy. He declined to go into any detailed discussion of the Yugoslav situation.

Four Canadian Fliers Perform Feat That Rates a Special Communique

London, March 22. (CP Cable) —The feat of four R.C.A.F. fliers flying unescorted Mosquitoes from enemy-occupied territory to shoot down three enemy aircraft and damage 17 others on the ground was signalled today by a special communique from Air Marshal L. S. Breadner, commander-in-chief of the R.C.A.F. overseas.

The quartet, who flew in two Mosquitoes from the City of Edmonton Squadron, consisted of Flt. Lt. Wing Commander Ralph Watson Wright of Rosthern, Sask. Flt. Lt. J. P. Lums of Metlena, Mont. and Flt. Lt. Rodney Hamilton, Flt. Lt. P. O. C. Finlayson, Victoria, and Flt. Lt. Wright of Rosthern, Sask. Finlayson was navigator in the plane piloted by Lums while Wright was navigator aboard the machine flown by Hamilton.

The communique said: "Late yesterday two R.C.A.F. Mosquitoe on offensive patrol over France and Germany destroyed three enemy aircraft over the Low Countries and damaged 17 others on the ground. Both aircraft returned safely.

"The crews of these two aircraft were over western Germany. There have been few previous occasions when such a small force was the basis of a full-fledged communique.

The three planes destroyed were shot down over the Hagenau airfield about 280 miles east of Paris and the Metz-Frescaty airfield 30 miles southeast of Paris.

The fighters also damaged at least five gliders on the ground.

At Luma accounted for two of the destroyed planes, a Junkers 34 and a Junkers 52. MacFayden shot to pieces a twin-engined plane and began to land at Haguenau.

Finlayson took off the visit to Luneuil by attacking the JU-52 which was flying across the airfield. That port machine exploded and the big troop carrier crashed in flames in a forest.

Flying only a few feet above the ground, the Mosquitos then set a course for home. As they flew past a close town in the French village, Finlayson checked the time with his own watch.

"That clock, he told Luma, "is a minute slow".

NEW ZEALANDERS SLUGGING IT OUT HAND-TO-HAND

Savage Fighting Rages At Cassino With Allies Making Steady Progress

800 SORTIES MADE

By RICHARD G. MASSOCK
Associated Press War Correspondent

Naples, March 22 — (AP)—New Zealand troops of the 5th Army, slugging it out with the enemy in savage hand-to-hand fighting, are making slow but steady progress in the Cassino sector, Allied Mediterranean Headquarters announced today.

Fighting equally as fierce was going on in the hills to the west from which an estimated 30 pieces of German artillery and enemy mortars continued to rain shells into the ruined town.

"Our efforts to clear the town of Cassino and the approaches to the ramparts of dominating Monte Cassino were pushed energetically and certain bitter enemy concentration and terrain difficulties Monday and Tuesday," the communique said.

Allied troops holding one point on the Monte Cassino slopes were only 100 to 150 yards from two strong German artillery points but the nature of the terrain, particularly difficult for Allied gunners, firing from the valley or the Mignano area, to neutralize the enemy fire without endangering their own men.

The hand-to-hand fighting in Cassino's southern portion was officially described as "confused."

The Allies were striking again at enemy communications out of the ruins of the Continental Hotel and from other fortified points on the southern approaches to the town.

Violente Attacked

Violente attacks in sweep against rail installations north of Rome, made many railroad cuts and damaged Rocca Vecchia.

Allied aircraft flew approximately 800 sorties during the day, destroying four enemy planes and losing six more, Headquarters announced.

About 40 German planes appeared over the battle area.

Fighter-bombers hit bridges and road traffic and gun positions in the battle area. Coastal planes attacked shipping along the Dalmatian coast.

The communique said patrols were active on the remainder of the Italian 5th Army front and in the Allied bridgehead around Anzio.

On the Fifth U.S. Army front sharp patrol clashes were reported.

The intensive Allied air bombardment of Cassino was a week old today.

Fanatic young Nazi parachute troops, some of them in the southern outskirts of the town and on vital hill positions, fought on.

The parachutists, perhaps the toughest men in the German army, ranged in age from 17 years of age and they have been reinforced by units of the crack Hermann Goering division. Yesterday's communique said the enemy counter-attacks "have been met by reinforcements Sunday night and mopping up has been slow."

Fighting continued on the ground Wednesday.

Official reports of fighting in the southern sector of the Cassino defences the Germans may have regained some ground, but after repeated bombing the Continental Hotel wreckage.

Hitler Expected to Extend Full Military Occupation To Bulgaria and Rumania

London, March 22 — (CP)—German troops, already in control in Hungary, were reported today to extend full military occupation to Bulgaria and Rumania and the Turkish radio expressed the view that her soon would take all three countries under one command "to intensify the German war effort in southeast Europe."

Advices from neutral capitals indicated the Nazi divisions were seizing strategic military and civil administration centres with all the speed and ruthlessness that characterized German troop movements at the start of the war.

Except for minor cases of resistance the occupying forces apparently were having things all their own way.

The Bulgarian cabinet was said by the Ankara radio to have met in prolonged session yesterday to discuss German demands for active co-op in the Nazi war against Russia. Bulgaria, at war with Britain and the United States, has never interrupted relations with Russia, but has been friendly enough.

London morning newspapers published Ankara dispatches saying the Nazi occupation of Rumania and Antonescu of Rumania was planning to seek an armistice with Russia, whose troops already are pouring into the Rumanian province believed to renounce all claim to Bessarabia as one of the armistice conditions, these dispatches said.

Fleet of Reports

A fleet of reports about the situation in Rumania agreed on one point only — that 100,000 German troops now completely dominate the country with full control of all railways and communications. There was inflications the Nazis were attempting to set up a Quisling regime in Bucharest.

Berlin itself remained silent about what is progress in the Balkans, although a Foreign Office spokesman indirectly published military occupation of the entire area might be proposed.

"Germany's Allies must now assume burdens equal to those borne by Germany," he said.

As in the case of Hungary, swiftly occupied in a 36-hour coup early in the week, information about the situation in Rumania and Bulgaria was confused.

The London Daily Mail said it was believed Ankara that occupation of Rumania was imminent, if not actually in progress, and Bucharest reported that at least 4 German motorized divisions and several divisions of infantry were advancing toward Bucharest.

An Ankara broadcast included both Rumania and Bulgaria within a proposed German occupation area along one of the routes "which are to be placed under command of one German supreme command." The Ankara radio also said the Germans had seized control of Bulgarian postal and telegraph offices.

LONDON UNDER A SHARP ATTACK BY NAZI RAIDERS

Heaviest Assault on the English Capital Since Raid of March 17

NINE PLANES DOWNED

By LEWIS HAWKINS
Associated Press Staff Writer

London, March 22 — (AP)—About 100 German warplanes struck London in a short attack last night, causing casualties and damage in a scattering of districts. The heaviest assault upon the city since the fire raid of March 17.

Bombs also were dropped at scattered points in East Anglia and southeast England by the raiders, nine of which were shot down, a communique said.

The planes which attacked London swept in from the west from the northeast and southeast and were greeted by a thunderous barrage.

Bombs fell in many areas but the heavy barrage apparently forced many of the attackers to jettison their bombs haphazardly in the London area, but many never-theless fell in central region.

Rescue workers still were digging for victims of the raid in bombed homes at midday. It was believed, however, the casualties list would be nearly as heavy as in some of the February raids.

The Nazis dropped a pathfinder technique, the first planes over the city dropping parachute flares to light up the target. The bulk of the bombs apparently were incendiaries but high explosives also were unloaded.

One large apartment house was set ablaze from hits by incendiaries. A number of people were killed when a crowded vehicle was hit.

The barrage continued at its peak for only a half-hour before gradually subsiding.

BORDER OF INDIA CROSSED BY JAPS IN TWO PLACES

Enemy Penetrates Into Manipur State But Forces Consist Only Of Raid Patrols

MOVE TOWARD AKYAB

By CHARLES GRUMICH
Associated Press Staff Writer

New Delhi, March 22 — (AP) — Japanese troops striking out in a major offensive have penetrated into India, it was officially announced today, crossing into the Indian State of Manipur "at one or two places" from Northern Burma.

Simultaneously, they extended a "raiding column," crossed the Chindwin River separate and significant advanced practically unopposed, the jungle cloaking their operations.

For their drive against rich India-Assam province the same general all roots over which Gen. Sir Harold Alexander withdrew the same general in 1942 when the enemy overran Burma. Manipur is bordered by Assam and Burma.

"At some points" the Japanese "are in contact with our advanced patrols," said the Southeast Asia Command communique.

Combine Southward Drive

On the north Burma front, Admiral Lord Louis Mountbatten's headquarters said, the Chinese Ninth Division "pressed its drive southward from the Hukawng Valley to the Mogaung-Kamaing Valley, and forward elements are fighting along the road south of Kamaing and on the pass over Jambu Bum."

The Chin Hills area, the only other sector of the Manipur border action, some Allied troops have been ordered north to "deal with Japanese outflanking movements north of Tiddim," the Allied air fleets struck at Japanese positions and communications in the Chindwin, Chin Hills, Arakan and Kaladan areas, and heavy bombers struck from Manchuria and Moulmein in central and southern Burma, all without loss.

Today's Allied communique said Lord Louis Mountbatten's headquarters declared Allied troops had withstood a comparatively heavy Japanese attack in the Maungdaw-Buthidaung area, in the southern end of the Burmese front, where British and Indian troops have been counter-attacking slowly down along the coast toward Akyab since January.

In another engagement in this sector, headquarters said, Allied troops captured a hill feature south of Buthidaung.

This was the first Allied acknowledgement of Japanese penetration of India. The Berlin radio in May, 1942, broadcast Tokyo broadcasts claims of the frontier, quoting Tokyo dispatches, that Japanese troops had been directly from Japanese sources.

Canadian Leads Planes From Aircraft Carrier in Defence of Convoy

By ALAN RANDAL
(Canadian Press Staff Writer)

London, March 22 — (CP Cable) — Admiralty said: "Naval aircraft operating from the escort carrier HMS Activity, commanded by Captain R. Dalrymple-Hamilton, destroyed a valuable Atlantic convoy from a German long-range enemy aircraft shortly after sunrise.

That's about all one expects from the close-mouthed Admiralty, but the story is not complete. For instance that this was the first time a fighter aircraft, with pilot, took off and landed on an aircraft carrier under attack; that although no tough a job that they called for volunteers; that the Canadian was the flight of planes.

He's Lt.-Cmdr. Digby Scott Tyrwhitt-Drake, Royal Canadian leader from Ottawa. And in London, on leave, he wasn't too keen on adding anything to the Admiralty's statement.

He had three other planes with him for the interception job, one piloted by Lieut. Harry Wilson of Orillia, Ont., and the other two Britishers.

The flight had been out on a routine patrol that morning, had sighted an unidentified aircraft, chased it, found it was an enemy and reported back they hadn't been able to down it. Flying had finished for the day when they got their next call, a request over the ship's "PA" system that Tyrwhitt-Drake and his enemy formation reported approaching the convoy.

Soon after, another flight left the ground. Seven enemy planes started the attack.

Cosh attacked the leader, had to break off as the attack when the ship's guns opened up on them, but could see another enemy aircraft flaming as it fell into the sea. Another crash into the sea.

Meanwhile other planes was shot down. For half an hour the aircraft carrier's planes flew above the convoy keeping the bombers away. All the bombs dropped fell wide of the important merchant ships and in the darkness the planes were ordered back to the carrier.

That was the end of the action. The communique said: "The convoy was undamaged and all our aircraft landed safely back on H.M.S. Pursuer."

One other Canadian had a hand in the engagement, Lieut. Jack Osborne of Toronto, who was fighter direction officer aboard ship, who directs the planes from the carrier while they are in the air.

Cernauti-Baltsy Trunk Rail Line Cut in Advance

49 Villages Retaken After German And Rumanian Resistance Battered Down

MOVE TOWARD LWOW

London, March 22 — (CP) — The Russian advance into pre-war Rumania brought Red army forces today within 30 miles of the Pruth river from which the German launched their 1941 invasion.

Sweeping across the Dniester river into Bessarabia on a 50-mile front, they captured the Cernauti-Balty trunk railway yesterday and seized through 49 villages as they battered down German and Rumanian resistance on the approaches to Prut.

Moscow's communique last night announced capture of Soroki, 25 miles south of Mogilev-Podolski and 25 miles northeast of Cernauti, west-bank Dniester town which the Russians captured Sunday. The railway presumably was cut in the Drokiya area.

Soroki was captured was Kotovy, five miles southeast of Drokiya, on the Prut. The Russians were within 30 miles of the German stronghold of Cernauti, eastern Russia, the Skobodovye-Baltsy line. The Red army forces also were only 46 miles from the major escape road, the Odessa-Tiraspol line.

The Russian strike southward from the Rukavng Valley to the Mogaung-Kamaing Valley, and forward elements are "fighting along the road south of Kamaing and on the pass over Jambu Bum."

The Chin Hills area, the only other sector of the Manipur border action, some Allied troops have been ordered north to "deal with Japanese outflanking movements north of Tiddim," the Allied air fleets struck at Japanese positions and communications in the Chindwin, Chin Hills, Arakan and Kaladan areas, and heavy bombers struck from Manchuria and Moulmein in central and southern Burma, all without loss.

"These new attacks are likely to be launched with greater weight and intensity than anything so far. The war situation is truly grave."

Premier Tojo declared that ships are as important as the fighting front and added:

"Final victory can be won only if our strategic measures are put into effect ruthlessly as if, at the same time, all the material and spiritual strength of the nation is summoned up for the war effort."

Renew Consultation On Application Atlantic Charter

London, March 22 — (CP)—Prime Minister Churchill told the House of Commons today there would be renewed consultation between the principal Allies" on the application of the Atlantic charter under the changing phases of the war.

Mr. Churchill did not elaborate but said: "Many questions arise which take the form of a new meeting of the Allied War Council" as has been rumored.

His reference to the Atlantic Charter on which Mr. Churchill only last week refused to schedule an open debate in Commons, came when Daniel Lipson, Independent, Labor, asked the following statement "In view of the double which existed as to what territories the principles of the Atlantic Charter apply to."

"It is evident that as the changing phases of the war succeed one another, some further clarifications of the Atlantic Charter may become necessary."

Mr. Churchill said the next meeting of representatives of the Post-War Planning in Tabernacle Unitarian Church on Wednesday, March 22 is postponed until further notice.

Volume of Water In Moira River Unusually Low

The complete absence of high water in the Moira river this season is the reason ice has not appeared in the river at this time, according to watchers who annually anticipate the river breaking at this time of year. Clearing of the river for this year is later than the past season when the entire channel was clear to the bay on the 19th of March.

"It's the lowest that I've seen the river at this time of year in many seasons," commented one. From Stirling Intermediate School after-noon. "It's unlikely there will be a flood this year," Valance said. A depth of snow and the lack of heavy spring rains was given as the reason why the river is low in the river.

Despite the absence of high water, however, Old Man Weather is doing what he can to speed the clearing of the river of ice. From the Cafedition dam is now clear of ice to a point even with Boyce's garage, while from the lower viaduct bridge to the bay, except for the footbridge the ice has broken into large cakes. These cakes have now taken on a emphasizing the low water level of the river.

South of the lower railroad bridge the river ice is still intact with the exception of a few shreds along the east bank. Here over the deeper channel the ice is broken and the slush filled current is visible.

F.O. D. Goodwin, Maynooth, Took Part In Gallant, Aerial Defence of Malta

Bancroft — (Special) — Flying Officer Donald Goodwin, son of Mr. and Mrs. Frank Goodwin of Maynooth, Ontario, arrived home on Tuesday on furlough. Mr. Goodwin enlisted in the R.C.A.F. on December 1st, 1941, and after overseas November 20th, 1944. He trained in England for about one year at which time he received his commission. After operational duties outside Britain which took him to the Mediterranean where he was stationed at Malta, October 20th, 1942. Donald spent practically seven months on the island of Malta although he did not take part in the actual invasion of Sicily he did take part in the reinforcement period prior to the invasion. Donald said in Tuesday's Ontario Reeves, were two boys picked from a squadron to fly Spitfire aircraft to the planes and Donald's reply when asked his opinion of the fighter, "It's a Swell Kite."

Two of the main hardships which confronted the airmen during the stay on the island was the lack of amusement and the scarcity of food. Apart from the odd stabbing affair, Mr. Goodwin's experience he says a flier's life is a wonderful.

F.O. Goodwin had one night operational training in England and another while at Malta. At the latter place he was forced to abandon three aircraft while on operational duty when the motors of his planes cut out. On one occasion he was unable to separate his life raft from his parachute and finally had to cut the whole paraphernalia from himself and depended on his "Mae West" for a period of three hours before being picked up. There were some time after that convalescing in a hospital recovering from the exposure.

The Social Classes

Although the inhabitants of the small island of Malta carry on their every-day life in a more efficient than that of Canada, he says, they are a happy people. Quite a percentage of the people operate farms in the fertile soil is very small. The people seem to be divided into two classes, namely rich and poor, rich, this fact is quite noticeable.

He left England for home and although his parents were aware of his homecoming, they do not know future they got quite a surprise when Flying Officer Goodwin motored in home from Belleville with some Belleville friends. Donald had a 21 days' leave and was for during his absence overseas his father, Donald Goodwin, Sr., retired from the Canadian National Railways after 45 years service, many years as agent at Maynooth station. Mr. Goodwin retired in February and is living in the renovated home in Maynooth village.

Prior to Donald enlisting he spent four years attending the Belleville Collegiate during the years 1936-40.

The funeral of Charles J. Henderson, who died suddenly at Lime Lake, on Monday, March 6th, took place on Wednesday, March 8th, to the United Church at Lime Lake where service was conducted by the Rev. A. W. Sexton of Tamworth.

Interment took place in the family plot in Lime Lake Cemetery. The floral tributes were from Mrs. Bordon Sexsmith, James Whiteman, Norman Henderson, Mr. and Mrs. Leland Ford, Donald Dennison and Corporal John Simpson, all of whom are nephews of the deceased.

The late Mr. Henderson was born forty-seven years ago on the farm at Lime Lake where he lived all his life, with the exception of two years during which he resided in Toronto. He was married to a son of the late Mr. and Mrs. John Henderson and was one of a family of eight children of which only four are now living. In addition to a number of the United Church at Lime Lake and in the community he was highly esteemed. His sudden death was a great shock to the whole district and to many friends his passing has brought deep regret.

Surviving him are his wife, who prior to her marriage was Miss Ada Bonnell, Toronto, and two daughters, Helen and Muriel, and one son, Harold, who is serving at home; four sisters, Mrs. Hugh McCormick, Los Angeles, California; Mrs. Herbert Ferguson, Marysville; Mrs. Annie Ferguson, Trenton, and Mrs. Wilbert Reeves of Belleville. A sister, Mrs. W. J. Gilmour, died only a few years ago, a brother, William A. Ferguson, Picton, and the Smith Great Way and another brother, John Wesley Henderson, died some years ago.

More Names Wanted For City Honor Roll

Large Number of Relatives and Friends of Those in Armed Services Have Not Responded to Request to Furnish Names

Several months ago an appeal (or had served with any of the three active services since the outbreak of war) made through the pages of The Ontario Intelligencer for the names of every man and woman from the city of Belleville who was serving, names. This was an earnest endeavor on the part of the city to compile a Roll of Honor on which the name of each man and woman, member of the services would be inscribed and recorded for posterity. Four months have elapsed since this work was started and only slightly over five hundred names have been recorded, the list names published in this paper.

Every possible channel of information has been approached and exhausted, until, if Belleville is to have a complete record of those men and women who have gone from their homes in the city to serve with the armed forces, each family, each individual, each friend of any serviceman or woman must comply with this painfully exposed and submit the names for this record. Other cities both larger and smaller than Belleville, have successfully compiled and maintained an Honor Roll, made up by either the municipality or by some organization which has undertaken the task but Belleville still remains without an adequate form of recognition of these men and women. There can be no pressure brought to bear upon those who have neglected to send in the names of their sons, daughters, husbands, friends or relatives; there really should be no need for pressure to be exerted. This is a duty the city owes willingly accepted, the full support of each individual in the city is necessary to make it successful.

If there is, and there are hundreds, any name not appearing on the Honor Roll published in this issue of the paper, kindly fill in the accompanying form and mail it to the City Hall. Additional forms are available at The Intelligencer Business Office, Bill Cook's Cigar Store, the City Hall or Lattimer's Drug Store. Complete co-operation will be appreciated.

Closing of No. 5 I.T.S.

What will the closing of No. 5 Initial Training School at Belleville, which was announced recently to take place next summer, mean to the city and district? Does the moving away of these several hundreds of airmen portend the opinion on the part of the Government that the war will be successfully waged by the present strength of trained pilots and other air crew? Hon. C. G. Power, Minister of National Defence for Air, made it clear following the announcement that it was the intention of the Government to close 28 air training establishments, that these closings will not mean the curtailment of the Commonwealth Air Training Plan, but that there will be more concentration instead of so many scattered stations.

As yet no one can forecast the end of the war in the matter of dates, although there is absolutely no doubt that the war will be won by the Allied Nations. However, at the present moment, how will this movement of forces from concentration around the city affect Belleville? Will it mean a noticeable falling off of business among the merchants of the city? Will the housing situation feel a relief of the pressure from which families have placed upon it? It is hardly likely that either will undergo a visible change.

The servicemen stationed at No. 5 Initial Training School are, as a rule, stationed there for a matter of a few weeks only. During this time they are kept occupied with rather intensive studies and find very little time or freedom to devote to any form of amusement in the city, or to accumulate articles of personal nature purchased locally. Only a very small percentage of these airmen are married and therefore are not posted to this station for only a short period, many of them who are married do not bring their families with them to Belleville. Therefore there is not likely to be any great relief felt in the housing situation, while while the city is faced, and has been faced with for the past three years or more.

There will be much regret at the closing of the Initial Training School, for it has done something to develop the district and to focus attention on air training activity here. When the time comes, Belleville will have an opportunity to make an appraisal of what the air training school has benefited the community. This movement is, in a small way, a hint of certain repercussions that are bound to come with the end of the war; but such readjustments will be the signal for the beginning of a period of major readjustment, with Belleville but one of many municipalities to feel the difference which will be felt when the great demobilization plan goes into force.

Gas Must be Conserved

Commenting on the existing gasoline supply situation and the steps which are being taken to ensure maximum observance of the Oil Controller's regulations, C. Gordon MacOdrum, regional Enforcement Counsel, Wartime Prices and Trade Board, points out that prosecutions for violations of those regulations, however technical some of them may seem, are thoroughly justifiable in the light of current conditions. They are also required, he says, to bring home to consumers the urgent necessity of every possible gallon of motor fuel being conserved so that stocks may remain available for essential uses, especially those overseas.

We must always bear in mind that many thousands of gallons of gasoline are already being consumed every day in military operations overseas and that the fighting forces are having heavily on this continent for their supplies. With great and vital offensive operations in prospect, a much larger demand for motor fuel is to be anticipated for perhaps months to come, and again it will be North America that will have to supply a good part of it.

Obviously, civilian users in Canada cannot be allowed, under such circumstances, to overlook the legal ration allowances granted them nor to perpetrate abuses of the regulations which will have that effect. If this was permitted, it would soon through the whole gasoline rationing into chaos. Allowing consumers to make use of loose coupons in purchasing gasoline or consenting to other infractions of the regulations is unthinkable if we are to play fair with the men overseas and with all the thousands of motorists throughout Canada who are loyally and conscientiously abiding by the rationing rules.

D-Day in the Garden

(Christian Science Monitor)

Victory gardeners of '44 will be no rookies on the soil. They're seasoned troops with "battle" experience—veterans of '43.

They approach this summer's campaign with confidence and thought of the proper strategy for a good harvest. They're no longer novices to be beguiled by vivid seed catalogues and alluring advertisements into planting everything but the family tree in a two-by-four plot with sour soil.

In other words, the land troops are battle-wise today and ready for action, for the D-day of spring when they will tackle their big objective—22,000,000 victory gardens for 1944! An objective as important and in its way as an atoll in the Pacific, a war plant in Europe, or Hill 660 in the jungle of New Britain.

It's the kind of fighting that doesn't rate a medal—they haven't given the Purple Heart for blisters yet. It entitles the participant to no decoration or service stripe. He gets no mustering-out pay, and he won't be the town hero when the war is over.

But he'll be in there digging just the same and something tells us that the approaching battle for food will not be lost.

Swallows On Time Again

The swallows who come back to Capistrano on March 19 each year showed up early—right on schedule.

Arriving in small groups, the birds immediately began searching old barns, trees, and nooks for nesting sites and soon were gathering mud and twigs.

According to custom, the swallows will rear two coveys of young before starting for their winter haunts. Their punctual return terminated a lapse of two years when they were late in arriving.

How Much Is a Billion?

(From "Liberty" Magazine)

In these days we let the word "billion" roll glibly off our tongues as easily as if it were a thousand. We know that it's a lot of money, but how many people have any actual conception of the amount?

Compare it to minutes, of which there are 1,440 a day, and it will mean how many years equal a billion minutes. Answers will generally range from 10 to 100 years, with only a few a little higher.

Actually, figuring 365 days to the year, the answer is approximately 1,902 years. Since the birth of Christ, only a little more than 1,021,100,000 minutes have passed.

A Bonnie Fighter

(Glasgow Herald)

Time will tell what proportion of enemy aircraft can be clawed down before the land forces head for Europe. It need not be doubted, nevertheless, that when the battle is joined air supremacy will be guaranteed. Events proclaim it. And the Flying Fortress emerges as a weapon with a double purpose. Unlike the big night bombers of the R.A.F., which depend chiefly on darkness and the superlative skill of crews and commanders for their protection, the day bombers carry a tremendous armament. A formation of 250 Fortresses mounts 3,000 guns. Add to that the destructive power of a fighter escort, and the confidence with which they claim 100 victims is not difficult to understand.

A SOLDIER TALKS

You won't know what it means to be
American, safe and free
Until, day after day, you've stood
In mud and slime and human blood;
Have eaten food from tins, and then
Gone back to sweat in filth again;
Had insects on your body crawl;
Washed in a pail, if washed at all;
Trudged in the rain and slept in mire,
Lived under shell and rifle fire,
And dreamed and wakened to the day
When you could get back home to stay.

You'll never know how good they are:
The radio, the motor car,
The morning bath, the mother's meals,
The dog that followed at your heels;
The friends, the dances and the shows,
Lawnmower and the garden hose,
Until from them you've been estranged
And all you've had by war is changed.
They you'll exist—not live—I say,
Solely for that one glorious day.
That longed for, hoped for moment when
You'll see your native land again.

Practically all the furs which were stolen from Mr. George T. Woodley's store last January have been recovered and arrived back at the Woodley store today. All the fur coats were recovered, but a few skins only still be missing. A checkup of these is being made today. Detective-Sergeant John M. Trudeau, who has made a name for himself and the Belleville Police Department by his tireless and unrelenting pursuit of the $15,000 worth of stolen goods during the past two months, will return home from Montreal in a few days. Mr. Woodley is happy to have the goods back and he speaks highly of the work done by Sergeant-Detective Trudeau.

The members of the teaching staff of the King George school entertained the teachers from the other city schools at the home of Mr. and Mrs. D. L. Fleming, John Street. Contests, games and music went to make up a very pleasant evening.

U.S. Troops in Britain Don't Fit in Too Well

By VERNON M. KIFF

(Special to the Ottawa Journal and the Ontario Intelligencer)

LONDON, March.—I fear I have been guilty, as have many others, of having written about the visit to Britain which I made with a party of Canadian editors in 1941, when we crossed the Polish border; the place of Canada in the British Empire, the state of the Empire, or guessed at the attitude of the United States toward later of the United Kingdom. The fact is, of course, that I wrote about what I saw, which was a picture of Britain at war, and in that picture it seemed to me more important to see what it was like when a supposedly democratic people went off for Germany than to delve into the mysteries of European diplomacy; more useful to ride a three-hour bout out of Dover harbor than to speculate on a possible federation of the nations.

However, it may be worthwhile at this stage to offer a few general observations, on the basis of many conversations with people and official persons, for what they are worth.

If Mr. Churchill were to die during the war, or for any reason should have to give up his post, Mr. Eden would succeed him immediately as prime minister and would be accepted by the British people, for the duration. The post-war political situation is confused—as it is in Canada—but there seems a widespread feeling that Mr. Churchill, an inspired war leader, should have the task of peace to someone else. And the next prime minister, if not Mr. Eden, will be Clement Attlee, leader of the Labor party. Mr. Attlee has confirmed their belief in early action on the continent. Britain is enormously is stocked with trained fighting men and with armament far beyond the needs of defence, even if an invasion of the islands by land to be successful must be incredibly, and it is held that these powerful forces can have but one useful destination.

And certainly we found no inclination to dodge a full, grim war war against Japan—we were shown impressive items of preparation for it. Britain has a long score to settle with the Japanese, will not forget Hong Kong, Singapore and Malaya. The war with Germany is the public's first job, but the feeling is that Japan in due course will feel the full and terrific weight of British power.

Britain has in Canada about the probable date of the war's end. Mr. Churchill has not announced it, the people to believe the war will end this year and there will not be too much disappointment if the struggle with Germany runs into 1944. As for the war with Japan, a new Zealand Journalist says it will need two or six years for the victory and declares North America does not begin to understand the strength of the position and the difficulties in the way before the Allies reach within the streets of Tokyo.

As for the "Second Front", the question of its coming is easy, for no reason to suppose that it has been postponed indefinitely, although nobody told us the date—that must be the secret of a very small group of men in the United Kingdom. That date may well depend upon many factors, such as the state of the campaign in Russia and the days of bombing weather the next few weeks.

There are a few sceptics, but most people expect the offensive this Spring. They see no other logical development to the combination of Britain, of enormous military power, and recent events in the matter of the Eire frontier seem to have confirmed their belief in early action on the continent. Britain is enormously is stocked with trained fighting men and with armament far beyond the needs of defence, even if an invasion of the islands by land to be successful must be incredibly, and it is held that these powerful forces can have but one useful destination.

And certainly we found no inclination to dodge a full, grim war war against Japan—we were shown impressive items of preparation for it. Britain has a long score to settle with the Japanese, will not forget Hong Kong, Singapore and Malaya. HEWERS OF WOOD

There is a popular notion that the Bible says all the descendants of Ham were condemned to be hewers of wood and drawers of water.

This interpretation is a gross distortion of the Biblical passage which is, in brief, as follows:

In Joshua 9 it is related that the Gibeonites of Canaan, hearing that the Israelites had done to Jericho and Ai, sent ambassadors to their number in old clothes and sent them as ambassadors to Joshua. They claimed with impudence that they were from a far country and had come with a view to entrance to make a league with the victorious Israelites.

Joshua, deceived by the ruse, made peace with the Gibeonites, but when he let them live and had the league confirmed with an oath he found the princes of the congregation.

Three days later, however, the Israelites learned that the Gibeonites were their neighbors and that their rulers had been the victims of a ruse.

When the Israelites occupied Gibeon and its allied cities they did not smite the inhabitants, but let them live because of the oath.

Nevertheless the people murmured against the princes of Israel for having been deceived in the wily Gibeonites. The princes replied that they could not touch the Gibeonites because of the oath they had sworn but promised the Israelites that these people should be drawers of water. »

Eruption of Mount Vesuvius Presents An Impressive Sight

By EDWARD KENNEDY

Associated Press Staff Writer

On the Slopes of Mount Vesuvius, March 22 — (AP) — The great, hissing stream of lava flowing down Mount Vesuvius moves pulse-like, each thrust of the huge molten mass apparently coming with each new belch from the interior of the volcano.

But even between these surges, the torrid glowy mass pushes slowly ahead, destroying everything in its path.

I have never seen any man-made device of destruction in a war area so impressively terrifying as this lava, and the panic has seized many Italians already sorely tried by the war.

The slowness of this powerful destructive river makes it all the more terrible.

Take the way it destroyed a bridge on the finger-like, mile stream of lava which came first ripped the span from its moorings, then thick-er streams swept upon it, first crushing it to bits and then covering it. Then we stood in the street of San Sebastiano, who saw the mass piling up behind a four-storied building of stone and stucco. Black streams poured around both sides of the structure, and we could see cracks appear in the plaster on the rear of it increased.

Then the whole building, unable to withstand the pressure, came down before our eyes.

Over Vesuvius hangs a blackish pall, and dust raised by the lava overhangs the highway area like a grey cloud. But up close the lava gives forth red, blue and violet flames, and green and yellow smoke.

State Plans to Use Statement Given By W. Lonergan

New York, March 22 — (AP) — A flat statement that Wayne Lonergan's purported confession will be introduced as evidence at his murder trial was made by the prosecution today in the selection of a jury progressed.

Defense Attorney Edward V. Broderick asked that the prosecution state whether it intended to offer as a stenographic report of the alleged confession."

Assistant District Attorney Jacob Grumet replied: "We do not intend to." Judge James O. Wallace. "That is regular procedure, is that so, Mr. Grumet?"

"That's right," answered the prosecutor.

Lonergan related in the alleged confession, according to the police version, that he killed his heiress wife Patricia, in their fashionable apartment Dec. 24 because she told him he never could be a father, and to see his 22-months-old son again.

The statement, which the defendant was not signed.

Lonergan, R.C.A.F. aircraft-man, was taken into custody in Toronto the day after the slaying.

HOUSING SITUATION CRITICAL

Belleville is facing a crisis—that's why Dennison, manager of the Belleville Housing Registry, said today the housing situation is serious here and she has nearly 1,200 names on her list of families looking for homes. Miss Dennison said "servicemen's wives are the hardest hit" in this connection. It was unofficially estimated that between 12,000 and 15,000 families face May 1 with notices to vacate the premises they now occupy.

RESULTS NOT AVAILABLE

Quints' Estate Now $1,000,000

Toronto, March 22 (CP) — Attorney General Blackwell said that the Ontario government bill which would make Ollie Dionne legal guardian of his quintuplet daughters, would give the mother the full control of their capital and income.

The bill requires the Quints capital and income to be paid into court and is controlled by the courts, he said in an interview.

It was estimated that the Quints estate now amounts to nearly $1,000,000. It was also stated that when each of the five famous Callander girls is 21 she will receive a one-fifth share.

Steady Stream of War Goods for Allied Nations Flows from Ordnance Depot at Longue Pointe, Que.

by LIEUT. KENNETH KELLEHER
Canadian Army Public Relations

LONGUE POINTE, Que., March 22—The simple name "Longue Pointe" appears on a large packing case under the steadi brush of a girl clerk.

Nearby a C.W.A.C. private paints "PLEASE DO NOT DROP" and down the line a youth marks "CHINA" on a case that will contain anything from optical instruments to razor blades for the air force.

The grim romance of wartime commerce blends with the bustle of shipping in the warehouse town of steel and concrete known as Longue Pointe Ordnance Depot, Canada's largest Overseas distributing point for technical war stores and spare parts for weapons and machines. It is also one of the largest of its kind in America.

Covers 218 Acres

L.P.O.D., as it is familiarly known is a bustling area of 218 acres on the outskirts of Montreal—an area that was nothing but farmland and marsh two years ago but which today has 32 miles of railway sidings and miles of roads.

To the tune of radio music, tons of Battle Praxs are baled and shipped at L.P.O.D.

Powerful crane pick up Bren Valentines or Ram cruisers. Grisly tanks from railway flat cars inside one building. After they are given a final check and prepared for an ocean trip they are placed in another line that leads toward the railhead.

The modern stream of war supplies pours into the Longue Pointe funnel from factories all over the continent. Needs of fighting men from the frozen peaks of Sicania to the jungles of the Far East are answered and routed out quickly at the frontier battle zones.

Longue Pointe Ordnance Depot is an Army Technical Storehouse out in city block proportions that Canada never knew in the First Great War. It is added recognition of Canada's vital place in the supply strategy of the United Nations.

Lend-Lease and "Mutual Aid" and such strange-sounding terms as "U.N.R.R.A." are bywords among the more than 4,000 employees, military and civilian, who populate L.P.O.D.

U.P.S. means "Urgent Fighting Stores." And one can hardly escape a thrill or perhaps a bit of concern as his watches those black letters go on a shipment—plus a red, a green, or other colored circle that is a code to speed the stores to the proper destination. Perhaps your player's father, or his brother may be in there. Never an open can of those U.P.S. boxes from Longue Pointe.

"Security-Minded" Depot

Longue Pointe is one of the least publicized centres in Canada. But it is one of the most "security-minded" places in the country.

L.P.O.D. began not as a "dream" as some glamorized unit of industry but simply existed as a very definite plan. However that plan mushroomed and developed until today it is something far bigger and more important than the originators ever helped.

32 Miles of Railway

Besides 32 miles of railway tracking, it has 15 floors of barber chairs.

It operates three sub depots within a radius of 25 miles.

The nerve centre of this still growing organization is a six storey modernistic looking administration building that holds hundreds of clerical workers in its many rooms, in size and activity with that of the headquarters of Canada's National Defence Headquarters, Ottawa.

The boxed rows of stores and parts for weapons or vehicles reach high in the air and stretch through the buildings. The layman might call it a maze, until after a few minutes' walk he sees how well-ordered is the "mess."

And cleanliness! A loose scrap of paper on the floor is a rarity. Likewise, one could eat from almost any floor.

This war shipping "machine" of a size that Canada never saw before burns along in highgear—the highest output-supervision in Ottawa of the Master General of Ordnance.

L.P.O.D. has reached the stage where it, along vast quantities of military stores, ranging from tiny optical parts to medium tanks on behalf of real government-to-govt. of them are United Nations. A few are still neutral.

Only about 20 percent of the "handle" at Longue Pointe is for the Canadian Government.

Practically all Motor Transport shipping business is done for the British Government which, in turn, allocates the vehicles to Russia, China and other countries.

A class with a "department store" touch is the clothing Group where L.P.O.D. has controlled and baled, and sent out by the carlo- The baling means a great saving in shipping space. Their civilian girls W.A.C. personnel : overalls, soldiers and civilian : no work side by side. It is a melting pot of home front war effort, and splendid example of harmony and co-operation.

Work to Radio Music

Floating through the silky reaches of the Clothing Group section is radio music. Durable military radios are installed in most of the buildings, and L.P.O.D. authorities agree with the modern conception that music can aid the efficiency of the worker.

The Tank Group and the Gun Group (field guns and anti-aircraft guns) are in a building all their own that looks like a slice of a big war production plant rather than a depot." Railway tracks run through the structure, and cranes swing the "parcels" around as if they were toys. Soldiers are busy preparing the tanks for long sea trips.

Transport is an important branch of so large a depot. Longue Pointe Ordnance has more than 30 vehicles on its roster, from jeeps to big Trucks. Furthermore, Depot has over a couple of snow blower machines. The latter plough out a road, with an upright pipe blower spreading the snow along the side. They resemble threshing machines.

In so large a town, community activities also flourish, as one necessity. "Recreation Hours" takes care of get-togethers, dances, movies, lectures, and formal and informal dinners. It is equipped with a kitchen, a comfortable lounge, games and a writing room. The recreational program is under the direction of Y.M.C.A. Supervisor.

At noon hour, professional entertainers and ensemble acts often visit the Depot.

L.P.O.D. is sports-minded. There are boxing, and basketball and hockey teams. The Depot has a rink which has been judged the best in military district No. 4 and it also boasts a fine orchestra.

"The Longue Pointer, a monthly is one of the best service papers in Canada and has a circulation of more than 3,000.

Military personnel, including the C.W.A.C., get under strict military discipline. At 8.35 a.m. daily there is full battalion parade, complete with all the trimmings—drummer, band and March Past. There is inspection for the men's boots and buttons, and condition of clothing.

Punishment for the slacker or who is often "Fire Plugut" duty, which no one likes. Here is another company competition and the splendid esprit de corps at Longue Pointe makes for few infractions of the Army rules.

Health Measure Read Second Time In Legislature

C.C.F. Speakers Criticize Bill Saying Principles "Undemocratic"

NO AMENDMENTS

Toronto March 26 — (CP)—The longest debate continued in the Ontario Legislature today on the Progressive Conservative government's measure to establish a system of municipal health plans, one of the cornerstones bills of the session, probably will reach committee stage.

The House will sit in the afternoon and reconvene again at night. Fri. 1a. L. E. Wismer (CCF—Toronto Riverdale) will continue his address as budget critic for the opposition he began yesterday. Several more speakers also are likely to be heard.

In its third day of debate on the bill, the government's municipal health measure was given second reading after the CCF. group members criticized its principles as "undemocratic" and Mayor Leslie Frost and Premier Drew that such criticism was based on misunderstanding.

C. B. Jolliffe, C.C.F. Leader, told the government "We are prepared to co-operate in making this bill as workable if possible, but I also submit that some of the broader comments we've made on the undemocratic procedure should be given consideration by the government."

Premier Drew said amendments to the bill would be considered, but not amendments dealing with the principle of the measure.

Chas. Tee Mosh Power Given

Speaker Earl Rowe (PC—Dufferin) inclined C. H. Millard (CCF—York West), Agnes Macphail (CCF—York East), C. H. Mitchell, (CCF—York South), G. H. Mitchell, (CCF—Wentworth), and H. E. Wismer (CCF—Wentland). Their main criticism was that too much power would be given to the Provincial Board which will administer the Act and not enough to the municipalities which would pay the costs.

Speaking in support of the Bill were Dr. Hobbs Taylor (PC—Sherwood), Provincial Treasurer Frost and Premier Drew. Mr. Frost said the government did not intend to be dictatorial in setting up the Local Boards. He expressed belief the municipalities would be "reasonable if possible, but I also submit that some of the broader comments we've made on the undemocratic procedure should be given consideration by the government."

Premier Drew said amendments to the Bill would be considered, but not amendments dealing with the principle of the measure.

First Woman to Travel Length Of Alaska Highway Tells Of Experiences to Women's Club

For the second time in one session, Belleville Women's Club was favoured to the Belleville Women's Canadian Club when guest speaker Mrs. Gertrude Baskins, who again spoke to the members of that club on night in the Collegiate Auditorium. Just as stirring and interesting as her account of the "wonder of Alaska", so was her story of the Alaska Highway, which she related Tuesday night. Since her last appearance before the Canadian Mrs. W. H. Fiddle, Mrs. Baskins has been honored by being made a fellow of the Canadian Geographical Society and of her subject she speaks fluently and well. Many Canadians are agog over the Alaska Highway so Mrs. Baskins realized it is for the very purpose of letting the story from her own lips.

Not Sacred

In opening her story, Mrs. Baskins said, "I am the only woman so far, who has been allowed to make a trip through the length of the Alaska Highway". From the moment I heard about it, I was interested in it and my experiences on it were most unique and I hope to remain so, hence". On my speaking tour across Canada about the Women of Russia, I was asked by a reporting Regina by a reporter just what I had planned to do next. I replied quite nonchalantly, "I am going to do the Alaska Highway". Her interest was got to spread and it was brought up so often that I decided I'd go and do it. I wrote to Ottawa and Washington and called on the Canadian Ambassador. When he asked me why I wished to do the Highway", said Mrs. Baskins, "I replied that I was not interested in the construction or military statistics but wanted to know how the city people, who live there, were reacting to the pioneer way of living. I was granted a trip through the Yukon and U.S. Allowed to Come In.

"Up to Whitehorse", continued the guest speaker, "the road was divided into different construction companies, and the United States Army was allowed to come into the territory. Nevertheless, six months after the war, it has been decided, everything will go back to Canada, as a gift from the United States. When the army took over one had to have permission to go everywhere. I myself had certificates from both the United States and Canada. I found that for the 1,500 miles of the road the construction camps were Canadian. In them there were no women, many women and surprisingly the conditions of living were comfortable and pleasant. Each girl had a room to herself for the most part and all had showers.

As far as travelling was concerned, stated Mrs. Baskins, I had to go mostly by truck, and all I carried with me was a sleeping bag and typewriter, I was accompanied by officers of superior rank. Once past Dawson Creek, we had to have Military Traffic Control stations to be interviewed and so on every 100 miles or so. In this way, the military authorities know where everybody is on the road at all times. After the 600-mile trip", she said, "I had to stay in camps, where there were no women at all, and I was still 500 miles from White Horse. There were no more Canadian camps, and there, no more women. I had to come across Dawson Creek that an order was passed saying, that all women not residents on the road had to get out of the country. Even the service men's wives had to leave. Since I did not belong to any of these categories, I had to go with the trucks. And speaking of the trucks", said Mrs. Baskins, "they were really fine and the motto is to get through no matter what happens. Whether they had to travel in weather, which at times was severely cold, or not, the truck drivers and men were so cold that the tears from their eyes froze on their hands and on their cheeks.

Praises Road Workers

"I was fortunate with acclimation for those men when I saw the hardships which they had to endure in order to build that road", stated Mrs. Baskins. "When travelling with them, I was with a caravan of trucks numbering from seven to twelve. Each one is responsible for the truck in the driver and the public. It is a very responsible person and is capable of the care of truck drivers. Despite their outward appearance, I found, that some of the men working on the highway were very cultured. The dust on the road was terrible and very fine. When it had not rained, it swirls like a cloud behind the trucks. The road in places was rough and some even have inserted logs in the road to keep the truck and while one sleeps the other drives. Mrs. Baskins said, that they do not stop and that is the reason the road was built so close. From Dawson to White Horse, the road is set the space and each truck has to keep to the limit of thirty-five miles an hour but we certainly could not go that fast owing to the conditions which we had to undergo.

Made Three Fall Days

Without Sleep

"We rode three full nights and three full days without stopping," continued Mrs. Baskins. "When we reached a certain river, we found that there was no bridge as we were told there was. At White Horse we decided that I could not wait till the bridge was built till the winter when it would freeze over. So I went to a camp called Camp Where I procured two horses and a sleigh and rode. When I reached there again, I found that it was planned so I got over. Surprisingly, I found little evidence of the brutality of food on the Alaskan Highway. Although we were given C rations, I cooked rest well. There are 10,000 soldiers still in the territory and not quite 1,000 women. Between the months of April 1942 and 1943, and the lowest wage for anyone is one dollar per hour. Some men of the Army, Navy and Air Force,

Toronto Leafs Fool Experts By Taking First of Playoffs With Canadiens by 3-1 Count

Canadien Plays Broken Up Before They Could Start Clicking

CUPS PRESENTED

By HAROLD FREEMAN

Canadian Press Sport Writer

Montreal, March 22 — (CP)—Tim Daley trotted out his "secret weapon"—"penalty night," and it was so effective that Toronto Maple Leafs walked off with a 3-1 victory that gave them the first game of their semi-final Stanley cup series against Montreal Canadiens before 19,000 fans.

Daley said before the game that he was betting on goalie Paul Bibeault as his secret weapon. Bibeault, and a hard-working checking defence, that is. So he was, using up Canadien plays before they could click, spelled victory for the Leafs and a one-game edge to carry into Thursday night's resumption of the best-of-seven series.

Leafs played a cagey game, waiting for the breaks up front and getting them. They beat Bill Durnan twice in the first period and again in the second, before Canadiens could finally get the range on Bibeault for their only goal in the third.

Morris Fires First Goal

Elwin Morris rapped in the first goal of the night when he snapped up the puck from a face-off and whipped a knee-high shot past Durnan. He set up the play that netted Boothman 12 minutes later on a ganging play. Both goals came while Canadiens were a man short.

Jackie Hamilton made it 2-0 midway through the second period on a fine passing play by Babe Pratt.

Ray Getliffe went off early in the third, and Canadiens turned their manpower shortage to their own advantage on a clean breakaway, with Tex Blake taking Elmer Lach's pass-out to ride in on Bibeault all alone.

Canadiens were presented with the Prince of Wales Cup during the game for leading the league in the regular season, and Durnan got the Vezina Trophy as the league's top goalie.

MORTON COOPER NOW CLASSIFIED AS A HOLDOUT

St. Louis Pitcher Refuses Second Contract Sent to Him

BASEBALL ROUNDUP

By TED MEIER

(Associated Press Sport Writer)

New York, March 22. (AP)—Let's call it now—big Mort Cooper, whose 21 victories last year sparked St. Louis Cardinals to their second straight National Baseball League pennant, and who was the only Card hurler to beat the Yankees in the World Series, a holdout.

Sam Breadon, president of the Cards, disclosed last night Cooper had returned the contract he received him. Cooper's brother, catcher Walker, said he signed a contract a few days ago.

Pitcher Harry Gumbert of Detroit also joined the "I want more dough" ranks. He and Manager Steve O'Neill will play for $7,500, but not for the 8,000 the Tigers offered. Gumbert is looking for what he happier in Detroit traded him.

On the other side of the picture Jim Gallagher, vice president of Chicago Cubs, announced Bill Nicholson, hard-hitting outfielder, had signed along with Outfielder A. Pafko.

Other news from big league camps included:

NEW YORK YANKEES—Second Baseman George Stirnweiss and Atlantic City Camp for New York to see a specialist about his sinus trouble.

CLEVELAND INDIANS — Outfielder Cliff Mapes, promising potential rookie in camp, received his 1-A draft classification. Indians' General Manager Lou Boudreau, Pitcher Steve Gromek and Infielder Mickey Peters.

CINCINNATI REDS — Outfielder Max Marshall expects to pass his pre-induction physical exam.

ST. LOUIS BROWNIES—Don Gutteridge brought 15-year-old Teddy Aikman, of Beaumont, Kan., to camp with him and predicted he'll be a shining star of good outfielder in time.

BROOKLYN DODGERS — Scotsman Bob Chipman, up from Montreal, signed contract.

BARONS, BISONS HOLD ADVANTAGE IN THE PLAYOFFS

Cleveland Defeats Hershey Bears and Buffalo Topples Indianapolis

PLAY THURSDAY

(By The Canadian Press)

Cleveland and Buffalo held the advantage today in the semi-final eliminations in the American Hockey League playoffs with their series over Hershey and Indianapolis respectively.

The Cleveland Barons delighted a home crowd of 8,726 by blanking Hershey Bears 3-0 last night while at Buffalo the Bisons came from behind to beat the Indianapolis Capa 5-3 before 7,563.

Lloyd Storie, Cleveland's goalie, played a brilliant defensive game to help the Barons win. Whereas the Bears slammed nine goals past Storie the last time they played against him he turned all their shots aside. He was forced into action when Stella Barney registered Goals Paul Gauthier, was injured March 6.

Centre Tommy Burlington figured in both Cleveland goals. He scored the first in the initial period, aided by an unintentional stab of the puck by Peg O'Neil of the Bears. Carl Bartholome got the second on an assist from Burlington in the second period.

Indianapolis got away to a two-goal lead at Buffalo, but the Bisons rallied to deadlock it at 2-2 then win in the third period on Ed Kobussen's goal early in the third period. Buffalo added two more goals later in the period to sew it up.

Indianapolis plays again at Buffalo Thursday in the second of the best-of-seven game series while Cleveland travels to Hershey the same night.

Toronto, March 22 — (CP) — Alf Smith, captain of the famous old Ottawa Silver Seven hockey team, took in a senior city league game in Ottawa the other night and went away shaking his head over the difference some 40 years have made in the game. Smith, 76, is said to be arm players, with few exceptions, have forgotten how to stickhandle. "There no longer is such a thing as team-play the way they played in the old days," said Smith, who led the Silver Seven to three Stanley Cup wins from 1902 to 1905 and helped Kenora Thistles capture the silverware in 1907. "It seems every player now is out to make a star of himself."

Today a whole team jams itself inside the other team's defence and every player takes a crack at trying to score. In my day stickhandling and passing were the main essentials . . . today it is a lost art, with the exception of a few, notably Bill Cowley."

Smith wouldn't name his choice of the greatest player of all time because, he explained, it is impossible to compare men who play in different positions. But he didn't hesitate to name Georges Vezina as the greatest goalie of his time.

This Week's Fun:

Two western hockey fans were discussing the New Westminster-Edmonton Victoria Day series when one queried where the Lodestars got their name. His friend explained it was the name of the plane used by the airline sponsoring the team.

You can't prove that by me," piped fan No. 2, probably an Edmonton rooter. "It could be because they are loaded with hockey stars."

HAWKS WIN FIRST GAME ON DETROIT ICE IN 4 YEARS

Mosienko and Bentley Score Goals in Space of 44 Seconds

FINAL IS 2-1

Detroit, March 22. (CP)—Chicago Black Hawks today were more confidently today to their next encounter with Detroit Red Wings in the Stanley Cup semi-final hockey series, after downing the Red Wings 2-1 in the opener.

When the Hawks took Tuesday night's game, with Bill Mosienko scoring the winning goal, it marked the first time they had won on Detroit ice in four years.

The second game in the best-of-seven series will be played here tomorrow night, with the Red Wings determined to avenge last night's setback.

Chicago's last victory on Detroit ice was March 15, 1940. Since they had lost 17 games here and tied two.

The Black Hawks, however, whipped Detroit four times during the regular National Hockey League season this winter at Chicago.

A crowd of 10,887 saw the Red Wings outshoot the Hawks last night, then lost the lead and the game in 44 seconds of the third period as Bill Mosienko and then Bentley scored in quick succession.

Bentley, incidentally, was voted the regular season just ended with 72 points, ahead of Max Bentley and Smith in mid-ice and skated in to beat Connie Dion in the Detroit net at 7:56 of the third period.

Mosienko had scored the tieing counter at 7:12 and Bentley's shot after Dion had been pulled out of the Red Wings' net.

Indianapolis got away to a two-goal lead at Buffalo, but the Bisons rallied to deadlock it at 2-2 then win in the third period on Ed Kobussen's goal early in the third period. Buffalo added two more goals later in the period to sew it up.

Indianapolis plays again at Buffalo Thursday in the second of the best-of-seven game series while Cleveland travels to Hershey the same night.

Takes 7 Years To Reach Majors

Lafayette, Ind., March 22.—(AP) — It took pitcher Ed Klieman of Cleveland's newest pitching prize, seven years and the help of a baseball fan—to reach the major league.

Klieman's sudden jump into the big time is one of this season's strangest tales and he is quick to give full credit for his move into the majors to the success of his slow ball. A fan actually climbed down out of the stands and taught him pointers on throwing a sinker and Klieman's new-found ability to pitch to each perfection that last year he won 23 games for Baltimore, of the International League.

Cleveland called in the Norwood, Ohio, youth for a late-season try in '43, and in his big league debut he shut out the Boston Red Sox for nine innings, only to lose, 1-0, in the 10th inning.

Acquiesced

The film magnate wanted one of his stars to accept a reduction in salary, so he said to his lunch partner: "You tackle him, Paul. You're better equipped than what I am. You can give him a better line of talk than me."

Paul went off on his disagreeable job. When he returned the magnate asked, solicitously: "Well, how about it?"

"He acquiesced," said Paul.

"Did he? The dirty dog!"

(Signs of spring.)

President H. Chris Knott called a hurried meeting of the executives of the Belleville and District Softball Association to appoint delegates to the annual meeting of the O.A.S.A. at Guelph on Good Friday. The delegates named were: President Knott, Vice-President J. E. Sasnett, Ryan Eyre with alternates of Eddie Schricker, Clarence Gibson, Harold Hawkins and Earl Barnard. Secretary T. E. Schwab was instructed to forward the Association's affiliation fee to the governing body and reserve reservations for the local delegates.

The association also nominated Harry Rollins as district 1st Vice-President of the O.A.S.A., for the office of president, first and second vice-president offices and also to the O.A.S.A. executive. It is expected that President Harold Spooner will be given another term of office, however, at the annual meeting of the Belleville softball body which will be held here during the provincial conclave at Guelph.

(Far from Satisfied.)

Although Kingston has the Jock Harty Arena with an artificial ice plant and a large ice surface, the hockey interests in the Limestone City are far from satisfied with the accommodation available. Thus we find Bill Wahn, in telling of the burning of the original Arena 20 years ago, writing as follows: "Since the old rink was burned down hockey has existed on a hand-to-mouth basis and, although the Ontario championship teams followed in two decades, there was never enough financial reward to put the sport on a firm footing. Due to poor business management and financial aid from outside sources Kingston returned to senior ranks only a few years but until a new arena is to accommodate from 6 to 8 thousand people, hockey will always have to depend on charity here to survive. The original Jock Harty Arena cost about $20,000 according to a report of the fire, and there was $75,000 insurance, which was used to build the present concrete barn. The old rink had a convenient canteen, good dressing rooms and easy access to seats. The new one was built on a year after it must have been with no casual consideration of the plans, considering the seating accommodation, rest rooms and other expected conveniences of a modern arena."

(Remember when—)

Syl Apps, high-scoring Toronto Maple Leaf forward, was chosen by the Leafs as captain for the 1936-37 National Hockey League season seven years ago today in a poll conducted by the Canadian Press. The Calder trophy, offered by the late Frank Calder for the rookie of the season, was awarded the Paris, Ont., flash after he had starred in Canada's army. Gus Bodnar of the Leafs, was awarded the trophy this year.

(Game postponed.)

At the last minute T. E. Moffatt, secretary of the O.S.S.A. called from Tweed yesterday to postpone the St. Mike's at Tweed High School senior Interscholastic hockey final owing to the ice surface at the Tweed rink being covered with water. We can readily understand such conditions as the same situation prevailed at the Hume Arena last night.

However, after a 16 to 2 trouncing here Monday night surely the Tweed students have seen enough of Coach Jack Doran's St. Mike's self-"Irish" for one year at least.

(Change of site.)

There seems to be some misunderstanding as to the venue of tonight's Kiwanis charity wrestling show. The bouts are being held at the Belleville Armouries.

Going to the Toronto press Vic Holbrook, the California ring dynamo, is today considered the uncrowned heavyweight wrestling champion of the world. The Queensbury newsboys say Holbrook was "on the beetroot" before Referee Emile Poreca in Toronto last week when he lost to Bill Longson.

However, Holbrook could add another feather to his ring laurels by beating the villainous Karl "Krippler" Davis at the armouries tonight. Davis is one of promoter Tunney's more pugnacious grapplers and has never displayed his baleful wiles in Belleville before. With two good prelims, on the card the Kiwanis show should just about pack the armouries to the rafters tonight.

Surprise ! ! !

The old sport dope bucket was booted around at Montreal and Toronto last night when the Toronto Maple Leafs beat Les Canadiens 3-1 and the Chicago Black Hawks trounced Jack Adam's Detroit Red Wings 2-1 at their home grounds in the first game of the series. But it just goes to show what can happen in a short series. Incidentally and according to the latest account, the Maple Leafs checked the high-flying Canadiens right back into the ice next game at the end of a one stage of the game. The defeat must have been quite a surprise to the Montrealers, who hadn't seen their favorite football-Canadiens team lose at home all winter. After all that league record established by the Canadiens may never be equalled.

Horse Sense Bridge

LESSON NO. 234

By SAM GORDON
The Kibitzer

Nearly every deal in bridge offers some problem in play. The nut to crack may be a tough one. Or it may be something simple. But easy or hard, a real bridge player enjoys working it out.

Today's deal says we have something about this pair of hands:

SOUTH
♠A K 10 6 2
♥None
♣K Q 7 6 2

♠9 8 5
♥K J 10 7 6 4 3
♦A 8 7 2
♣A

After a few rounds of bidding, it is discovered that opponents have an ace and a king. That discovery, any desire to try for a grand slam. Compromise on a small slam is indicated.

You are the declarer in the south. The opening lead from west is a diamond. Spread the unseen cards in some reasonable division in the opponent hands. Now figure out the safest plan of play.

Study each suit separately to see what losers are possible. Then study ways and means of saving enough losers so that your contract can be made.

In diamonds, you see a possible loser in the second round of that suit. In the spade trump suit, it is quite probable that a trick will lose to the opponent queen.

The heart suit is no worry. Because you are void in that suit. The first four rounds of clubs are solid. The rest of the suit is established.

This leaves you with the problem of saving either a diamond or a trump trick. With an abundance of luck, you may even save both of these tricks.

The first trick is taken by your dummy ace. If you now take a finesse in trumps, what may happen. If west has the queen or jack of spades, you are sunk.

West will win that trick and lead a diamond. That wrecks your chances before you can say Jake Rubinstein. There is a much safer plan of play than that. Can you see it?

AT THE McCARTHY

"Louisiana Purchase" Abounding plentifully in gags, gals and melodies, "Louisiana Purchase," the Paramount technicolor film based on the smash hit Broadway comedy with music, arrives next at the McCarthy theatre, starring Bob Hope, Vera Zorina and Victor Moore.

Featuring the tunes by Irving Berlin which were standouts in the stage production, the new film entertainment was produced in Hollywood by the same Buddy De Sylva, who wrote the original story and produced the Broadway version.

The film version was directed by Irving Cummings, who has shown many times in the past his superior talents as a director of technicolor films and musicals.

When "Louisiana Purchase" was exhibiting its merry attractions on the Broadway stage and, later, leaving a trail of laughs and melodies in the wake of its road show itinerary, it was hailed for the fleshings' business who made frequent and striking appearances.

Hollywood is not to be outdone in this direction, and so it is a pleasure to report that the cast is graced by the Louisiana lovelies, who are said to be the most gorgeous show girls ever recruited for a celluloid. Chief scouts report that every one of them is a knockout, to be grouped for standout, because not only are they beautiful, but talented as well, which is an unbeatable combination.

"Louisiana Purchase" comes to the screen with lovely Zorina in her original role and Victor Moore continuing in films the same comedy character part that made Broadway audiences and audiences all over the country howl at the nore sight of his comic face and his acshewhat awkward, naive gestures. Here we have two expert performers whom we know can be depended on for a solid delivery of entertainment.

Bob Hope, of course, was not in the original production; that young man was much too busy getting on with the business of delighting radio and movie audiences alike. The young master of the doubletake went on climbing in pictures on such substantial rungs as "Road to Singapore," "Road to Zanzibar," "Caught in the Draft" and "Nothing But the Truth." Any advance notices Hope boosts himself still another rung higher with his performance in "Louisiana Purchase."

It would seem that Hope's path to go down to our seats pretty secure in the knowledge that we're going to see something special in the way of film entertainment, when "Louisiana Purchase" arrives at the McCarthy theatre.

Next feature attraction coming next to the McCarthy theatre is "False Faces," with Stanley Ridges and Veda Ann Borg. Also the latest edition of British Associated News.

AT THE BELLE

"Old Acquaintance"

"Old Acquaintance," Warner Bros.' powerful drama of a friendship, a steadfast loyalty (or her faithless friend, starring Bette Davis and Miriam Hopkins, comes at the Belle Theatre today. The picture, which is based upon the Broadway success of the same name, features Gig Young, John Loder and Dolores Moran.

Bette Davis, as Kit Marlowe, successful young novelist, visits her home town as guest of her childhood friend, Millie Drake (Miriam Hopkins), selfish, vindictive young matron. Although happily married and an expectant mother she is nevertheless envious of Kit's success and strives to emulate her.

Spurred on by jealousy and evil to her money, she writes a series of superficial novels that "catch on" and enjoy a huge success. Rich and famous, Millie sets out to enjoy life in the only way she knows how: by spending money lavishly on herself and her family.

"What's Cookin' Doc?" is the title of a funny Bugs Bunny cartoon program with the Canadian Cartoon to be presented on the Belle Newsreel.

AT THE CAPITOL

"Tarzan's New York Adventure"

You'll be thrilled as never before with the next attraction at the Capitol Theatre. One thousand new thrills in the most amazing Tarzan yet! Untamed Tarzan in Manhattan battling gangsters . . . defying death and the law to rescue a kidnapped boy. Adventure to top them all! "Tarzan's New York Adventure" stars Johnny Weissmuller and Maureen O'Sullivan with John Sheffield, Virginia Grey, Charles Bickford, Paul Kelly and Chill Wills.

Wild Bill Elliott

The added action hit "The Man From Thunder River" brings to the screen again Wild Bill Elliott and his comedian partner George "Gabby" Hayes in their newest western thriller. In "The Man From Thunder River" Bill leaves a posse to steal gold ore from the pay-load of a mine owned by his friend. He sends the culprits to jail and saves the life of his friend, who has been framed in a murder charge in the course of the crooked deal.

Combat Aircraft Construction To Replace Trainer Plane Building in '44 Says C.D. Howe

Program Will Continue to Expand and 4,312 Craft Will be Built This Year

OUTLINES PRODUCTION

Ottawa, March 22 (CP)—Canada's aircraft production program will continue to expand in 1944 but there will be no transfer of effort from the building of trainer aircraft to the construction of combat aircraft, Munitions Minister Howe told the Commons on Tuesday.

Speaking before the House began study of the Munitions Department estimates, Mr. Howe said Canadian aircraft plants expect to produce 4,312 aircraft this year, compared with 4,133 in 1943, an increase of 179.

Outlines Program

Outlining the production program for this year, Mr. Howe said it is hoped that:

1.—Another Bomber production will be increased from the current nine planes a month to 17 a month by May and 30 a month by next December.

2.—Mosquito Bomber production will be increased from 23 planes a month to 30 a month in June.

3.—Curtis Dive Bomber production will be increased from 30 planes a month to 70 a month by midsummer and 120 a month by next December.

4.—Catalina Flying Boat production will be increased from 27 a month to 30 a month by the end of this year.

Because there has been a marked falling-off in requirements for trainer aircraft, Mr. Howe said that:

1.—Production of the Cornell, a primary trainer, will be decreased from the current 125 planes a month to 50 a month.

2.—Production of the Anson, a twin-engined trainer, will drop from 70 a month to 35 a month.

3.—Production of the Harvard, a secondary trainer, will continue at 100 a month until the end of this year.

Mr. Howe said the shift from trainer to combat aircraft tends to reduce the output in terms of numbers, since only one Mosquito may involve 50 times the man-hours employed on the production of a primary trainer. . . .

Shows Growth

He outlined the growth of the aircraft industry and gave the following figures to show the number and the weight of aircraft produced in Canada each year since the beginning of the war:

Year	No. of Aircraft	Poundage
1940	366	1,638,118
1941	1,397	6,358,542
1942	3,611	17,578,850
1943	4,133	20,068,864
1944	*4,313	21,400,000

1944—(Estimated).

"When the war began, we had an aircraft industry with some 1,000 employees", Mr. Howe said. "The industry had produced very simple types of aircraft and these in small numbers. We now have an industry which employs 122,000 people and which is producing combat aircraft of the latest and finest types.

"Of the 11,290 planes produced since the beginning of the war, more than 2,000 have been first-line service aircraft. The balance of the program is made up of trainer types, and one service type (The Norseman) which is no longer used in front-line combat.

Hull Volants Win Title

Ottawa, March 22 — (CP) — Hull Volants trounced Ottawa Canadiens 4-1 here last night to win the Ottawa Senior City League championship and qualify to meet the winner of the Hamilton Majors-Fleod Rockets Ontario Hockey Association senior series.

Volants took a best-of-seven series 4-3.

First round of the Allan cup play-offs now will be played here either Saturday or Monday, though Volants' opponents have not yet been determined. Sudbury Frood Miners, if successful in posting their third and deciding O.H.A. series victory over Hamilton tonight in Toronto, will meet Volants Saturday.

Should Hamilton square the series and force a third game with Sudbury Friday, the ultimate winners will open against Hull in Ottawa on Monday. First two games are scheduled to be played here with Volants finishing the series on the road.

Dutch Harrison Trims Classy Field in Open Golf Tourney

By The Canadian Press

Dutch Harrison, a sergeant in the United States Army Air Forces, trimmed a classy field of golfing stars in the rich Charlotte Open golf tournament in North Carolina yesterday. Harrison had a 72-hole total of 275 to win top prize of a $3,000 War Bond in the $10,000 invitational meet.

Trailing Harrison were such topnotchers as Jug McSpaden with 278, Craig Wood with 281 and Sam Byrd with 283.

That well-known public speaker, Louis Norman Biggers, president of the Philadelphia Athletics, has been rejected for Army service at Fort Jackson, S. C. Newsom reported to the Board from his home at Hartsville, S. C.

Midland, one of the top handicap horses in the United States, has broken down and will be retired, it became known at Miami yesterday. Midland earned $94,270 for owner Vincent Flunkett, died at Buffalo yesterday. His fighters included Sleffy Hazlett, Tony Zale and Freddie Cochrane.

LARGEST ALTITUDE CHAMBER

Buffalo, N. Y., March 22—(AP)—An altitude chamber, which Curtiss-Wright Corporation officials say is the is the "world's largest" and which will hold an entire single-engine fuselage or complete transport plane cabin, is in use at the plant's airplane division research laboratory.

The $3,000,000 "jug" is 41 feet long and weighs 68 tons. Walls nine inches thick and latest vacuum and refrigeration equipment make possible simultaneous generation of the lowest temperatures and pressures yet obtained in an altitude chamber.

Weather conditions found at 60,000 feet and higher can be combined with temperatures as low as 118 degrees below zero, spokesmen said.

MAY RE-OPEN PLANT

Ottawa, March 22 — (CP) — There is a possibility the explosives plant at Nobel, Ont., may have to be reopened some time Munitions Minister Howe said last night in the Commons. As long as the war lasts it is hard to close any plant finally. Closed plants must be regarded as standby capacity.

THE LITTLE DOG BARKED

By ANNE ROWE

CHAPTER II

"And maybe she was going to help Sissy by going along with a little spooking?" the Inspector suggested.

"Maybe," Jode assented. "Least-ways it hasn't been any worse than any about an owl hooting and a couple of ghosts dancing in the moonlight. Joking like, you know. But I guess it was mean like, Mr. Bot-T guess I was the dashing, in Jode's opinion. Anyhow, there was a couple old sheets, but there was nothing thrash of about Jode. No, sirree, they didn't! If makes me that mad I could wring their necks! Fooling me'n Frank—Mr. Kilborn, I mean—and Frank and me readying that dusty old place and then go and fill the bed water we got!"

"That's right. They're no one left like old Mack was," Frank Kilborn agreed mournfully. "Took so much a day and worked, when the others want pay by the hour and leak."

"Jode kept spitting," Frank said. And now that I done what they asked and poor old Mack's dead, they act like it was dirt. That mealy-mouthed Mrs. Parris now. When I call her up on the phone last night and say, will she come and have tea with me long-a-day during as we oughter talk this here murder and connect some better as she says she's sorry but she got a headache, and don't think it will be Monday. Or tomorrow either."

"Inspector Pettengill! How could you ask them to give back my money? Imagine how they might have acted if I'd taken it!" I wailed, once in the end on the Inn horror office and the Inn.

"Worked out all right, didn't it?" the Inspector asked dryly.

"It did. It worked out wonderfully well," I admitted. "But if I hadn't protested. If I'd thought I had to take the money because you wanted me to—"

"But you didn't. And I knew you wouldn't be that foolish," he twinkled at me.

It made me gasp.

"You mean, you counted on my refusing it?"

He nodded. "Sure did. Nothing like first impulse, people filled and then letting 'em off. Makes 'em feel good toward the letter-carrier, he explained with amused satisfaction. "So now we know they's been a conspiracy and can track it down without costing Ada Trefethen her life. Also, we're going to visiting, and confront the conspirators with their victim. We'll start with the two would-be ghosts in sheets. And on our way, you may tell me what you found out, meanstimes."

"I didn't want to confront my enemies, I'd meant to hunt up Ada and tell her how Sissy and me had got some private information. Also my face and hands needed attention.

But I hadn't sufficient resistance left in me, after the Kilborn bath, about an hour, we're going with the Inspector meekly, reporting that Miss Trefethen was making an accusing finger at Bill Parris and Jane Sanderson and Linda Lord had been to Burns Lodge.

her to be his next wife."I excused probably thought he was asking for my hand.

The Inspector grinned in answer, with a "Humph!" of amusement. Then he said, "Sure. So Mike Welsh's alibi all to pot? Or did you get it all but up to?"

"Yes, sir. Mr. Welsh did, indeed, have an alibi, and it checked out very satisfactorily. Mr. Welsh was in a spotted white coat—ushered in, I gathered, by the waiter to explain his presence and disorder.

Our visit was distinctly unforeseen for we surprised Alden and Vickery, with Linwood as their guest, at a pedigreed auction. All three had showed distinct signs of consternation at the sight of Mr. Welsh and me. And Linwood, gulping down his drink as hastily it choked him, sought safety in flight, under pretext of being late for dinner. And His boats, on the other hand, seemed to consider attack the best form of defense. They didn't wait for the Inspector to state his errand but, taking it for granted our coming was connected with their talk of sabotage I'd overheard, were all for the moment the floor had closed behind Linwood.

Inspector Pettengill let them exhaust their vocal cords in protestations of innocence and indignation, at last ended their crude flattery with a curt: "Bible down to this: You don't like this Mr. Ann-rose who helped Mr. Turner write her play and took it out on her, Made Mrs. Kilborn put her and Miss Sanderson in that basement to scare 'em away. And then—just what did you do?"

"Nothing. Nothing at all," they protested. And Mr. Vickery added, pained: "How could we? In that storm."

"Someone could all right, storm or no," Inspector Pettengill told them sternly. "And from the description I got, the someone could be you, Mr. Vickery. Anyways, old Mack stayed at that old inn the night to protect the two ladies from what your friends and Mrs. Parris hatched out. And he got killed for his pains. And you killed him, who was it you sent to do the job?"

They hadn't sent anyone, both Alden and Vickery declared, jittery by now. They were innocent of old Mack's death. They even took oath on it. The Inspector chose to accept the word of their servant.

The valet came and swore to make him stay with us while they "knew."

"For a lightning rod?" the Inspector asked dryly.

"No," said Alden. "He's a Filipino, not a Japi!"

Inspector Pettengill didn't mind the playwright's "gag." He ordered Alden to go to his room, and Vickery too. They'll tell you at the inn, where is Mr. Regan's story to Inspector Hatch. How you'd planned to frighten two women. And they didn't succeed a bit of the storm scared you instead. And don't forget, Mr. Vickery, a kind of oath. And perjury's a prison offense."

"Yes, sir," Vickery said, leading me finally by the arm' and smiled at me again in the friendliest way. "Now, Miss Dane, what do you think—are those two old fools innocent?"

"Innocent?" I asked dubiously. "You said Sissy smelled the murderer the first stage. And I'm certainly weren't on it."

"Innocent, certainly," he agreed. "And I didn't say I think Vickery killed the old man himself. Alden. He's too much of a runt. But that Vickery was in cahoots with who done it, and one of 'em didn't mean to kill him, but there's rope. Come on. Maybe we'll learn a lot more about Linwood and the whole plot on our next call."

The Inspector didn't stop at the Loring house, half glimpsed behind a screen of dense foliage, as I had expected. He walked right on. Past Sondra's cottage on the other side of the road and into the Parris grounds. Through the same gate from which Sissy had shot out at me two days before.

All without saying another word and with a self-satisfied smile quirking up the corners of his mouth. I couldn't understand it—the smile and the self-satisfaction. It was interesting something too slowly for my taste. The investigation had, so far, produced nothing tangible beside the "coincidence" that the Inspector had found in old Mack's garbage bag the same kind of cotton clothing that Vickery might have cut the fly rope, even if Alden had done the job; poor lamplighter—had used the plait which Sissy had found, more likely another sock, which had led to old Mack's death, seemed to me mere guess-work.

Nor did I see the good of our calling on the harridan. Supposing Bill Parris was the man Linda and I had seen coming away from the old inn; surely his father or his mother would "confess" him at once to the Inspector if they knew about it at all.

The opening of the Parris' front door transferred my attention to her. She had answered it: A neat, not too youthful maid in a smart, fresh-looking black-and-white uniform, who first told us haughtily: "Mr. and Mrs. Parris aren't receiving." Then upon hearing "police," she gasped and scuttled up a curving stairway in search of her employers, letting us stand at the door. But not for long.

Inspector Pettingill only waited a second before preceding me into the spacious entrance hall and, from there, by way of a wide, curving arch, into an enormous living room.

It was clear through,the hoose and had two sets of wide-open French doors to back, leading to an awninged terrace. Also, it was beautifully ornate, full of ceiling-high mirrors, deep rugs and marvelous antique furniture. And I made the point of remarking that it looked like the drawing room of a Beacon Hill mansion transplanted to the Way-Down-East coast, and Mr. Parris' plays must have brought him a pretty penny to afford it, when a gentleman's voice on the terrace silenced me.

"Keep ranting about Sondra Marshall! She doesn't matter any longer. It was all a nervous flutter. It's the girl. She must be got out of the way before Linda can be has a daughter."

Linda—Burns Loring's daughter! The agency hit me right between the eyes. And I must have made a noise, or a sound, for Mr. Answer surprise. For the Inspector gripped my arm warningly, standing tense and rigid, his head was thrust forward like a dog at point.

"Really, Mother! All this scheming and plotting! Haven't you the gang of those two old fools is so silly! Uncle Burns is a swell, nice and sensible."

"Silly? You dare call me silly?" The voice cut in sharply, in rising hysteria. It seemed prodded, goaded. "Fool with your blind husband and constant demand for money? For what do you think I have been doing it? For whom do I want your money?"

The voice stopped abruptly, with a gulp, as the two speakers appeared on the left French door. A beautiful woman in her late forties in immaculately Norma Talmadge style. And a young lean perfect, replica of herself in tennis shorts, a cardigan tied around her shoulders by the sleeves and a tennis racquet tucked under her arm.

They stopped in the door, staring up as aghast. Then the cold, unrelenting surprise; the woman with fear gripping her. "I did not tell you to call back. At least I know I did. For what seemed an eternity.

Then the tension broke in tension. "Mrs. Parris and—er—Mrs. Hurley, Inspector Pettengill and this is Mrs. Turner," he introduced. "We are here to straighten out a few things. They've been talk of you—Mrs. Parris, I've been a party to the plot against Mrs. Turner. That's why I brought her. So you could set things to right. But they's no need for me to go into that. You've answered my questions for I asked you. And you, Mrs. Turner, I'm sorry."

There was silence when he had ended. Mrs. Parris was trying to talk and could not. "How—how did you get in?" she got at last to say.

"On our feet," the Inspector replied. "And I think we'll sit down now, thank you. I'm sorry, Mrs. Turner—" he indicated a chair beside the one he had picked out for himself. "You there, Mrs. Parris. No, not with your back to the light. Facing it. And you sit beside your mother, Mrs. Hurley."

We all did as he directed.

"Why are you trying to murder your niece, Mrs. Parris?" the Inspector asked, when he had settled himself at his ease. "Don't make a fool of herself, joining in that intrigue against Mrs. Turner's play. Against Stuart Amrose, rather. But that doesn't make her a murderess. Old Mack's death and the dropping the telephone booth are so plainly laid for her to you."

"Maybe so," the Inspector conceded, "But that's nothing wrong with my ears, and I heard her say Miss Barclie had to get out away before Mr. Loring found out he'd had a daughter."

"She did—I did—I didn't mean—murder!" Mrs. Parris found her voice at last. "I merely wished her to 'away.'"

"Ayah. So you could get her inheritance," the Inspector observed bluntly. "I hate to tell you, ma'am but—you're too late. Mr. Loring found out Miss Barclie's his daughter—first time he laid eyes on her. Would had to be blind not to. She is the image of her mother. So now you know that—perhaps you tell me what's behind it all."

Mrs. Parris shook her head. It could either mean she couldn't or wouldn't tell. And her daughter knew her's an unexpected glamour and answered for her.

"Of course, Mother will tell you what she knows, Tyler. My'Vane wrote her about the girl, more than a year ago. Oh, it was touching story. Wanted her to bring father and daughter together because he'd promised the girl's mother he would. Mother didn't wrote him her brother had no daughter and she wasn't going to help fake someone else's offspring on him."

Inspector Pettengill whistled soundlessly. "I see. Nice way out! But then, the Amrose Jean's mighty good. I like it, and so do many other people. Must be worth a million of money."

It sounded utterly insane to me. "Mighty fishy, I'd say!" I repeated wonderingly.

He gave me one of his fatherly smiles. "Ayah. The Eureka Jam. Picked up, I think. They're Mr. Loring. Or Mr. Loring's them. Anyway, that's where his money comes from. He had a million from his first wife," and then turning back to Mrs. Parris: "Made it look real easy, ma'am, you talking out so loud about Miss Barclie's money not counting any more, only the girl. Could run you in for circumstantial evidence; plotting for an inheritance. Your husband in it too?"

"My husband?" Mrs. Parris' face darkened. "He knew I was trying to, knows nothing but his work. He's writing the—the—" She paused, passing a hand across her forehead and then asked her daughter helplessly, "What is he writing, dear?"

He for chapter meetings did not pull any punches whatsoever in telling the accountants present what they generally did for themselves, what they should do and also what they shouldn't do if they wished to become a top-ranking executive. The speaker also pointed out the tremendous opportunities available to the accountant in the coming post-war period.

The meeting was in charge of Jay Lennox, chairman, assisted by Mr. Carl Casey acting as secretary.

Bloomfield Wins County Title In Overtime

Picton, March 22—Twelve minutes of overtime play were required before Bloomfield scored the goal which gave them the championship of Prince Edward County hockey league Monday night. They defeated Picton Canadians 2 to 1 in the third and deciding game, 6 to 5.

So great was the interest in the game that two hundred fans were unable to get into the arena which was jammed with 1500 spectators. Many had to be turned away for a time to keep out coomers.

The fliers took an early lead with three goals in the early part of the game, Ted Woodcock, Ace Penn as from Abbott, scored the only goal for the village team. Second period McCaud again tallied on a pass from Abbott but the R.A.F. made it 4-3 second later on a goal from a scramble. Just before the end of the second period Woodcock tied it up completing the hat trick on a pass from Bellamy, the score remained at 4-4 until minutes of the third period when the fliers scored again. Bellamy assisted in two for Bloomfield on passes from Flatford to tie the score.

Ten minutes of overtime saw no fancy stick work but about seven the fliers team to score would take the title. Thompson got the winning counter after four minutes.

Group Captain Collingwood, D.F.C., commanding the station, presented the trophy to team captain Cork.

1,000 PLANES LEAVE FRANKFURT FLAMING MASS

Daylight Thrust Follows Smashing Night Assault

Strong Forces From R.C.A.F. Squadrons Participate Against Chemical City

33 BOMBERS LOST

By GLADWIN HILL
(Associated Press Staff Writer)

London, March 23 (AP) — Striking the second day in a row in the wake of a 1,000-plane R.A.F. night raid aimed chiefly at Frankfurt, approximately 1,500 American bombers and fighters bombarded the German air force on its home bases in Western Germany today.

The American raiding force, which included upwards of 1,000 heavy aircraft based in the Brunswick district, the aircraft park at Wezt, 40 miles east of Hanover, former air force station in Oldenburg in the south and the German battleship base at Handorf, a U.S. army air force spokesman said.

Base to the East

The German air force, which avoided battle with 600 or more heavy bombers, blasted Berlin in daylight yesterday, was not known to the bait of the bold attack today by the German radio and "violent" air combats were fought with the northbound large waves bers of fighters which accompanied the bombers.

Strong fighter cover from the R.C.A.F. bomber group participated in the night attack on Leipzig, important aircraft and industrial city of Frankfurt, which left huge fires burning and a vast pillar of smoke above the stricken city.

The attack on Frankfurt and other night operations were carried out by the R.A.F. Bomber Command set up after the Moscow conference of foreign ministers is not getting the desired results, and that some new form of offensive must be decided.

Mr. Churchill hinted at this in Commons yesterday as members pressed for an open debate on the Atlantic Charter.

Fires Still Burning

Fires still burned in Berlin from yesterday's attack, and Stockholm dispatches said telephone communication with the Nazi capital was still cut 24 hours after the attack. R.A.F. Air Marshal Sholto Douglas, in a foray over Berlin last night, said the fire were visible 200 miles away.

While the heavies were ranging over Germany in one of their most far-flung operations, R.A.F. Mosquito and American medium bombers attacked Civil railroad centre north of the Seine in France for the in a week. Two airfields were bombed.

In opposing today's heavy bombing attacks, Germans adopted a new tactic, the first returning engagements yesterday and concentrated their passes on a small part of the attacking formations.

As a result, one air report pilots said, "we went almost to Russia without being shot at. We had space to fight."

Other tactics of the Germans included adoption of the tight formation, but they were severe in their suffering heavy casualties.

A large number of Halifax and Lancaster bombers the Canadian bomber group participated in the new blow at Europe's aircraft industry, aimed by a series of heavy attacks, R.C.A.F. headquarters announced.

In enemy waters last night.

600 Planes Over Berlin

Berlin, attacked yesterday by 600 or more U.S. heavy bombers and for at least an equal number of fighters and with a bomb load of about 1,500 tons, was attacked again last Wednesday night by Mosquitos which left a glow reflected 100 miles Western Germany.

The last 1,000-plane RAF-RCAF attack on Frankfurt was made last Saturday night at a cost of forty-four planes.

The attack on Frankfurt had night was 40th of the war and the 11th heavy bombardment the city had endured.

It was the third time in a week that the British sent out a force of more than 1,000 planes.

Probably more than 2,000 tons of bomb fell on Frankfurt, and this with the tonnage dropped on Berlin by the R.A.F. yesterday, brought the bomb load dropped on the Reich in the past 24 hours close to 5,000 tons.

Last night's attack probably was not as big, however, as the one on Thursday, February 15, when more than 1,000 heavy bombers centred their whose load of 2,300 tons of the R.A.F. hit Frankfurt unusually early, around 10.45 p.m., unloaded showers of blockbusters for about half an hour.

An hour after it was over Mosquitos saw huge expanses of fire into which other planes dropped high explosives—and columns of smoke arose to 15,000 feet.

13 Bombers Lost Over Berlin

A U.S. communique last night announced that 33 bombers and nine fighters on yesterday's day-

Churchill Will Address People Of Britain Sunday

London, March 23 — (CP)— Prime Minister Churchill will address the people of Britain and the empire in a broadcast since his winter illness.

The speech, to be delivered at 9 p. m. (4 p. m. E.W.T.) Sunday, was announced here as a possible key to the position which British may take on the multiple problems expected to come up for discussion at the forthcoming conferences in London between the U. S. Under-Secretary of State, Edward R. Stettinius, Jr., and foreign office officials.

There has been speculation abroad that these conferences might be followed by another meeting between Mr. Churchill and President Roosevelt.

Growing demands in the House of Commons and the United States for a detailed statement on Allied war and post-war plans, as well as for clarification of what revisions — if any — may be made in the Atlantic Charter, have suggested the additional possibility that Mssrs. Churchill and Roosevelt may seek another meeting with Premier Stalin.

The lone political hand which Britain has played openly in connection with Italian, French, Spanish and Greek affairs has raised many questions in both Britain and America concerning the solidarity of the "Big Three" powers.

It has been an open secret in London for some time that the European Advisory Commission set up after the Moscow conference of foreign ministers is not getting the desired results, that some new form of offensive must be decided.

Mr. Churchill hinted at this in Commons yesterday as members pressed for an open debate on the Atlantic Charter.

light smash at Berlin, carried out by possibly 600 heavy bombers and at least an equal number of fighters. It was announced that the U.S. bombers dropped about 1,500 tons of explosives on Berlin's manufacturing targets.

The German air force, heavily damaged in other raids in recent days, was reported to have opposition as the Americans swept over the German capital in daylight. Aerial craft fire was described as intense.

"Some of our formations bombed through openings in the heavy flak clouds with good effect," the communique said. "Other formations attacked factories and transportation targets in the Berlin area through thick clouds by means of instrument bombing, but could not observe the results."

Dared Germans to Fight

Fighters from the United States 8th Air Force, 4th, 1st and 9th air escorts, and "circled Berlin for a considerable time in the hope that Germans to come up and fight, the communique added.

On the homeward journey, the fighters shot up a German rail-and-river transport and other targets in Germany and enemy vessels along the Dutch coast. One bomber was destroyed as it tried to get into the air.

A Stockholm dispatch to The Stockholm said that every few minutes during the hour before the bombers and fighters appeared overhead the sirens kept sent this warning:

"We are coming. Our targets will be in the northern and Western Germany civil districts of Berlin. Evacuate those districts at once."

4,000-Pound Blockbusters Used In Devastating Raid on Padua

Naples, March 23 —(AP)— R.A.F. Liberators, and Wellingtons lugged 4,000-pound blockbusters to Padua last night and battered the rail yards there with one of the most devastating attacks of the Italian campaign, Allied airmen reported today.

Flames visible 95 miles away were left by the attack and one pilot said: "Block of administration buildings near the airfield was ablaze.

It was the third major assault in recent weeks on Padua, a junction connecting lines running to Trieste, Milan and the Brenner Pass route through Bologna. The Wellingtons also delivered two night attacks and American heavy bombers one, dropping 400 tons blockbusters squarely into the centre of the yards and a large number of explosions, apparently in cars laden with ammunition, occurred when the freight cars were tossed around like toys.

JAP COLUMNS INVADING INDIA THREATEN IMPHAL

Air Superiority Of Allied Forces Will Play an Important Part in Invasion

PRESSURE STIFFENING

By CHARLES S. GRUMICH
Associated Press War Correspondent

New Delhi, March 23 — (AP) — Japanese columns invading India now threaten Imphal, key road centre in Manipur, 70 miles from the Burma frontier, it disclosed today when Allied headquarters told of an enemy force which has driven more than 30 miles up the lower Kaladan river valley from Tiddim in the Chin Hills area.

The headquarters statement said the enemy was 30 miles from Imphal on the west side of Logtak Lake south of the city.

Imphal is part of a second invasion of India within 24 hours by the Japanese ran counter to previous reports of activity in the Arakan area, there were announcements indicated the enemy was confined within the Bumpa borders.

When and Where

Yesterday's report gave no hint that the enemy had penetrated 80 miles from Tiddim to the south as well as from the east in the vicinity of Thantlang on the Tiddim-Kalemyo Win River.

The eastern Japanese invasion force also reported about 30 miles away from Imphal.

Whether the defending breaks into the open plain, the Allied air superiority against the almost nonexistent or carefully husbanded Japanese air strength in this theatre appeared the key to the battle.

Japanese pressure appeared to be growing along the Arakan front, although headquarters here said Allied troops were converging on the enemy invasion columns in India.

Japanese activity was especially noticeable to the south on the coastal road to Akyab at Maungdaw in Arakan and in the western foothills of the Mayu Mountain range, the communique said with Allied bombers and fighters maintaining a constant attack against objectives in these areas, as well as positions in the Chindwin, Kabaw and Chin Hills and Kaladan.

In North Burma

In North Burma, Chinese forces were engaged in heavy fighting in the northern part of the Mogaung valley, the communique said, while Hukawng Valley, and were battling Japanese forces northeast of Shadmup.

Cost Enemy Units

Imphal, apparent objective of the Japanese drive, is the southern junction of the Manipur road and railway which 178 miles north through the Kohima Pass to the Dimapur junction with the India-Assam-China supply line, and together with it the Burma theatre.

Meanwhile, British forces contest enemy attempts from positions south and southwest of Buthidaung and Maungdaw in Arakan, while repelling enemy attacks west of that area. To the south-east of Buthidaung isolated groups of enemy troops were being rounded up in the Mayu area of the Mayu Range.

Other Allied detachments were reported to have set up strongly held pack by strong enemy forces in the Kaladan valley, the communique said.

R.A.F. bomber formations raided large supply dumps at Taungup, Sandoway and Akyab, and attacked the night before last and flames were sighted 60 miles away.

HITLER SETS UP PUPPET REGIME IN HUNGARY

German Armies Saving Balkans From Allied Intrigue Says Berlin

BULGARIA NEXT?

By WILLIAM SMITH WHITE
(Associated Press Staff Writer.)

London, March 23 — (AP) — Mounting activity in Germany's Balkan dike against the Russian flood, Berlin reported today to be about to kidnap the Rumanian government as he has abducted that of Hungary.

There were widespread reports that Premier Ion Antonescu of Rumania has been summoned to Hitler's presence as Admiral Nicholas Horty, Regent of Hungary, had gone before him. There was growing belief that Antonescu was likely to be ousted because of German suspicions that he was involved in peace overtures toward the Soviet.

The BBC at once began broadcasting this warning to the Rumanians:

Leaders Called to Germany.

"Rumanian leaders have been called to Hitler's headquarters. If you oppose Germany, Germany will wreak vengeance on you, but if you oppose the Allies an even graver fate is in store... German imitators is exposed and runs through Rumania. Concerted evidence of the desire to help the Allies now would be the first step toward Rumania's survival."

Germany's occupation of Rumania would be largely academic except as a measure for complete political control, for the country is little more than a German camp area.

A German foreign office spokesman, according to a Berlin broadcast, said, "emphatically denied" that Horty was being held prisoner, that Premier Nicholas Kallay had escaped to southern Hungary and had sent out an appeal for help from abroad, and that Yugoslav Marshal Tito had established contact with Hungarian forces.

In the first official Nazi announcement since German armed forces crossed Hungary's border early Monday, the Berlin radio said yesterday a new government had been formed in Budapest under a Quisling premier and a German assistant.

The fate of Hungary was an example for countries failing to fall in line as Hungary drove to build up an eastern wall of defence against the fast-moving Russians.

Dispatches from neutral capitals indicated early relief in Bulgaria and Rumania as possibly next on Hitler's list for full military occupation and added another to Axiomatic, created from the carved-up state of Czechoslovakia.

A Daily Mail dispatch from Madrid said German airfields created were seizing Bulgaria's railways and communications systems and had detained the British ambassador who occupied the Embassy at Sofia. Bulgaria and Rumania have remained at peace although on opposite sides in the world conflict.

BREAK BETWEEN FINLAND AND U.S. NEARLY CERTAIN

Only Word That Negotiations Had Not Collapsed Would Save Situation

FINNS FEAR RUSSIA

By JOHN M. HIGHTOWER
(A. P. Staff Writer)

Washington, March 23 (AP) — A break between the United States and Finland appeared today all but inevitable.

The only thing believed capable of preventing that diplomatic rupture would be some official word that peace negotiations between the Finns and Russia have not collapsed completely.

Hope that such word would be forthcoming was slight in Washington quarters here. Nonetheless there was some reluctance to abandon all hope.

The Finnish government was notified several days ago that the United States was reconsidering its relations with Finland. A break was not openly threatened at that time but it was clearly implied since it is about the only diplomatic measure left to Washington.

On excellent authority it can be said that the American policy toward Finland is based on the following principles:

The United States has maintained relations with the Finns despite the fact that they are allies of Germany and enemies of Britain and Russian because America leaders thought that by so doing Finland would have more chance of getting Finland to quit the war.

When the point is reached where President Roosevelt and State Secretary Cordell Hull decide this chance no longer exists there will be no further reason for maintaining relations. The official

WRESTLER LOSES $60 IN WALLET

A war charity wrestling show was staged in support of the Kiwanis Boys' Camp at the Armouries on Wednesday night and the ring was crowded with a troupe of professional wrestlers from Toronto and Hamilton. Referee Queesbery A. C. St Thomas, One of the wrestlers, was Jan Gotch, of Hamilton.

Following his match Gotch adjourned to the Crown Hotel to have a shower bath, as is the usual custom with professional wrestlers. While he was taking his bath some person entered his room and stole his hat. Inside the hat were contained valuable identification papers and $60 in cash.

As Mr. Gotch came to Belleville on a charity mission and assisted in the raising of a goodly sum for the local blood donor clinic, any person knowing the whereabouts of his wallet could notify police, as shedding a wallet under such circumstances isn't just done even by good crooks.

Ernest Stobbart, formerly of No. 9 District Headquarters, Toronto, has reported at District No. 8 O.P.P. headquarters for duty here and Provincial Constable Stobbart has transferred to the Belleville headquarters coming from Toronto. Previously he was attached to the Ottawa detachment. O.P.P. before responding to Inspector Harry Storey here.

FOUR BOYS PLEAD GUILTY TO ENTERING SCHOOL AT SULPHIDE

Four teen-aged lads appeared in County Court before Judge Magistrate J. L. Lloyd here today charged with breaking and entering the Sulphide schoolhouse with the intent to commit an indictable offence. The quartette, all ranging from 16 to 17 years of age, pleaded guilty and were given a year's suspended sentence upon the payment of costs that amounted to $14 each. The boys gave their names as D. Trumble of Marmora; R. Bowerman, G. Jackson of Mountain View and Little Bruce Yarborough. Two of the latter two boys were visiting at Sulphide when the offence was committed on the last Sunday.

Chief J. C. Hayes, of Tweed told the court.

According to Chief Hayes' evidence the quartette entered the schoolhouse on Sunday, March 13, and broke several windows and a gramophone. Damage was estimated at $18 and was paid before the trial. Both Magistrate Lloyd and Crown Attorney Harry Wright, K.C., cautioned the lads' parents regarding such practices breaking and entering.

PARENTS WARNED TO KEEP CHILDREN OFF RIVER ICE

With the possible breaking up of the ice in the Moira River at any time during a period of disintegration, parents are urged to warn their children to refrain from playing on the ice in any event.

Today city police received several calls from anxious mothers, who observed children either playing or crossing the Moira River, which is an exceptionally dangerous practice at this time of year, and should be discouraged by the parents.

Syrup Make Will Likely Be Small

Prodcty of a rather poor syrup season this year was voiced by district farmers this week as the results of daintems being experienced in getting sugar bushes tapped have been felt. The sap run in instances where sugar bushes have already been tapped have been disappointing.

The percentage of farmers, however, who have their bush buckets hung, was estimated by one resident to be very low, with the great majority in the district to the north of the city not getting their buckets out within the last day or so. Others are still in the process of tapping, while still others have not yet gone to the sugar bush. Gauging by the results as still unfavorable.

Reasons of the season is given by many farmers as the reason for their expectancy of a poor sap run this year. Normally farmers expect to make a start at syrup-making by March 17th, but it is now a week past this date and still very little syrup made. Lack of snow in the bushes will also have a detrimental effect on the sap run.

A great many farmers in Sidney and Thurlow are only now getting their tapping done, it was learned. One of the largest syrup makers in the township of Sidney, Mr. Lawrence Ketchabaw, this morning only had 200 trees tapped, while Mr. Clem Ketchabaw and Mr. Cecil Stoneman of the 5th of Sidney, had not yet started, until spring comes in Thurlow had not tapped.

With present weather very little hope was expressed of syrup being made for the Easter holiday season, the day. "If there is syrup offered it will have to come from some other district of Ontario to the north of Belleville," it was stated.

POLICE COURT

Traffic cases dominated the weekly county police court held before Magistrate J. L. Lloyd today. The most serious was a charge of speeding, preferred under the War Measures Act, by Provincial Constable Sprink, of Toronto, who was assessed $12.50, including costs. Donald Miller, of the Armines and Steve LaPenna of Richmond Hill, Ont., appeared on the same charges but were only fined $17.50, including costs.

A conviction on a careless driving charge cost Stanley Martin, R.R. No. 7, Belleville, five dollars and costs, while when Bernice Robinson, of Corbyville failed to stop at a designated stop sign before entering a highway she did not and was fined $5 and costs.

Failure a traffic officer was nearly as costly to Ernest Collins and he was fined $10 and costs, paid out of court. The other charge was that of speeding in a restricted area, preferred by Traffic Officer H. Caldwell against Malcolm Bird, Sidney Township. Here the accused was granted a week's enlargement while Crown Attorney B. C. Donnan, K.C., agreed to the postponement.

Applicants For New Liquor Permits Called on to Sign an Affidavit

When early applicants for new liquor permits which go on sale at the Liquor Control Board store here immediately, make application, they will discover that before being called upon to sign an affidavit which demands of each applicant to declare himself, that (1)—I am of the full age of twenty-one years. (2)—I am not the holder of a 1945-46 individual liquor permit. (3)—I am not, during the period of the provisions of the Liquor Control Act from purchasing liquor. (4)—I am a user of liquor. (5)—Liquor purchased by me will be consumed only in my residence as registered by the Liquor Control Act, and finally, the declaration that the applicant is making application for the Government to issue him or her a 1944-46 individual liquor permit.

The affidavits are to be forwarded to Toronto along with the duplicate form from the permit book. By taking this precaution the applicant is liable to prosecution if the declaration is not in accordance of the declaration number four for example, which declares that by March 17th, it is exceptionally difficult for some well-meaning person who wishes only to purchase a bottle of liquor for medicinal purposes, and perhaps two bottles of sulpes in anything stronger than coffee or tea at other times. Non-drinkers prefer to buy a bottle and take it to his own home to drink his friends, or to drink it by himself, he might run afoul of the law if he purchased it for the "user" when he applied for his book. It was suggested.

Although it has long been on the statutes of the Liquor Control Act, Item number five: "Liquor purchased by me will be consumed only in my residence as required by the Liquor Control Act" is causing signing an affidavit citizens of the city and those of the province who would purchase a bottle with the intention of taking it to a party at the home of friends would find themselves liable to prosecution, or if a purchaser made it to private club friend with a "nip" he might very well find himself answering the door to an official—appearing subpoena for making false declaration if the regulation was strictly enforced.

The new hours have arrived in the city and will be made available to the public immediately, said the liquor store officials. The pages of the new permit book are private, but the form for recording sales of liquor, wine and beer is the same. The same number of pages make up the 1944-46 book, and the permit will cost the same as last year's book.

The purpose of the affidavit, local officials said, was to prevent persons from purchasing more than one permit book and to check activities of non-drinkers who bought bottles and resold them to their friends. A difference in the regulations governing the sale of liquor by the Government to those who are over a 1944-46 individual liquor permit.

Hastings Farmers Received $127,658 In Federal Cheese Bonuses in 1943

CHEESEMAKERS MEET

Hastings county farmers received an estimated $127,658 in bonus payments by Federal Govt. on high quality cheese manufactured in the county for the twelve months previous to Nov. 30th, cheesemakers of the Central Ontario Cheesemakers' Association were told here Wednesday afternoon by T. J. Hicks, of Montreal as he spoke to the annual spring meeting conference. Mr. Hicks presented cheese production figures for the above period by provinces, by districts and by counties.

Total cheese from Hastings graded in the above period was 96,357, of which 97.31 per cent. scored first grade and 2.49 second grade. Of the 96,357 boxes county there were 29,829 boxes of cheese graded which payments were estimated at $46,237. This included bonus payments on high scoring cheese only and did not include provincial bonus of straight two cents per pound.

Prescott Totals $1,118,189

Total cheese bonus payments made throughout Ontario for the above period was $1,118,189, averaging 1.061 cents per pound on all cheese graded. Total number of boxes of cheese graded was 1,181,846 96.15 per cent. of these gradings were 'C99. All these scored. The average score for all cheese graded in the province was 97.956, according to Mr. Hicks.

Breaking cheese gradings down into districts, Mr. Hicks pointed out that in Central Ontario 257,032 boxes of cheese had been graded with premium payments estimated at $211,172 or 82.14 per cent. paid for all cheese graded. In the Eastern Ontario district 660,872 boxes were graded with payments estimated at $617,627 or 0.907 cents per pound for cheese graded.

Better Production Higher

Production of cheese in Ontario for the grading year of 1943 had been 83,180,158 pounds, or a 2.96 per cent. increase over the corresponding period for the year previous.

Others speakers heard were the first session of the cheesemakers' conference were Prof. Gibson, of the Kemptville Dairy School, who gave a paper on cheesemaking technique, and R. R. Gadwith, chief dairy instructor for Eastern Ontario.

Concluding the afternoon's session was an open discussion by cheesemakers and instructors with on the subjects brought up being the pasteurizing of whey. In the evening Prof. Sproule of the Ontario Agricultural College, showed allies demonstrating the importance of sanitation around the dairy barn and in the cheese factory. Included on the evening's program was entertainment by Arthur Dowse of Ottawa. Later a light lunch of crackers and old cheese was enjoyed by those in attendance. President Lorne Henderson of Bloomfield presided.

Speakers Debate Post-War Needs In Trenton

Trenton (Special)—A very lively and educational Rotary meeting was held on Monday evening.

The chairman of the Rotary program committee, Mac Robertson realizing that citizens everywhere are making extensive plans for the annual vacation period arranged a lively debate on this timely subject. Preceding the debate a thorough report issued by the Department of Public Health on the conditions of sanitation in the town of Trenton was read by Keith Bedley. This report is the result of a recent survey following the "polio" epidemic in this district. The report revealed a great number of contaminated wells, and unsanitary sewage and refuse disposal and with the exception of one premise there were also recommendations to correct any unsatisfactory conditions. Arguments of speakers, Don McQuade, Albert Farrar, Tom McNeil and Rev. Martin were the ones elected to provoke thought for the debate. Notarian Gerald McQuade spoke of the need for much improved roads and sidewalks, and need for more parks and playgrounds in this district. The doctor then spoke of the great need for a modern hospital not just a hospital, but one large enough to meet the needs of the community as it is today and the years to come also.

Notarian Albert Farrar used a very apt illustration to describe what is being done now for post-war planning. "Speaking to a taxi driver in Winnipeg," he said, "about this morning. 'No,' she replied, 'same old one with, a new coat of paint.' And so we have decided instead of talk, unless we go ahead with definite plans the boys who come home will receive the same cold scraps and conditions that their fathers did twenty-five years ago only with, 'a new coat of paint.' If we have a plan ready for action it is now, we are thinking too much of making money, we are 'money drunk.' Now is the time for action."

Notarian Tom McNeil for his point expressed what he thought a young man would like to fit himself into Trenton to make his home here. He said, "it is for them to hold the people here, therefore we must have something to offer them. Industry attracts people but a young man wants to have a home of his own, with all the conveniences that a home should have. now can this be when there are areas where there is not the necessary water supply available."

The final speaker was Rev. Martin, he approached the subject from the angle of character, and anything that would improve the character of the people would improve the community, he stressed the need for wholesome recreation for the leisure hours of young people. Organized wholesale recreation is needed. He also stressed the need of cleaning up and proper supervision of pool rooms and cafes where young boys and girls are gathering too much time to the detriment of themselves and the community. Beautiful surroundings are an asset to beautiful citizens, he said. He said he stated of making the unsightly and unpleasant places pleasing to the sight. He will add a better community and better citizenship.

A period of free discussion followed. Many speakers gave very constructive criticism was offered.

Revolver Reported Stolen.

Provincial Police a .38 calibre revolver of "Walman" make was stolen from a car in the garage of J. E. Lowry, York Road during the night. Mr. Lowry reported the theft about 1.30 a.m. by the noise of a car and thought it to be a motorist parting his car. He reported to Sidney Township this morning he discovered his garage had been entered and the glove compartment in his Ford sedan rifled and the revolver stolen. Several other valuable articles in the car were untouched.

Police of this district have all been notified.

STANLEY W. TRIPP

Picton, March 23.—Prominent in the canning industry and in municipal affairs here, Mr. Stanley W. Tripp passed away yesterday at his home in Hallowell township. He had been in failing health since last fall when he developed a severe case of flu and the Quinte Canning Company closed down.

Though in his 63rd year, Mr. Tripp continued active and last year personally operated the Quinte plant here.

Mr. Tripp started his early life on a farm. For twenty years he traveled for the Dominion Canners, for the late R. J. Purtelle, in 1928, he operated his first canning factory at Wellington. Later he purchased a half interest in Quinte Canning Co., the other half was owned by Mr. Purtelle. The plant turned out large packs of canned goods.

Mr. Tripp entered municipal life during the first war, serving as reeve and deputy reeve of Hallowell.

In 1923 he returned as reeve and served in that capacity for the next three years. He also served as councillor for Hallowell for two years Mr. Tripp operated a fruit farm on the Base Line. In 1914, the Core Telephone Co. was formed to operate a rural line and he was named president, holding that office ever since. He was also a director of the Bank of Commerce, Picton.

Mr. Tripp was a member of Pentecostal Church.

The late Mr. Tripp married their Golden Wedding four years ago.

Frozen Hydrant Hampers Firemen

Discovery of a frozen fire hydrant at the end of Grier Street considerably hampered efforts of the Belleville Fire Brigade to fight a barn blaze on College Street, Wednesday afternoon with the result that the building was completely destroyed, together with an automobile stored therein, with another nearby barn being damaged before the blaze was brought under control.

Owner of the car which was destroyed in the blaze was Mr. Arnold Valleau, College Street, while the barn damaged by fire belonged to Mr. Jos. McEwen, corner of Geddes and College Street. Total damage was estimated by Fire Chief Lynch to be in the neighborhood of $600 or $700.

With the barn already well ablaze when firemen arrived on the scene following the turning in of the alarm, 400 feet of hose was run from the Grier Street hydrant but no pressure was available when the water was turned on. Then neighbor to immediately contacted the flames, firemen were forced to run another 400 feet of hose to the Geddes Street hydrant before water pressure was available from it. The barn was then almost entirely consumed and firemen concentrated their attention on the combustible flames in the McEwen building.

No other dam was answered by the department during the day, this being a much investigation at 168 Albert Street. The garage, in the rear of the house in the manner become ablaze and the owner, at loss to ascertain the origin of the smoke ceased to investigate further when he found the door Up there to welcome me.

Damage is estimated by her husband, sons and daughters.

William Neil Retires After 36 Years Service

After almost 36 years as an employee with the Canadian National Railways in the role of a fireman and locomotive engineer, Mr. William Neil, 315 Ann Street, has retired from the service. He made his last run out of Belleville late in February.

Born in 1880 on a farm in Wellington county four miles from Harriston, Mr. Neil started railroading in February, 1910 in the role of a fireman. Beginning with the Grand Trunk at its Palmerston division, Mr. Neil worked on lines that centre in following years with the C.N.R. until he came to Belleville in the fall of 1932.

Serving four years as a fireman, Mr. Neil was classed as a locomotive engineer in 1914 and since coming to Belleville has been in the pool freight service between Belleville and Mimico, and this centre and Brockville. He has one son, T. Arthur Neil at the R.C.A.F., now in training at Toronto as a navigator. Also, Mr. Neil has a number of operations, overseas as an air gunner.

An ardent bowler, Mr. Neil is a member of the Belleville Bowling Club, and by his own admission "does a bit of fishing." Attention to his farm at Wellington where he has necessarily kept at a minimum the number of hours spent at recreation, but these pastimes will receive fuller attention in the future. Questioned as to whether he and Mrs. Neil will remain in Belleville, Mr. Neil replied, "I'm committed. It could be seen, however, that he still has a soft spot in his heart for the western part of the province, specially Wellington county. For the time being they will stay on in Belleville.

Torn Material From Parachute Found in North

Civilian and Air Force authorities are seeking to identify what appears to be the tattered part of a parachute that was found on the rocky land north of the 5th concession of Elzevir township by Malcolm Wood yesterday. The torn and shredded material was turned over to Chief J. C. Hayes of Tweed today, who in turn immediately notified the R.C.A.F. authorities at Trenton.

At first Chief Hayes was of the opinion the tattered pieces that had apparently been torn when blown over the rocky land, was a weather balloon. However, the customary box accompanying such weather locators was not to be found in the vicinity and the fact a number of burned matches were found adjacent to the torn material prompted Chief Hayes to report the incident to Air Force officials. In the event a parachute was missing from a training plane.

Later today R.C.A.F. officials accompanied Chief Hayes to the scene where Mr. Wood found the parachute, but reports as to subsequent findings have not been announced for Air Force officials.

IN MEMORIAM

LITTLE — In loving memory of our dear mother, Mrs. Ethel Little, who passed away March 23rd, 1945.

If I had all the world to give,
I'd give it, yes, and more,
To hear your voice and see your smile
And greet her at my door.
But all I can do, dear mother,
Is go and tend your grave
And leave behind tokens of love
To the best mother God ever made.
I like to think when life is done,
Wherever heaven may be.
That we'll be waiting at the door
Up there to welcome me.
Lovingly remembered by her

The Mayor's Workday

In the course of his working day, the mayor has to listen to a lot of sob stories. Every Jack and Jill like to weep on his shoulder. It is surprising how cheerful the mayor, or any mayor can remain, despite it all. It is the duty of the Chief Magistrate of the city to meet every citizen with a smiling face, no matter how glum he may feel himself. He must be ready and willing to shake hands with half-remembered individuals who wish to bask in the reflected glory of being seen speaking to His Worship by any friend or acquaintance who happens to pass. He is expected to take an active part in every civic function thought up by dozens of public spirited citizens who will make certain things their business, and then retire to rest upon their laurels, while His Worship dashes over to another such function so that someone else might reap a little glory and gain a mite of reputation as a civic leader. Truly, to be mayor of a city is not an easy job.

He is drafted to the committees of a dozen and more bodies that operate for the welfare of the community, and even though he himself hardly believes some times that anything he might say could have any profound meaning, if he said it, his every word is heavy with the weight of his office and awaited by each committee yearning as the ancients awaited the effusions of the Oracle. From church to city council, to traffic control commission; to fire prevention commission, to Red Cross campaigns, Victory Loans, to raising funds for the adoption of a ship to be known as "H.M.C.S. Belleville," to luncheons, dinners, banquets and post-war commission, and finally home to rest. Of course the week has its reward in more than one way but our hats are off to Mayor Rollins and the hundreds of other mayors throughout the country, in tribute for a job well done.

A Greater National Spirit

A truer Canadian national spirit, the understanding of the responsibilities of this country which is theirs by right of birth, or by the privilege of adoption, becomes a major consideration of the post-war development period as it will affect Canada and Canadians. "See Canada First" ought to be the slogan blazoned across the nine provinces from coast to coast when once again the governmental and patriotic restrictions have been removed by victory. The phrase is not new, it has been used before by Canadian tourist bureaus, and by the American Chamber of Commerce, but its meaning cannot be altered by the fact, anymore than the beauty of the Canadian Rockies can be dimmed by having once been seen; the second vision nearly always brings out indescribable wonders which had previously been unnoticed.

Too often Canadians are heard extolling the beauties of Southern California, the Adirondacks and the Catskills and the Wisconsin Lakes District while they admit they have never seen our Canadian Rockies in the West, nor the Land of Evangeline in the East.

Lack of Canadian national spirit as outlined by Mr. Russell T. Kelley in an address here this week also means a more considerate trade relationship between East and West and with the central provinces of Ontario and Manitoba. Fifteen per cent of the world's supply of coal lies under Canadian soil, yet $60,000,000 annually, from Ontario alone, is sent out to other countries to be imported in what we have in superabundant quantities but leave undeveloped. Coal purchased by Ontario from the Maritimes and Alberta means less purchases from Ontario by these eastern and western provinces, creating a balance of internal trade which would mean greater prosperity, and a truer Canadian national spirit.

Not everyone in Canada can afford to travel across the Dominion as a means of developing a truer and greater national spirit, but each one of us can contribute to the expansion of this spirit by "Canadianizing" our comparisons, developing an interest in what is being done in Canada by Canadians for Canadians instead of by Canadians contributing blindly to a prematurely-conceived, superior, commercial America: 40,000,000 American magazines and 20,000,000 American weekly newspapers read annually by Canadians, while Canadian magazines and newspapers rate a second place. Fifty per cent of the radio programs listened to by Canadians originate in the United States, while practically one hundred per cent of the motion pictures Canadians pay admission prices to see are filmed in the United States, and often featuring Canadian-born stars and feature players.

Canada is a vast country with a comparatively small population; two languages are spoken by Canadians; still, unlike the British Isles and the United States, there is slight difference in accent in the English tongue whether it is spoken in Vancouver in Halifax which goes far toward making a truer Canadian national spirit possible. But language alone cannot accomplish a national unity; reciprocation of trade, exchange of ideas, sharing of experience and knowledge, and brotherly consideration must be the key-notes of Canadian unison.

What's in a Tune

(Christian Science Monitor)

What makes a popular song popular?

Why, for instance, has Alice-Blue Gown survived the years? It's not a love song. It touches no deep emotion. It's just a song about a girl and her feminine pride in a new dress. What did it have to make it live? An exceptionally pretty tune, some argued.

What made "White Christmas" one of the most popular tunes of its kind ever written? It struck a responsive chord in many hearts. It was a song for everyone. All that was it. That was the secret.

"White Cliffs of Dover" soared to quick fame on the radio's wings during the London Blitz. It reflected the deep public sympathy for the spirit of England and carried a promise of better times. Now they had it, thought the song-writers. A song to be popular must touch a current subject or thought.

Then came "deep in the Heart of Texas." All of America clapped it out as heartily as natives of the Lone Star State. Here, at last, was the formula—a theme that stirs national pride.

Would-be popular song writers took a deep breath. They had clues. They were getting warm. That elusive thing that captivates public favor was almost definable. But something suddenly upset all their calculations. It was "Marizy Doats." And now they're right back where they started. What makes a popular song popular? It's the $64 question, ladies and gentlemen. Take it or leave it!

Britain's Medical Research Council is drying human blood for transfusion at the rate of 3,500 bottles a week. The Council co-operates with the Ministry of Health's Regional Transfusion Service and the Army Blood Transfusion Service. All blood is given freely by volunteers. Britain began drying blood for this purpose in 1939; by 1942, 26,000 bottles were ready. The Germans were relying on "whole blood" until the beginning of the Libyan campaign.

JUST FOLKS

By EDGAR A. GUEST
(Copyright, 1944, Edgar A. Guest)

THE GRANDPA BUSINESS

It's the business of a grandpa, if he really knows his trade,
Of the bossy ways of women to be wholly unafraid.
He must offer joys forbidden, such as cones and lemon pop,
And be very, very liberal at the nearest candy shop.
He must close his ears to scolding and when grandma questions why
Little Ellen wants no supper, he must merely wink his eye.

It's the business of a grandpa to do many things unwise;
To forget all rules of diet when it comes to cake and pies.
He must get the jar of cookies when it's on too high a shelf
For that hungry little fellow to get to it by himself.
And when another starts complaining of such folly, day by day,
And insists he'll spoil the youngster, he must up and walk away.

If you hope to be a grandpa who is worthy of the name,
Hear the way we fellows do it who have learned to play the game.
Always listen to the woman when they're telling what is what,
What is good for little children and what certainly is not;
Nod your head in full agreement, but when little children tease,
For some pleasure that's forbidden—do exactly as you please.

What Happens to Money

(W. L. Clark in Windsor Star)

Supposing a man has money invested in some company and he is anxious to make some provision for his wife, should he die and she survive him. Between them, the man and his widow pay a flock of taxes.

To begin with, before the company can pay the man any return on his investment, it is compelled to pay a tax on the dividend.

Then, having received what is left of the dividend after the initial taxation, the man, himself, has to pay tax on what he gets. That cuts the dividend away down.

Then, when the man dies, both the Dominion and Ontario (if he lives in Ontario) step in and collect succession duties from the inheritance. What is left, the man has arranged, is to be paid to his widow as an annuity.

Then, she has to pay income taxes on the annuity she receives from what taxation has left of her husband's estate.

It's a mess enough he had left his widow well provided for. But, that was before he sat down to figure out how taxation was going to eat up the money from all quarters.

A Canadian officer had a drink in a club and was about to go to bed. Then he met an old friend, stopped for another drink. At that moment a German bomb fell, smashed half the building in front of cement on his pillow..... you sleep?" Canadian officer, sleepily: "Yours a Bar, you HAVE to go!".....Sign in Glasgow hotel: "Gentlemen's Hairdressing Saloon" Glasgow: The Englishman mentioned above, Hugh Cleverly Bell, London Daily Telegraph, is spending two months in the United States and Canada reporting on North America's war effort.

We didn't see an egg in England during the whole time we were there. Every one of the many Canadians who came upon eggs in private homes.... Scrambled eggs of the dried variety. They have a knack of making a depressing concoction..... Experts said they could tell from them very fresh from the pan.

Bath tubs are rare. Even in London's bunk cabin of a liner which now is a troopship—two tiers of three bunks each—there are only two bunks are occupied..... This is war-time Britain..... The average citizen, who is there a table, and one chair, is on a husband while I sit on the metal fender-seat of the single cot..... United Kingdom has a shortage of bathtubs.

Tea and a cookie in a London Woolworth store was sumptuous.... in a luxury hotel it would be mere mailings..... Everything was strictly utilitarian: very little in the way of decoration, except in metal gadgets..... Silk stockings are practically unobtainable..... Hosts of girls go bare-legged on the streets even in winter..... Cheese is Britain's most plentiful foodstuff; fortunately we had brought our own..... Baths are hard to get. Southampton charged a deposit of 10 shillings for the urgence for a towel, returned the following morning when the towel was bandied. Glasgow's charge was fifty cents

Canadian 'Fags' Appreciated By Boys Overseas

In every reply from overseas regarding the sending of Canadian cigarettes to Canada's fighting men the appeal is the same, an urge to step up the tempo of shipments. For instance Bdr. Harold Reid, former Belleville athlete, writes from Italy—"Believe me a good Canadian cigarette is the ideal gift and we hope you people back home will be able to keep up the good work of sending smokes."

Chairman "Buster" LaBarr received some forty replies of a similar nature all urging the continuance of the Kinsmen Fag Fund. "It is a grand job you are doing and how well we realize it," wrote Pat Logue, while Ed. Hopkins pointed out in his letter he had been away going on five years and the only home ties were the letters from home and cigarettes received from various fag funds. Leo Goyer added his thanks and wrote to say Sergt. Don Thomas, a Kinsmen, now in Italy, had left his unit to take an officers' course.

In order to carry on their Fag Fund and Milk for Britain Fund the Belleville Kinsmen are holding a "Monte Carlo" carnival at the Belleville Armouries four nights next week commencing March 25th. High class radio and stage entertainment will be featured a band and the conventional Kinsmen bingo and games. The net proceeds will go to the clubs two war projects.

The following Belleville boys were sent individual shipments of 300 cigarettes each by the Kinsmen Fag Fund this week:

NOW CARRY BLOCKBUSTERS

London, March 23 —(CP)— Some of Britain's 400-mile-an-hour Mosquito bombers which disturb Germany nightly now can carry two-ton blockbusters, the R.A.F. commentator said today.

The celebrated all-wooden planes were designed originally for 1,000-pound bomb loads.

The nightly Mosquito incursions into Germany generally are in forces of from 12 to 20 planes. The commentator said the Mosquitos had flown 300 daylight sorties this year through March 17, striking deep into Europe seeking stray planes in the air and shooting up German air fields.

LA GUARDIA FOR ROOSEVELT

New York, March 23 —(AP)— Mayor La Guardia yesterday urged opposing factions within the American Labor Party to settle their differences in the interest of "a common objective"—the renomination and re-election of President Roosevelt.

Mr. Stalin Has His Own Way As Roosevelt Bows to His Will

It happened in Teheran a little while ago.

When word came of the plot to assassinate either Prime Minister Winston Churchill, Marshal Josef V. Stalin or President Roosevelt as they went back and forth between their embassies for their conferences, both Mr. Churchill and Mr. Stalin invited Mr. Roosevelt to come and live with them.

As the Russian and British embassies are side by side in Teheran, the meetings could be held there without ever leaving those buildings but the difficulty confronting Mr. Roosevelt in accepting one invitation without being misunderstood by the other would-be host. Harry Hopkins went to see Mr. Churchill, and found him most understanding. Other invitation was accepted, and Mr. Roosevelt moved over to Mr. Stalin's.

But that did not solve everything. When Mr. Roosevelt or Mr. Stalin wanted to give a dinner, it had to be given in the Russian embassy no matter who gave it, and the fact that the American president was under United States secret service guard did not mean anything to the Russians. They had their GPU there, too, standing watch alongside the Americans. Whenever a door was swung open, even a bathroom door, two agents popped up.

President Roosevelt decided he would give the first dinner, so regular United States army cooks were brought in for the guests from Russia, Great Britain and the United States. Mr. Roosevelt, sitting in the center of the head table, placed Mr. Stalin at his right, Mr. Churchill at his left. Next night, Mr. Stalin gave a dinner in the same place, and insisted that Mr. Roosevelt sit just where he had the night before between the two men.

"But," protested Mr. Roosevelt to Mr. Stalin, "this is your party."

"But," responded Mr. Stalin, "this is my house."

Mr. Roosevelt sat where he was told.

Eerie surroundings of bats, bodies and skeletons, pale faces under candlelight and strains of weird music made a perfectly realistic setting for the ghost party in the gymnasium of the Y.M.C.A. on Wednesday night. Adding to the interest and success of the evening was the scene of Ann Boyln walking the plank, the ghost of Captain Kidd and witch being cleverly enacted by Mary Jeffrey and Jean Gladjoy and LAC. Speedy Dressing Poor Idea

Screen star Carole Landis is met luncheon in every dressing detail

By HELEN FOLLETT

"IF I'VE HAD my bath," says the highly energized girl who is always at top speed, "I can dress in five minutes. Panties and stockings, shoes, stockings and frock, and then I rake my hair with a comb, fling on the war paint and I'm ready to go."

Ho-hummm! . . . with what results? Why try to break records? What's the idea? The seams of her stockings will be crooked. Her hair will be more or less scrambled. Her shoes may need a bit of polish. It takes time to put oneself neatly together.

The business of getting into a foundation garment should not be rushed, there's a lot of excess flesh on the tummy, it must be uplifted and held in. Wires have to adjust hose supporters. Stockings, especially war hosiery, must be pulled snug and smooth so they will stay put.

Lingerie can't be flung on. Undies should fit snugly so they won't make bumps and humps under the frock. They are a symmetrical composition of the outer garment. Fastidious ladies have their panties fitted, made to order. Fancy that!

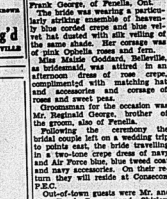
Applying Make-up

The hurried dresser trails around with the cosmetics, even ways for Sunday, carries dabs of rouge, instead of neatly blended blushes.

It takes a bit of time to condition the complexion for make-up. There should be an anointing with a thin cream, every bit as much as for evening dames. Or a foundation cosmetic can be well rubbed into the flesh. Powder must be applied carefully, the surplus removed with a camel's hair brush made for the purpose.

Then comes getting into a foundation garment should not be hurried, there's a lot of excess flesh on the tummy, it must be uplifted and held in. Wires have to adjust hose supporters. Stockings, especially war hosiery, must be pulled snug and smooth so they will stay put.

Lingerie can't be flung on. Undies should fit snugly so they won't



Well, if you were the tide, away out, wouldn't you come in for a look at anything as gorgeous as this? The lovely lady is Ava Gardner, of whom no less a judge than Lionel Barrymore said: "She's got what it takes." Who are we, to differ.

Child Should Learn Care of Property

By GARRY CLEVELAND MYERS, Ph.D.

BASIC TO educating the child in good character and citizenship is the training from the beginning to be a careful owner of property. If he is to learn to be careful of the property of others and of the public he must first learn to be careful of his own property and the furniture and other things in and about the home.

Many parents need to set a good example, especially in regard to such things, to respect and protect them, not letting others in the family harm his things or use them without his permission. It is especially important for us to see that the baby and young child does not appropriate, tear or destroy the things which belong to the older brother or sister.

Foolishly many parents will constantly compel the older child to give up his own things, even his most cherished possessions, to a younger child. Of course, we want our children to share but we succeed best in this direction as we first acknowledge the child's ownership and respect and protect this ownership. Then we help him feel safe in sharing—and does share let us heartily approve.

Should Be Respected

We help the child learn to be careful of his own things (if he does not have too many of them) when we respect his property and patient guidance. Giving him many lessons daily, we thank you, we show him how to use them so as not to injure them or to destroy things with them. For example, when he gets a metal toy we spend time with him showing him just where to use it properly so he will not mar the surface with it and so on. If he has a ball he can throw we show him how. Only when he can do so with safety to himself and property.

The tot will soon discover fun from climbing into chair or upon other furniture, jumping up and down on cushioned furniture or the floor, but will profit from the beginning, spanking if necessary. Nor shall he allow any child to run boisterously after another in the house, in a store or any other public place. He will learn, progressively at home, he will hardly do otherwise in Sunday School or in the homes of others.

In Neighbor's Home

When you go with your tot to the home of another person strictly require that he does not rush about, feel, heavy, handle things or go places not considerate of the home or comfort of the host.

Such desirable restraint becomes most effective with the child to whom you have read daily from the age of 18 months or earlier, using books in improvised dramatizing, creating with crayons, paper, plasticine, cardboard, wood and the like, and playing non-running games indoors.

GOOD MANNERS

By MRS. CORNELIUS BEECKMAN

Choice of Godparents

Dear Mrs. Beeckman,

I am so busy and so is my husband that I am constantly confused as to the subject of godmothers and godfathers. Will you please enlighten me?

1. Does every baby have a godmother and godfather, or does a boy have a godfather and a girl a godmother?

2. Is the godfather necessarily the one the baby is named after?

3. What are the duties of a godmother? Of a godfather?

4. How do you inform someone that he or she is to be a godparent of your child?

5. If you wish to make your son a "junior", is it absolutely necessary for him to have the same middle name as his father has?

—O. C.

1. The number of godparents varies, and in some faiths is specified by the rules. The Roman Catholic Church provides that there shall be two, a godfather and a godmother. Protestant custom sometimes has two godmother for a boy, sometimes one a girl, and two godfathers and one godmother for a boy, sometimes one godmother for a boy, sometimes one of each, sometimes two of each. You should consult with the minister who is to perform the christening ceremony, as to the rule and custom of your church.

2. No. The naming of the baby need have nothing to do with the name of a godparent.

3. The duties of godparents, besides making the proper responses and promising certain things in the christening service, are to be interested in the religious training of the child, in his or her education and career, and to remember important events in the godchild's life such as birthdays, graduations, and so forth. A godparent gives a distinguishing gift to a child. Being a godparent involves no financial obligation; but if material help is ever needed, a godparent should be willing to give it according to his or her ability. The real responsibility one assumes in being a godparent is a moral one.

4. Whenever possible, the invitation to be a godparent is given by word of mouth. An informal note carries this respect if he or she lives at a distance.

5. Yes, a "junior" must have exactly the same name as his father. A different middle name means that the "junior" is not used.

Hold Up Plans For Showers

Dear Mrs. Beeckman,

The betrothal of a friend of mine was recently announced by her parents. No date has been set for the wedding, and the bride-to-be says it will not be soon... in fact, that they may even wait until the war is over. Since this girl is a very close friend of mine, do you think that I ought to entertain now with a luncheon or dinner party in her honor? Don't you think that any sort of shower given at this time would be a bit out-of-order? Would it be correct for me to wait until a definite date has been set for the wedding and then give a luncheon-shower for her?

—T. B.

If I were you I wouldn't plan to give any kind of shower for your friend until her wedding date is set. Showers are usually given just before the wedding. But if now you would like to give a party in her honor, of a congratulatory celebration, this would, of course, be proper and a most friendly gesture. It may be a dinner or luncheon, but just as properly and far less expensively, it may be a late-afternoon party, say on Sunday when many guests, both girls and men, could be invited.

BEAUTY By Helen Jameson

Get Your Beauty Sleep, Lady.

Insomnia is on the increase, reports the gentlemen of the medical profession. Many women are overworking, are too tired to sleep. Many are carrying new and heavier responsibilities. Also, there are anxious wives and mothers thinking of dear ones in the armed forces, worrying about them, longing for their return. If there ever was a time when we should endeavor to seek complete relaxation and restful sleep, it is now. We need it.

Lucky is the sleeper, who can summon the mind man, drop off to sleep like a tired child. She will postpone the day when the evidence of birthdays—and there are many of some, gray hair—cannot be missed. She has a great advantage over the restless dear who stays awake for hours drags herself out of bed in the morning feeling like a wreck. Insomnia victims wear out their families with their complaints; they should be forgiven.

The sound sleeper who always gets in her eight hours, will get up in the morning refreshed, breezy, full of courage. Her nervous system isn't yowling; it is purring sweetly. She has recharged her energy motors, is ready for anything that the day may bring. She knows that, without sufficient sleep, the fatigue bugs will start working before noon, that she will drag her heels the rest of the day.

A good rule for the light sleeper and the one who stays awake for the long periods in the night—have a light dinner. Get your mattress and pillow in the middle of the day; some digestive disturbance may be the cause of wakefulness. Just before going to bed have a bowlful of crackers and milk.

A warm bath may or may not help. It is worth trying. Don't make it a festival of it; let the bath be just in the warm water, close your eyes, relax completely. Then, still, brown by soak to bed with you. When you feel your eyelids drooping, turn on your right, make yourself feel heavy. Fancy yourself a log in a deep, dark forest. Breathe deeply and slowly; with each inhalation and exhalation think of the word sleep. The idea is to close the doors of your mind against disturbing or exciting thoughts. Unless the mind is at peace, there cannot be complete relaxation.

If you don't sleep, don't worry about it. Worry will wear you out more completely than will lack of sleep. At least, you are resting.

Have fresh air in the bedroom. Have a high grade, comfortable mattress, even though you may have to forego some luxury to get one. Good food and good beds are essential to the health and well-being of the family.

Covers should be warm, but not heavy. The high pillow is more likely to interfere with free, full breathing than is the low one.

London Quarters Of Canuck Wrens Quite Feminine

BY MARGARET BOURKE-WHITE

(Canadian Press Staff Writer.)

London, March 22 (CP)—Some 'ills of a Canadian Wren serving in London is not practical, but it's nice.

There's no rolling deck, only the floor of Canadian naval headquarters under their feet, as they go to work as clerks and postal workers, and there isn't much seasickness atmosphere about their quarters which they share with 400 British Wrens in a London suburb.

But say Wren will tell you that new postal jobs are as happy and as desirable as they. They are among the best fed girls in England.

No other Canadian women's service works and lives as closely with British service women as does the Wrens. And it has worked. British and Canadian Wrens have become the best of friends at work and at play.

Quarters life isn't as nautical as the quarterdeck and your Wren hostess hurries just to remind you not come aboard as she would do Canada. Canadian Wrens live in a big, well-run women's club, shiny clean, by day or night. Lonely London girls, Lieut. Margaret Mackie of Victoria, Sub Lieut. Joyce Lessel of Winnipeg and I ate in the cheery, yay un-barrackslike officers' dining room. The only feminine touch was more feminine than usual among uniformed women of the Canadian Wrens and British Wrens are not under naval disciplines as the Canadians are.

When dinner finished the Wrens were in the middle of their evening. "It's 'relaxin'" time here (by Wren retain) a London dancing teacher comes among Wrens and some men from the Royal Corps of Signals in ballroom dancing.

Mollie Lindsay of Port Qu'Appelle, Sask., was still thinking of her dinner. "I've eat a lot better than I expected," she said. "Canada, Canada."

When Bunty Greene of Vancouver was telling me about the hairdresser's room, where two Wren hairdressers were proving the secret of why the girls of their service are so attractive. Bunty explained that Wrens get a free shampoo and finger wave every fortnight but they can have extra "haircuts" for the equivalent of 13 cents.

They call their rooms "cabins" in quarters and they are as ship-shape as that. Here again the Wrens live up to their reputations as the most families of the women's services. Each room has a washstand and there are pretty bedspreads on the beds which are barracks style. Pictures are allowed on walls, and they were all pictures of ships in the fight of Petty Officer Helen Booth of Vancouver and Petty Officer Betty Allen of Winnipeg.

Wrens at home, are just like any other girls. When Margaret Barclay of Ottawa lounged comfortably in a deep armchair in the library after dinner Wren Pat Macoun of Ottawa. They opened the third in a series of books by the guy of Toronto was having a bath.

Next door Wren Marjorie Warren of Hamilton and Ottawa and Wren Margaret Margaret of Hamilton listened to a dance-band program broadcast from their radio. Wren Jean Grimstick of Winnipeg shut her door firmly from the sound. "I'm studying for a trade exam," she explained.

Not all Wrens were relaxing. Leading Wren Kathleen Jones of Port William think of the word sleep. The idea is to close the doors of your mind against disturbing or exciting thoughts. Unless the mind is

Fashion Flashes

A BAG TO TREASURE is in fine capeskin in deep red with all-over quilted and padded design. Wide, flat handle of smooth leather.

NOT EASY to resist the appeal of the new hats. Ready for evening duty is a tiny hat, a chou of sheer black lace braid trimmed with tiny clusters of pink satin roses.

A TREAT for any suit, whether tailored or of the soft variety would be a lovely blouse of fine striped red, white and blue chiffon. The neckline tied in a big soft soft bow.

GOOD THINGS come in twos, and so the shops have scarves with hat and bag or bag and glove sets. A smart hat and bag ensemble is of red and white checked taffeta, the hat trimmed either side with navy bliss cabbage roses. The bag of red and white checked taffeta has pipings and lining of navy blue taffeta.

THEY SING OF SHINO say the shops in describing the navy prints. A charming print is of white silk jersey with a thistle and leaf print in blue and white. Square neckline with bows and fuchsia pinks add.

NOTHING CAN LOOK as classy or as smart as black satin. Black satin, beautifully handled, is used for an afternoon dress with deep square yoke and frilled neckline matched by narrow velvet lacing through tiny rhinestone eyelets. Neckline is edged with pleated chiffon ruffles in palest cream.

Corvette Crew Boards Blazing Gasoline Tanker

An East Coast Canadian Port, March 24.—(CP)—Stories of fighting a series of attacks against submarines in the eastern Atlantic, men of the Canadian corvette Cobalt boarded the blazing gasoline tanker and saved the ship and its cargo from destruction.

For Skipper Cobalt, Cobalt's captain, Lt.-Cmdr. R. A. Hodgins, Toronto, it was mentioning in dispatches for the year—and in the navy's decorations and awards list, and the George Medal was awarded Stoker Petty Officer Neil of Toronto, who led the fire party; Engine Room Artificer J. A. Wershler, of Sorel, Que., and Signalman M. J. Fitzgerald of Toronto, each were awarded the British Empire Medal.

The tanker, bound for Britain, collided in a fog at night with another merchant ship, and burst into flames. Cobalt's crewmen, screening the rear of the convoy against U-boats, thought it was a submarine attack.

Cmdr. Judges said that just as a red glare was noticed in the fog, the corvette's audio operator picked up the "hydrophone effect" of a torpedo coming at us." Cobalt altered course towards the torpedo, picked up a strong submarine contact and fired one shot then another depth charge pattern.

After a third attack, the crew could scarcely see the surface of the sea and heard "an underwater explosion that could not be classified as a depth charge," Judges said, "we had reason to feel we were giving a good account of ourselves."

The tanker was still blazing when Cobalt docked, but the corvette never thought she looked salvageable. Male then headed fire-fighting equipment into a seabost, took Wershler and Fitzgerald with him, and "we went to the burning ship. In two hours they had the fires out."

"Everything above the main deck resembled Dante's Hell," he said, "when the fires were out we discovered we had saved more than 90 per cent of the cargo of gasoline and by the time we left the ship she was ready to be towed into port."

LONDON.—(CP)— Late workers in central London will soon have more street lighting to guide them around in the blackout. Gas lamps are being installed in a number of badly-blitzed streets.

Many Soldiers Eligible For 1939-43 Star

By WILLIAM STEWART
Canadian Press Staff Writer

London, March 24.—(CP)—Canadian soldiers who have served in France, Hong Kong and Sicily are eligible for the 1939-43 Star, it was disclosed today in the House of Commons. Troops who participated in the Spitsbergen and Dieppe raids are also eligible.

The list of qualifications for the award was given to the House by Sir Archibald Sinclair, the Air Secretary, after a statement by Prime Minister Churchill on policy governing the issue of it and other awards.

Sir Archibald revealed that air crew participating in the Aleutian Islands campaign also will receive the award.

Service in Italy was not included among the qualifications, for which there may be further additions.

Sir Archibald explained that one day for each month in the campaigns he listed qualified a serving man for the award. The campaigns are as follows:

France, Belgium, Holland, Norway, Greece, Crete, Northwest India, Eritrea, Syria, Spitsbergen, Hong Kong, Malaya, Yasgo, Burma, Brunei, Java, Sumatra, Libya, Madagascar, Boulogne, Le Touquet, Aleutian Islands (air crew service only), Dieppe, Sark and Sicily.

Air Strength Is Now Unified For Invasion

By LOUIS V. HUNTER
(Canadian Press Staff Writer)

London, March 24.—(CP)—Britain's air power is being reorganized in the light of the lessons learned in the Mediterranean in the co-ordination of land, sea and air forces, and the first practical test came with the abolition of Fighter Command and the establishment in its place of the newly-established Home Command and Defence of Great Britain.

The change was announced in the House of Commons by Air Minister Sir Archibald Sinclair, foreshadowed by Prime Minister Chamberlain in his address to the nation on the Czech crisis. It was the first time the established Fighter Command, Bomber Command organization in Britain had been upset. The change was brought in after a series of professional consultations with strictly defined duties and equipment, either as fighter or bomber, will be established.

They would be replaced by strictly operational commands of each, complete in all strength, of aircraft with fighter, bomber and other specialized equipment, and designed for short-range tactical or long-range strategical duties.

Fighter Command and Army Co-operation Command of a year ago have been combined with the American Ninth Air Force in a new organization called the Allied Expeditionary Air Force under Air Chief Marshal Sir Trafford Leigh-Mallory, formerly chief of Fighter Command.

Within the framework of the A.E.A.F. are the Second British Tactical Air Force, commanded by Air Marshal Sir Arthur Coningham and the American Ninth under Maj.-Gen. Lewis Brereton and they will be available for the support of operations on the European Continent.

Preamble For Defence

The first reforms of Great Britain force, under Air Marshal Sir Roderic Hill is responsible for the air defence of Great Britain, United Kingdom.

In the words of Sir Archibald Sinclair: "We have thus separated the Fighter Command and the defensive function while at the same time unifying them as the Bomber Command and the offensive functions ashed."

Air Marshal T.L.F. shoots much of the fighter and fighter bomber strength of Fighter Command, the new medium and light bombers based in Britain and the whole of the Bomber Command will be established within the operational framework of Air Chief Marshal, under Air Marshal John C' Allan.

"The force is much larger than the entire R.A.F. at the outbreak of war, and its equipment, ranging from the latest types of aircraft, is under specialized ground-attack, bombing and long-flying defence will allow the operational units which characterized the work of the air battle in the Mediterranean.

R.A.F. Bomber Command and the United Air Forces in Europe have not been brought into the war-to-go pact, but it is expected that the "nesties" will complete their long-range bombing of vital industrial and vital production and communication centres until Hitler's generals and staff officers decide their striking power should be added to the close support of the land armies.

Smuts' Prestige Important Factor In Empire Parley

By ROSS MUNRO
(Canadian Press Staff Writer)

London, March 23—(CP)—Field Marshal Jan Smuts, South African premier, is the most picturesque Field Marshal Jan Smuts, will confer long in London from Monday when the conference of Dominion prime ministers gets under way. Years of wisdom and valour in Empire and world affairs to those Empire statesmen, Smuts' stature as an Empire figure has grown steadily. His prestige has he acknowledged to be one of the most progressive international statesmen of the day.

His "explosive" speech here before the Empire parliamentary association last December caused a sensation around the world but his straight-forward, uncompromising presentation of his own and South Africa's position was admired by many who find too little realism in current declarations on peace and future international relations.

At the conference here Smuts will be the key figure. Listening to his spoken decisive, intensely sincere and earnest, opinionated and somewhat impatient.

After the last war when his great friend and confidant in South Africa, Botha, died suddenly and Smuts became prime minister, he went to his first cabinet meeting. Stirred to the depths by his grief, he spoke words that have real insight into his own character. "I have no friends," he have neither just nor patience, and you must take me for what I am."

South Africa has taken him for what he is, in office and out, and they have fought the very hard battles abroad direction. Britain takes him for what he is, created him a Field Marshal in the British army and made him a member of the War Cabinet.

Conference Welcome

The conference is a welcome meeting for him and he will undoubtedly sit in on his conception of Empire unity, British Commonwealth, particularly his ideas of new groupings of colonies under Dominion influence and status. With the other three prime ministers he will discuss his fear of the timidity of Britain, Russia and the United States, his knowledge of Germany's power in the post-war international organization, to preserve world peace.

To see him in the new Air Ministries to be this lack of concrete leadership and power vested in the top nations to the advantage of all, great or small.

Smuts will come to London with a shining record in smuttering South Africa's attitude for the war in support of the Allied cause. The country was formerly neutral and the war yet Smuts transformed it from a land of unions and agriculture into a land of industry, especially munity and developed the army and the air force. He has made such a magnificent part in the Mediterranean war.

Smuts' leadership has been the crowning achievement of his long and strenuous life, its end in this war he fought the British as a conscientious leader but he fits devoted all his energies to eradicating the ill-feeling between the Boers and the British.

His service to South Africa, Britain and the Empire in the two wars and during peace has been as great as any man's and the conference will mark another milestone for this soldier, scholar and visionary.

Collective Farming Subject of Talk

Collective farming in Russia was discussed by John J. Wright, of Stouffville before members of the Kiwanis Club at their weekly luncheon at the Quinte Hotel on Thursday. Jack McVeigh was in the chair and Earl Rose was sergeant-at-arms with Ted Selwood leading the community singing with Leo B. Ilges at the piano. Mr. Wright, recently appointed chairman of the Blood Donor committee spoke briefly on the matter, by for a large representation of the membership at the meeting next when the three service clubs of the city will provide the donors. "It is your duty to do your part, for if you cannot give blood" said the speaker, "you should know that last year over 12,000 donations were given, the majority by Air Force personnel and those residing outside the city. This is partly caused by little organization in the city but in the near future we hope to alleviate this condition and that the city will show a decided increase in the number of donors" said Mr. Wright.

The members were asked to be on hand for the Inter-city meeting to take place on London evening next, when the newly formed Cobourg Club will have luncheon with the local club. The speaker was introduced by Jack White, chairman of the agricultural committee and Kiwanis appreciation was expressed by Ray Grant. Mr. White, who made a trip to Russia in study collective farming showed that considerable progress had been made by the landed gravity of the introduction shortly after the Revolution in 1917. Before the Revolution the land was held by the village community, but after it was seized by the state and this was necessary to increase production of the totally neglected industry. He showed how the land had been divided in strips, some far from the other but under the new system each was given a parcel of land together, which they worked with others of the group.

Mr. White showed how the people had adopted the most scientific methods of farming and how the product had been increased and improved. The address was most interesting and instructive.

London, March 24 — (CP) — Friends of Prime Minister Churchill tell this story:

There is a brilliant Oxford University economist attached to the British Embassy in Washington from where he assesses United States opinion of Britain. It is said with that has endeared his reports to the Prime Minister. The economist is Isiah Berlin and the reports are signed simply "I. Berlin."

Mr. Churchill read of the arrival in Britain of Irving Berlin. "This must be the fellow," he said, and ordered immediate reports from Washington," he said. "A most versatile fellow, sat him down to write his comment when he read too, that this Berlin had written many hit songs.

So peep-swirler Berlin went to lunch at 10 Downing St. The Prime Minister touched on various weighty matters — discussion ranging to the second front, the presidential election, the latest Washington political guess. The replies were not exactly what Mr. Churchill expected.

It began to dawn on him near the end of the lunch that there had been a case of mistaken identity, but he didn't let on to Berlin.

M. P.'s say Mr. Churchill is telling the story against himself with relish.

Emmanuel Shinwell, one of Britain's foremost critics of Chamberlain's policy, believes that there is no case for an end to criticism of the government.

Leader of the Labor M. P.'s, Mr. Shinwell told his constituents he believed it was the duty of everyone to back the government at the moment "when we are on the eve of striking blows which will call for the greatest fortitude."

The disclosure that Left-Wing elements in British politics have landed up together until, in effect, they operate as a single party has itself given Prime Minister Churchill useful activities.

Labor fear to emerge from the preliminary activities of the new coalition was that one Labor M. P. would end up at the first of its organization meetings to be announced certainly. Right here Labor found itself in a dilemma.

A statement issued after the meeting said the Independent, I.L.P. and Commonwealth members present had discussed "methods of effectively forming a Socialist majority" at the next election.

London, March 23 — (CP) — It's getting more and more difficult to make a living these war days, Murray the Magician says, when Prime Labor Minister Ernest Bevin making him look like a punk at his trick and people eating so many rabbits you can't find any to draw out of a hat.

In fact, Murray — "The Australian Illusionist" — contends that Bevin is the No. 1 exponent of the vanishing trick he learned on the Minister after seeing him brazen through at least 90 performances with only four flaw in conduct.

"I have practiced at least 50 women to help in the vanishing lady trick since the war began," Murray ex- stamps.

Mr. and Mrs. C. Hicken are planned, "and every time Mr. Bevin has taken them away, his one fault is that he doesn't let them reappear again in a hat."

Murray finally grew tired of the Bevin influence and trained his rabbits to disappear, to look after their one-year-old baby in between shows.

Shelter life is something which Mr. and Mrs. May started 1,000-odd nights ago and have never given up.

When the Germans were bombing London 240 Mr. May volunteered to be a warden at the Aldwych tube station shelter and his wife did the same. A while back, they celebrated their 1,000th night with a party for 54 of the children "regulars." In their time as wardens, Mr. and Mrs. May have sold nearly 25,000 (about $10,000) worth of savings

Mess Room Chatter Of Canada's Airmen

By WILLIAM STEWART
(Canadian Press Staff Writer)

With the R.C.A.F. Overseas March 23.—(CP)—In the first weeks of the Axis bridgehead battle Canadian fighter pilots accounted for at least nine enemy aircraft every other day. Their score is 15 enemy victims for the period.

Sqdn. Ldr. Bert Houle, D.F.C., of Massey, Ont., chairborne-control commander of the City of Windsor squadron is the leading scorer, and with three other pilots, he shot down the first enemy aircraft destroyed over the beachhead. Houle has added a second Focke-Wulf and two Messerschmitts to his score which totals 11 destroyed.

Houle's last victory was scored when with eight squadron mates, he tackled 25 Messerschmitts and Focke-Wulfs in a spectacular dogfight. Fl. Sergeant Bracken of Thetford Mines, Que., and Fl. Sergeant Hopkins, of Montreal, each got one enemy apiece.

Fl. Sgt. Ingalls of Bayham, Que., accounted for 2 1-3 enemy planes over the beachhead and W.O. W. W. Dwerryhouse, Midland, Ont., shot down two. Fl. Lt. James Francis Edward Archer, D.F.C., of North Battleford, Sask., who is starting his second operational tour, got one Focke-Wulf bringing his total score to 11 1-2 enemy planes.

Top-scoring Canadian night fighter pilot, Fl. John Turnbull, D.F.C. and Bar, St. Thomas, Ont., raised his score to 13 1-2 over Anzio. Other R.C.A.F. pilots who have scored since the Allied landing are tackled 25 Messerschmitts and Sfr. Sandy Kallio, D.F.C., of Iron-

Fl. Graham Robertson, (1 Lamport Ave.) Toronto, veteran fighter pilot with the Red Indian Squadron, says German pilots now appear to go to extremes to avoid combat with Allied airmen. Nearly all recent kills scored by his squadron have been against ships planes taking off or hedge-hopping away from airfields where attacks were expected.

FO. L. G. Coons, Morrisburg, Ont., and Sgt. Jos Neville, Douglas, Ont., who have flown in the Sicilian operation since they reached Italy last fall shared the destruction of their first Japanese fighter when they intercepted Axis Arakan coast.

Coons, a former chemistry student at Ontario Agricultural College, was graduated at Windsor, Ont., elementary flying and training school. His saw service in North Africa before he joined the R.C.A.F.

Neville was graduated at Stanley, N.B., and Dunnville, Ont., and was in the army overseas when he was in the ferry service to North Africa and Britain.

Fl. Sgt. J. P. Rhodeau, Sherbrooke, Que., baled out of a Wellington bomber shot up over enemy territory in Italy.

"As I left the aircraft my arms banged on the side of the escape hatch and the jerk caused me to pull the rip before I intended," he said. "I was thankful that I found my parachute, for I lost both flying boots. I wondered what the folks at home would have said if they'd seen me dangling in midair. I landed with a big bump in a ditch, saw a light and shouted out something I hoped might pass for Italian. I heard a Lancashire voice shout back: 'Hi, chimp! What does tha' want?'"

With the R.C.A.F. somewhere in England, March 23.—(CP)—Lac. E. M. Reid of Westmount, Que., gets credit for preventing what might have been a serious fire at an R.C.A.F. field hospital commanded by Wing Cmdr. J. M. Greene of London, Ont. A good-sized container of inflammable anesthetic caught fire but before the blaze could spread Reid had plunged in the container and rushed outside with it where the flames were put out.

Recent visitor to Buckingham Palace for an investiture was Air Vice-Marshal N. R. Anderson, deputy air officer commanding-in-chief R.C.A.F. overseas. He was invested with the insignia of the companion of the Bath, received in the New Year's honors list. Group Capt. H. G. Dunlop, Vancouver, who commanded the R.C.A.F. bomber wing which served in North Africa last summer, went along with the air vice-marshal to receive an O.B.E.

From the R.C.A.F. in India comes word that Fl. Lt. Bob Day of Vancouver has shot down his fifth Axis air victim, a Japanese fighter over the Arakan hills of Burma. It was victim No. 26 for the R.A.F. Spitfire squadron in which Day is a flight commander.

Oldest officer on flying operations, Wing-Cmdr. Lionel Cohen, D.S.O., M.C., D.F.C.—he won the D.F.C. at 58—was, it develops, the inventor of the R.A.F. Volunteer Reserve. When the war broke out the shrilly Cohen was one of a small group who talked of what they would do. He suggested those who felt they should serve should send their names to his London office. A special form was drafted and more and more men became interested in filling these out for filing with Cohen. He is now the Air Ministry head of Cohen's list and it became the foundation of the R.A.F. (V.R.) roll.

Fl. Lt. Charles Scherf, Australian Mosquito pilot with an R.C.A.F. Mosquito squadron, and WO. Roger Gurnett of Orillia, Ont., got a taste of Axis ack-ack ammunition. They got on the tail of a Ju88 fighter who, when he saw them, went into a steep dive. Scherf and Gurnett followed him down, and down and down, The German tried to pull out of his steep dive. He couldn't and he hit the ground. The team levelled off they saw him crash into the ground without their having fired a shot.

Over the Anzio bridgehead Canadians in Wellington bombers have been doing some tall flying. One of the Canadian pilots, WO. Tom Bradshaw of Edmonton, Alta., had a lot of trouble. He ordered his crew to bail out near his base and returned to the controls. He levelled out at 500 feet and landed the aircraft safely. His pal, WO. Norman Reid of Edmonton, lost his boots in the downdraft—"must have blown them off coming down," he said.

Vic Holbrook Wins Main Bout Of Kiwanis Show When K. Davis Disqualified in Second Round

Jan Gotch Wins and Loses When He Wrestles Twice in Different Bouts

PROCEEDS FOR CLINIC

Vic Holbrook, the —California wrestling whiz, proved to upwards to 1,000 patrons at the armouries Wednesday night just why he is No. 1 contender for the world's heavyweight wrestling title and perhaps that only one not convinced was his opponent, Karl "Krippler" Davis, the Texas Section of the ring. First Holbrook antagonized and tormented Davis to win the initial fall with his famed "airplane spin" stretch hold that forced Davis to cry "uncle" and my guts and then Davis took over in the second round to pummel Holbrook and have Holbrook and Referee Phil Lawson until he was finally disqualified for using the prohibited toe hold, except naturally "Krippler Karl."

The show was provided through the courtesy of Promoter Frank Tunney of the Queensbury A.C. in Toronto, with all net proceeds being given to the Belleville Kiwanis Crippled Children Clinic. Chairman Herb Reed, who directed the show, stated yesterday that the gate receipts amounted to somewhat over $300.00 from which minor expenses of staging the card would have to be deducted before the balance was given to the Clinic. Chairman Reed introduced Promoter Tunney to the spectators audience and also Jack McVeigh, President of the local Kiwanis Club, which considerable effort, owing to interruptions. President McVeigh expressed the thanks of the Kiwanis Club to all persons responsible for the success of the evening's entertainment.

Great Counter-Hold Wrestler.

Getting back to the main bout of the evening, Holbrook proved to all and sundry just why he gained the nickname of "Velocity Vic", a true exponent of counter holds and as lithe an individual as ever climbed through the ropes of a Belleville ring. Vic Holbrook left nothing to the imagination with his style of wrestling against his older and more pugnacious opponent. "Krippler" Davis who proved to be as unscrupulous a grappler as Marse Tunney has ever toured into the local squared circle. Early in the game Holbrook showed his speed and quickness, much to the glee and satisfaction of the gallery. Then the fireworks started when the Californian tantalized and tormented Davis with a movement until he suddenly gained his famed airplane hammer-lock and during the first round several times as Davis called it, a day at 34.14 mileage. Returning to the ring the first round go Davis loosed orthodox methods, to the delight of a certain faction of the three should have been counted out.

However, in the semi-final Gotch bit off a little more than the average wrestling fan cares to chew and be able to consume as he tackled Tom Tunney's protege, Jack Gold, Stanley-jack. From the outset Zaharkis and Gotch mixed plenty of fists but he promptly booted Gotch from the ring. (And that always pleases the fans when the villain is ejected). Finally Zaharkis polished Gotch off with a half nelson, body scissors and a spread eagle, that left Referee Lawson's head spinning.

Efforts to return Promoter Tunney's wrestlers to the armouries on a regular basis are entered into today by the Argyll Light Infantry.

CANADIENS MUST WIN THIS ONE

Montreal Would be in Bad Plight Going Into Toronto Two Games Down

Montreal, March 22 — (CP) — Montreal Canadiens will be out to redeem themselves tonight when the home-town fans tonight, and up their best-of-seven Stanley Cup play-off final series with Toronto Maple Leafs at the Forum.

Montreal fans were still a bit shocked today at the 3-1 thrashing handed their Canadien favorites last night. The surprise was not so much that the Leafs won but the grand exhibition of close-checking defensive play backed up by stellar goal-tending that the type of game was sufficient to beat Canadiens for the first time this year in three starts against them.

Tonight, it's strictly up to the Canucks. The Leafs announced when they arrived here that they would be satisfied to win one of the first two games here before continuing to the Queen City hoping at the least they can do now is live up to their record but is why it is vital to Canadiens, if they are not to be faced with the prospect of elimination, at least one Toronto stand two games down.

Platter May Surprise Talent in the Derby

New York, March 23 — (AP) — Eight-year-old Platter, a consistent winner from victory in the Pimlico Futurity to the Derby Trial Stakes, probably will be surprised if George D. Widener's Platter becomes the third on May 6 at Churchill Downs.

The Philadelphia sportsman never has had a starter in the Derby but he has 3 ¼-mile Derby but in Platter he has a worthy candidate for the race in the 3-year-old classic. And as if Platter wasn't enough of a threat to be also named Lucky Draw, a good performer as a two-year-old in 1933.

After bowing to such good two-year olds as Occupy, Pinky Rose and Psychic (now Granville) and Festive last year, Platter graduated in the mile and one-sixteenth of the Pimlico Futurity and came back a week later to take the Walden over the same route. In both races he came from behind.

Mowrich and Count Fleet were the only other previous winners of the Futurity that came through in the Derby.

Move to Ban Tourists Taking Game and Fish Back to U.S.A. Made in Provincial House

Former Chairman of Committee Says We Are Living In "Fool's Paradise" in Matter

DEPLETION UP

Toronto, March 23 — (CP) — W. L. Miller (L — Algoma-Manitoulin) today told the Fish and Game Committee of the Ontario Legislature that "We are living in a fool's paradise as regards to game and fish." He urged greater conservation of game and fish and a virtual ban on tourists taking fish back to the United States.

A former chairman of the committee, Mr. Miller said that despite restocking of the province there was no appreciable increase in the number of fish and urged that "drastic steps be taken with depletion if this 'export' keeps up after the present American tourist visit comes in by the thousands."

He was supported by A. A. Cassan (CCF—Nipissing).

The Committee also approved amendments to the Game and Fisheries Act which will come before the Legislature when it resumes from J. L. McDonald (PC — Stormont) about the difference in bass fishing open seasons in Ontario, Quebec and New York State along the St. Lawrence River.

Quebec Co-Operative

Quebec Deputy Minister, said Quebec is co-operating with Ontario on St. Lawrence bass fishing dates.

Game and Fisheries Minister Duncan Marshall (PC — York) State would not change its bass fishing dates to coincide with those of Quebec along the St. Lawrence, he would agree to the province making the dates so they would be the same. New York's opening date for bass fishing now is June 24 and Ontario July 1.

George Bennett (CCF—Windsor-Sandwich) proposed a motion that the committee should ask a province grant to Jack Miner to aid his efforts toward wild life conservation. After considerable discussion, the motion was ruled out of order on the ground the committee had no power to make recommendations for a money grant.

Mr. Taylor said Mr. Miner already gets an annual grant of $1,500 from the province.

The committee endorsed a motion by Thomas Wilson (PC — Lincoln) replacing of an inspector of the department at points of entry from the United States to halt practice of American tourists of illegally bringing fish into Canada, particularly in the Parry Sound area.

The point was raised by Roy Smith (CCF—Parry Sound) who complained of indiscriminate killing of game in his area. He urged all tourists coming into the province for bear-shooting should be made to carry a high-powered rifle and not of calibre or a shotgun.

To Amend Act

The proposed bill to amend the Game and Fisheries Act provides for issuing of royalties on furs which now range from five cents for muskrat to $5 for silver fox. The open season for deer hunting to be nearer Monday to Nov. 1 for the zone north of Parry Sound and Nov. 15 for the area east and south, including Renfrew County.

The bill would also provide that non-residents who desire to shoot moose bear be good until June 15, instead of expiring June 1, as at present; that greyhound dogs or any cross-breed of that strain be prohibited to pursue game or run at large on Sundays in any game area.

The daily limit of accidental rabbits would be set at six in the counties of Brant, Wentworth, Halidimand, Lambton, Lincoln, Middlesex, Oxford, Waterloo, Welland, Wentworth and York under the amendments.

DETROIT WINGS IN BAD POSITION

Detroit, March 23 — (CP) — Detroit Red Wings, defending championship, were in a bad position today in their Stanley Cup hockey play-off series with the Chicago Black Hawks.

On down after dropping the second game here Tuesday, the Red Wings were faced with a necessity of grabbing two of the next three games to get back into the battle with the ambitious Hawks, who have worked their way to a home ice advantage that probably is more important to them than to Detroit.

After tonight's second play-off game here the clubs move to Chicago for two games in the Chicago stadium, returning for the fifth and five regular season games with the Windy City. Chicago can entrain to Detroit direct there, as the Hawks must do to move to the east, but Detroit has to take the sixth game of the series — also at Chicago — regardless of what happened in two intervening clashes here.

GENERALS WIN

Games to win were 3 and qualified for Allan Cup inter-regional competition, The O.H.A. representatives won the third game of the series at Hamilton, Tuesday night but the N.O.H.A. standard-bearers were quick on the comeback to eliminate the Majors.

The Nickle Belt crew went into the 1-1 tie at the end of the first period on one goal ahead of Hamilton in the second frame, which ended with the 2-1 score and cut loose with every thing they had in the last session to win the third frame to Hamilton's lone goal.

Kilpatrick (Pye) Kelly and Al Webster figured prominently in Sudbury's triumph with two goals apiece, other scorers being Roly McKenzie, Bill Lahti and Clarence Cotton. Toronto, March 23 — (CP) — Second-guessing this year's N.H.L. playing race, it's interesting to wonder how things would have turned out if Bill Cowley had been in there the whole season. The veteran Boston centre was idle for his personal benefit and missed 14 games but finished with 71 points, just 11 less than Howie Morenz' league total.

Cowley averaged nearly two points a game. He could have piled up nearly 100 points in the 50-game schedule providing he kept up the pace. Which he likely would have bettered Clint Smith's assist record of 46 set this year. Cowley ended the season with 41 assists, four less than the former record he set in 1940-41 and equalled last year.

At an rate Cowley's total this year compares favorably with the previous record of 72. That mark was first set by Cooney Weiland of Boston in 44 games during the 1929-30 season when the puck-mad, unlimited forward passing rule was in effect. It was equalled in 50 games last year by Doug Bentley of Chicago Black Hawks whose 77 points put him in second place this season.

Was it Jealousy?

Are anti-Canadiens feeling in other N.H.L. cities was blamed by Montreal's coach Dick Irvin for Bill Durnan not taking the Calder rookie trophy to Toronto's Gus Bodnar. Commenting on The Canadian Press poll of sports writers Dick Irvin declared: Irvin told Elmer (Montreal Herald) Ferguson that it was a player hangover-current of resentment against Canadiens. Durnan deserved the award, he turned up with a good team, for the improvement of which Durnan was in large measure responsible. I think the whole thing is pretty poor sportsmanship for such discrimination by those who should know better. It's a reflection on management to be swayed by other influences."

Rank Insubordination:

Three United States infantrymen who walloped the Canadian Army Missourians by 6-0 in their soccer football game in Britain haven't much regard for commissioned officers, on the sport field at least. Survey of the lineups shows the Missourians had 14 officers, headed by a Lieutenant-Colonel, while the Americans had two. The 14 officer Missouri Army Association team absorbed little regard for the heavy weight of pips lined against them. Maybe it isn't every day a buck private gets a chance to slap an officer around.

LESSON NO. 235

By SAM GORDON
The Kibitzer

Bridge players have plenty of use for crying towel. In fact, they seldom give it a chance to dry. And much of their grief comes from not playing their hands in the safest possible way.

Conclude your practice with this pair of partnership hands:

SOUTH
♠ A K 10 9 4 3
♥ None
♦ K 3
♣ K Q J 8 4 2

♠ 8 5 2
♥ K 8 7 6 4 3
♦ 9 8 2 2
♣ A 9

You are declarer in the south at a contract of six spades. The opening lead from west is a diamond. It looks as if you must lose the second round of diamonds and then a trump trick.

If you can keep from losing a trump trick, you can afford to lose a diamond trick. If you can keep from losing a diamond trick, you can afford to lose a trump trick.

Dummy's ace of diamonds is the first trick. Suppose you take a finesse in trump right here. It your way of life, it will lose if west has the spade jack or queen. That and a quick second diamond will kill your contract.

Is there a safer play? There is, or I hope to live a pig. Shift the dummy small diamonds on the second and third rounds of diamonds and ruff with a trump trick!

Keeps for a strip-and-endplay, don't lead trumps to force out an opponent's remaining high trump. Make him trump one of your side cards with it. That may give you several advantages.

In the case here, keep leading fourth high clubs. On them, keep shifting your dummy diamonds. By the time opponent decides to trump one of your clubs, you should worry.

By that time, you still have a dummy trump left. With it, you can trump your only remaining south diamond. And that brings home the bacon.

Don't object to giving up a trick to make better use of your contract. It is like paying taxes to guarantee finesse in trump right here.

AT THE BELLE

"Old Acquaintance"

With the amazing genius of reacquaintance and variety that are the marks of genius, Bette Davis, in the Warner Bros. production of "Old Acquaintance," now on the Belle theatre screen again creates a new personality, so genuinely alive and real in everything in which concerns her becomes of absorbing interest. And since the story comes from the theatre and understanding pen of playwright John Van Druten, the film is an unforgetable and vivid experience in the dramatic play of emotional forces.

Brilliantly co-starring, Miriam Hopkins provides, in the character of self-centred Millie Drake, a dashing, boisterous vision of vivacity that to the fine and understanding silhouette of Kit Marlow.

The story subtly tells of the envy of these two women. Millie's envy of Kit's ability as a novelist exceeds those of love, Kit's translucent loyalty and serenity is great enough to endure both.

The supporting cast, headed by Gig Young, John Loder and Dolores Moran furnishes a superb ensemble. Peter Godfrey has directed searching performances of the film's stars. Vincent Sherman, one of Hollywood's most promising young directors, has handled John Van Druten's and Lenore Coffee's stunningly contrived screen play with commendable skill, and the result that "Old Acquaintance" is one of the brilliant entertainments of the year to come out of Hollywood in recent years.

"Tarzan's New York Adventure"

Tarzan is thrilled as never before with the new attraction now showing at the Capitol Theatre. Johnny Weissmuller and Maureen O'Sullivan with John Sheffield, Virginich Grey, Charles Bickford, Paul Kelly and Chill Wills.

Wild Bill Elliott

The added action hit "The Man From Thunder River" brings to the screen again Wild Bill Elliott and his comedian partner, Alcaspo "Gabby" Hayes in their newest western thriller. In "The Man From Thunder River" all unwarned a plot to steal gold ore from the pay-load of a mine owned by his friend. He sends the culprits to jail and saves the life of his friend, who has been framed in a murder charge in the course of the crooked deal.

AT THE McCARTHY

"Louisiana Purchase"

The New Orleans Mardi Gras and its climaxing Beaux Arts Ball, famed throughout the world for brilliant color and gaiety, come to life in a flashing gorgeous carnival with Paramount's technicolor comedy musical extravaganza, "Louisiana Purchase." The film version of the original Broadway smash hit is now playing at the McCarthy theatre. Irving Brecher has handled John Van Druten's and Lenore Coffee's stunningly contrived screen play with commendable skill, and the result that "Old Acquaintance" is one of the brilliant entertainments of the year to come out of Hollywood in recent years.

A capable supporting cast includes such established players as Phyllis Head, Roscoe Karns, Alan Revere, Esther Dale, Ann Codee, Joseph Crehan, Pierre Watkin and Marjorie Hoshelle.

BASEBALL ROUNDUP

By FRITZ HOWELL
Associated Press Sport Writer

New York, March 21 — (AP) — Maybe it isn't a true forecast of what war-riddled baseball will be like in 1946 — but the Detroit Tigers' regulars made nine errors in booting away their first intrasquad game yesterday to the Yanniguns, 8-3.

Alleviating Skipper Steve O'Neill's worries to some extent, however, was the discovery of a bit of unexpected pitching talent as 24-year-old Wandel Mosser, a southpaw from Point Pleasant, Va., yielded a lone hit, fanned six and allowed no runs in three innings.

It appears St. Louis Browns might be going after some kind of a record. Manager Luke Sewell has seven (count 'em) left-handers on his list, but the only old-timer is Al Hollingsworth who won six and lost 13 last year.

News from other camps!

American League:

Washington (College Park, Md.) — Skipper Ossie Bluege has slated Roberto Ortiz, six-foot-three 200-lb. Cuban for right field, over veterans Jake Powell and Gene Moore. Ortiz hit .304 for Montreal in '42.

Chicago (French Lick, Ind.) — Manager Jimmy Dykes says "We should finish in first division, (4th last year)."

Boston (Medford, Mass.) — Speed dumps to seven at pitcher Yank Terrell, outfielder Johnny Lazor reports.

Philadelphia (Frederick, Md.) — Luke Hamlin (won 21, lost eight for Toronto last year) arrived with "soft potato pitch — a new change of pace — and said he was ready to sign. Connie Mack offered him $6,500.

National League:

Philadelphia (Wilmington, Del.) — The Jays are back, with outfielders Coaker Triplett, Ron Northey and infielders Jim Wasdell and Charley Letchas still turning down all contracts.

Horse is Sold While Running Race

San Mateo, Calif., March 22— (AP)—Alamo Belle took so much time running the seventh race at Bay Meadows that she acquired a new owner between the start and the finish.

Owner J. R. Gregory watched the filly yield the lead and heard Frank Burley, a rival stable owner, ask if she was for sale.

"Right now, I'll take $750," said Gregory.

Burley waited in silence until the eighth pole.

"$850," Gregory offered.

At the sixteenth pole, Gregory had considered further. "$500," he said finally.

"Sold!" answered Burley.

Alamo Belle finished seventh.

League to Provide Playing Outfits for Armed Services

(By The Canadian Press)

The Baseball Equipment Fund, of which President Fred Trick of the National League is chairman, expects to have approximately $125,000 this year with which to provide playing outfits for men in the U.S. armed forces in all parts of the world. Already $40,000 has been spent since last season, according to Trick, while $25,000 is yet to come from the two major boys and the Baseball Commissioners' Office.

Later, the fund will be augmented by the proceeds from the 1946 All-Star game.

Sports Roundup

(By HUGH FULLERTON, Jr.)

(Associated Press Sport Writer.)

New York, March 22. (AP)—Trying to build up Billy Soose as a clever boxer for tonight's scrap with Tippy Larkin, ballyhoo artist Harry Markson typed these lines: —"Old-timers enjoy watching Soose box. He reminds them of the great fighters of the past. He once spent four hours with Frank Erne, former lightweight champion, studying one little move. He perfected it with — Nat Fleischer recalls Kid McCoy telling how he worked for one little punch for after day, on his famous corkscrew punch. And only after three years he concluded he had mastered it." . . . Maybe that's why there aren't any 4-F Kid McCoys around these days.

Teammates.

When Bert Kamnurt, who signed to trade for the Oakland Pacific Coast League Baseball Club this week, was heading for training camp at San Bernardino, Calif., the friend who was driving suggested that they pick up another Oakland player. . . . The suggestion was offered. Howard Anderson, started a conventional acknowledgement of the suggestion, then broke out "Guadalcanal and" . . . "The naval hospital at Oak Knoll." Anderson completed the sentence. . . . both former sailors, they had met in the hospital after Kennuth had suffered a concussion wound from shrapnel and Anderson had been brought down by malaria. . . . They hadn't learned each others' names then, though both were Los Angeles boys. . . . to complete the coincidence, both played for the Hollywood stars part of last season, but not at the same time. . . . Now they're roommates at the Oaks' camp and hope to remain together through the season.

Lord Cavendish Dies at Dublin

Dublin, March 22 — (CP)—Lord Charles Cavendish, second son of the ninth Duke of Devonshire and husband of the former Adele Astaire, American dancer, died today in his 38th year at his estate, Lismore Castle, Waterford County. He had been ill for a long time.

His widow, sister of Fred Astaire—the "dynamic, dancing American kid," who was starred in New York and London musical comedies in the 1920's—is titled both sides of the Atlantic.

They were married May 9, 1933, at the Duke of Devonshire's private chapel in Chatsworth House, ancestral home of the bridegroom's family.

There were many predictions that the marriage would end the career of Fred Astaire, who went on to achieve wider fame as one of the top male dancing stars of movies.

The couple had three children but all died soon after birth. When her husband died, Lady Cavendish was in London on Red Cross war duties. The recent ban on travel to Eire is expected to be waived to permit her to attend the funeral.

Russian Ambassador Appointed to Canada

Moscow, March 22,. (AP)—Georgy Zarubin has been appointed Russian ambassador to Canada, it was announced here early today. He succeeds Feodor Gusev, now Soviet ambassador to Great Britain, who was Soviet Russia's First Minister to Canada.

Zarubin has been chief of the American section of the Soviet Foreign office during the war.

He is extremely well liked by Averell Harriman, United States ambassador to Moscow, and the entire American embassy staff.

One official said "we are glad to hear of his promotion but we hate to see him go. He was a good official with whom to work."

Zarubin is in his early forties.

London, March 22. (CP)—R.A.F. and R.C.A.F. Beaufighters attacked two small enemy ships off Norway and left one afire, the Air Ministry announced today and one Beaufighter is missing.

The Berlin radio earlier asserted three British torpedo-carrying planes were shot down in an attack on a German convoy near Stadlander.

Ring Organized To Prey Upon Wealthy Partisans

Madrid, March 23 —(AP)— Paris dispatches said today that an investigation of the deaths of from nine to 30 persons in a villa of a Paris suburb had disclosed a ring organized to prey on wealthy partisans attempting to flee to allied territory.

Four men have been arrested, the dispatches said, one of them identified as the head of an underground "travel agency" whose main business was robbing the wealthy clients.

The dispatches said also that 14 bodies now had been discovered in the villa and that police records revealed a number of unidentified bodies had been found buried near the villa in 1942 and 1943.

There was no official confirmation of the reports in Paris last night that a doctor described as the owner of the villa has been arrested.

Jurists Outspoken Against Parents

New York, March 23 — (AP) — Frank Jara, 26, and his wife, Julia, 22, were convicted yesterday of endangering the lives of their two infants by leaving them alone in a cold, damp flat for 12 hours.

Justices Irving Cox, Henry C. Wilham Stanley Miller and Aivah W. Hurlingame, sitting without jury, unanimously voted for conviction of the couple, and Justice Burlingame declared from the bench:—

"These people wouldn't do credit to an animal. At least an animal would be more faithful and more careful."

The jurists ordered the couple taken to Bellevue Hospital for mental observation pending imposition of sentence March 29. Conviction carries a maximum sentence of 3 years each in a state prison.

Patrolman Jacob Rosenwald testified that when he was summoned to the Jara flat by a building superintendent last Jan. 4 he found two-year-old Frances Jara in a crib with little clothing on her, and nine-months-old Frank tied to a couch, with swollen and discolored ankles, and wearing only a diaper.

The charge against them reads that they conspired among themselves and with Swain "by deceit or falsehood or other fraudulent means to defraud such members of the public as should bet or wager money with any one or more of them" on the bout between Swain and Rimo.

Heard No Noises Says Governess At Lonergan's Trial

By JAMES H. PORTERFIELD
(A.P. Staff Writer)

New York, March 23 (AP)—Nervously fingering a pair of spectacles, a gray-haired, soft-spoken governess told at Wayne Lonergan's murder trial today how she slept undisturbed throughout the night that the R.C.A.F. aircraftsman's heiress wife was battered and strangled in a room not far from her.

The governess, Miss Elizabeth Black, testified under cross examination she retired about 10.30 p.m. and closed the door to her room. She heard no noises, she said.

The witness earlier related how Marine captain Peter Kleer broke in the door and discovered the naked body of Patricia Lonergan in an orate mahogany and bronze bed. Ki had arrived at the fashionable East Side apartment late in the afternoon last October 24 after a telephone conversation with the victim's mother, Mrs. Lucille Burton, the witness said.

Miss Black said she and Mrs. Burton had been attempting to awaken Mrs. Lonergan and that when Kleer arrived, he partly broke down the bedroom door and removed it from the hinges.

Saw Naked Body

"There's nobody here." Miss Black quoted the Marine officer as saying. Then, she said, he saw the body, and ordered Miss Black to keep Mrs. Burton in the nursery.

Miss Black said she and Kleer discussed in the nursery "about two seconds," and that then Kleer ran into the kitchen to telephone.

Patrolman John J. Casey, first witness of the day, said he was the first policeman to reach the house in response to a police alarm. Kleer was met in the basement by Elser, he said, and accompanied him to the bedroom where the body was found.

The patrolman said he didn't make any investigation, but merely stood guard until detectives arrived and a medical examiner arrived.

Police have said that Elser and the latter's mother, Mrs. Wm. Burton, discovered the slaying after the Marine officer telephoned the apartment about a dinner engagement. Both were expected to testify later.

Congress Must Approve Contracts

Washington, March 23, (AP) — The House of Representatives Foreign Affairs Committee voted today to compel Congress rather than President Roosevelt, the final say so in the settlement of lend-lease contracts.

An amendment with this effect was written into the legislation extending lend-lease for a year before the committee. It was offered by Rep. James Wadsworth (Rep. N.Y.). Each adopted unanimously before the entire bill was reported out for action by the House.

The amendment specified that "nothing is to be construed" in the extending of lend-lease to "authorize the President in any final settlement to accept any obligations on the part of the United States with respect to post-war economic and military policy except as in consultant with constitutional procedure phase, it was explained, all lend-lease settlements will be subject to consideration by either house.

Titanic Struggle For Air Control Looms in U. S.

By JAMES J. STRENG
(A. P. Staff Writer)

Washington, March 23 (AP) — A titanic struggle between United States interests for control of the supremacy over the Atlantic was foreshadowed today by announcement that American Airlines, Inc., is seeking to acquire control of American Export Airlines, Inc.

An agreement under which American Airlines would purchase a dominant interest in Export Airlines for $3,000,000, subject to approval by the Civil Aeronautics Board, was announced jointly last night.

American Export Lines, Inc., a steamship company, would establish the international airline subsidiary in 1937, has been ordered by the C.A.B. to comply with a law which forbids control of air carriers by surface carriers.

Significant features of the proposed deal include:

American Airlines, which is the United States largest domestic air operator and has routes also to Canada and Mexico, would acquire valuable operating rights over the Atlantic in that it would gain a broad step on other domestic carriers hoping to fly the Atlantic.

Export Airlines is the only company to challenge powerful Pan American Airways, Inc., across the Atlantic. The war interrupted the struggle after the C.A.B. had granted Export certificates to operate between the United States and Ireland and Portugal. With the war, Export began flying to Ireland and Africa as a contract carrier for the navy and is operating regularly.

American Airlines also is flying under air route military contracts, and the two companies will have considerable facilities to pool when peace comes and the battle to displace Pan American from the competitive flying stage of control.

The proposed transfer of control is certain to intensify activity in Washington concerned with this country's post-war international air transport policy. The United States now is the only country with more than one important foreign operator.

Hepburn Testifies Before Committee

Toronto, March 23 — (CP) — A royal Commission was told "here yesterday by former Premier Mitchell Hepburn that he had been induced by Ernest Lawrie, suspended employee of the Ontario Treasury Department, that he (Lawrie) "had plenty on Premier George Drew." He was asked to convey this message to Premier Drew, Mr. Hepburn testified.

The Commission adjourned also late at the conclusion of yesterday's testimony. Mr. Hepburn, along with Provincial Treasurer Leslie M. Frost, was chief witness. The Commission is investigating Lawrie's charges of irregularities in administration of the Corporation Tax Act and also probing the conduct of civil servants of Lawrie and Mrs. Marie Thompson, chief ledger clerk of the Department, who also is under suspension.

Lawrie's main purpose, Mr. Hepburn said, "seemed to be to get a salary increase for himself and Mrs. Thompson and to get me to take the message to Premier Drew that he had plenty on him and that a certain amount would stick."

The Commission was told by Mr. Frost that Lawrie came to his office March 10 and threatened "to blow the lid off the department" unless salary increases were assured for himself and Mrs. Thompson. Mr. Frost testified he had no knowledge of charged irregularities in the works of Chester Walters, Deputy Treasury Minister and his assistant, F. T. Clark. The Commission was told by Lawrie on Thursday that taxes were not collected from some firms for periods of years and that in the case of one firm an owed tax of $20,000 was halved.

HIGH CHAPLAIN CASUALTIES

Washington, March 23 (AP)—Chaplain's don't fight, but they do get killed in battle.

Only the air forces and the infantry have suffered a higher proportion of casualties among their officers than the chaplain corps, the United States army reported today.

To the end of last year, 19 chaplains were killed in battle, 19 wounded, 23 were prisoners, one was missing in action and 21 had died of accidents or illness in the war.

REIGN OF TERROR BEHIND WALL

London, March 23 — (CP)—Anazi preparations against an Allied invasion of the Netherlands have resulted in a reign of "terror and destruction behind the Atlantic wall," according to the Dutch underground paper, "De Nederlander." Netherlands people are dragged from their beds by the Germans and forced to work all night digging trenches while women are forced to do washing for the German soldiers, the paper said.

4,000-TON TANKER SUNK

London, March 23 — (CP) — A 4,000-ton German tanker was hit and "presumed sunk" by British long-range guns in the Dover area Monday night, the War Office announced yesterday. The duel that night between the British guns and German long-range guns on the French coast was the heaviest since the guns started firing early in the war.

CHEMISTRY SERVES CANADA

MODERN PACKAGING FOR FIRST AID!

A FIGHTING man's life may depend on having a clean, dry, sterile, surgical dressing quickly available. To safeguard Canadian soldiers a special cloth has been designed which makes possible a package for field dressings that is absolutely waterproof. Field dressings sealed in package of this cloth keep dry and sterile through cold, rain, snow and heat.

This special waterproof cloth was produced through the ingenuity of the Industrial Chemist.

It is water-repellent, with an inside coating of synthetic resin; it seals perfectly by heat pressing. Regardless of temperature change, the package remains waterproof, yet it can be quickly opened when needed. This type of packaging overcomes the bulkiness of metal containers and the limitations of stitched or wax-sealed packages. Wax will crack in low temperatures, while needle holes caused by stitching will leak.

The development of this special cloth and the sealing process which provides efficient waterproof packaging for field dressings is a wartime achievement of the "Fabrikoid" Division of Canadian Industries Limited.

Making possible waterproof packagings for field dressings is another example of how Chemistry serves Canada.

County Council Opposes Contract To Construct Sanatorium In District Until After the War

Picton, March 19 — That the county at Prince Edward County Council yesterday

Further discussion of the proposed sanatorium, with Kingston favored as the site. On a proposed assessment basis for the amount to be paid by each municipality, Prince Edward County's share of the cost of $400,000 institution would be $23,344, the Warden said.

Warden Onderdonk was not so sure that western municipalities in the Quinte area, including Prince Edward, Belleville, Trenton, Hastings and Northumberland, are enthusiastic over co-operative planning of an institution to be located in Kingston. However, those considering the Kingston site had urged the advantage of location adjacent to Queen's University. Now, Mr. Onderdonk said, there is some rumor that Napanee might be considered.

Reeve W. Henley said he could not see why there is such a rush to urge a co-operative agreement completed on the matter at once. How can we start such an institution, for instance, with recent publicity reveals that there is difficulty in keeping present institutions supplied with a staff? He expressed the viewpoint that existing buildings, now being used for war purposes, might later be altered a bit for use as a sanatorium instead of erecting a new building.

Responds to Mr. Perfette.

Concerning maintenance costs, Warden Onderdonk said that municipalities would be responsible for a deficit, if for instance, such an institution were not operating at full capacity. There are 13 county patients now in sanatoria, he said.

Deputy Reeve J. Anderson, Ameliasburg, noted the closing of No. 3 I.T.S., Belleville, as a possible suitable location for a sanatorium. Formerly used as a school for the Deaf, he said he understood it had been found that this property is to make more room when they are given instruction under conditions closely related to ordinary family life or living.

Still other members of Council spoke against any action being taken now and in accordance with the views previously expressed by previous speakers.

Flier Would Rather Fight Than Eat

A U.S. Fighter base, England, March 20. (CP)—Capt. Robert S. Johnson, leading American fighter ace in the battle with 22 German planes to his credit, says he'd rather fly than eat. Statement that is no exaggeration because he's missed more than one meal to pin his next-to-nod Thunderbolt through its paces.

The 26-year-old flier from Lawton, Okla., who has knocked down six enemy planes over Berlin, declares there are two things a fighter pilot must have if he hopes to survive—"good eyes and a good neck."

"Flying is tiring, but I want to fly every day", he says. "It keeps your eyes accustomed to spotting enemy planes. After a layoff you find you can't see a thing. When you fly regularly you can see even specks miles away. And you can even scent enemy planes, or so it seems".

ALLIED BOMBERS

Today's Allied headquarters communique said patrols were active on the British Fifth Army front, where a Canadian Corps is fighting.

Douglas Amurron, Canadian Press war correspondent, reported that the situation was quiet in the Canadian zone, also yesterday.

Patrols Active

Patrols also were reported active in the Allied beachhead south of Rome. British and American troops landing from the sea appeared to be safe against any further German all-out effort to drive them into the Tyrrhenian Sea.

Nazi aircraft attacked Allied shipping off the beachhead, but it was announced they caused no damage. On the beachhead, American artillery pumped a heavy concentration into Allied lines near the village of Padiglione.

Heavy bombers swung into northcentral Italy yesterday and attacked railway targets at Verona, Bologna and Mestre.

Night bombers last night attacked rail yards at Padia, immediately west of Venice in the northeast.

During the day fighter-bombers hit shipping off the Dalmatian coast and road transport in western Greece, the communique said, while medium and light bombers struck at other rail targets north of Rome.

The Germans sent approximately 60 aircraft over the battle areas. Seven were shot down. Four Allied planes failed to return out of approximately 1,000 sorties flown.

Fail to Knock Out Bridge

German artillery tried repeatedly but without success to knock out bridges across the Rapido River south of Cassino.

In the heavy bomber mission against Verona, a formation of 30 enemy planes, including rocket-firing ships, attempted to intercept, but escorting fighters beat them off and shot down two. Returning crew members said railway crossings and freight yards were smothered by bombs.

R.A.F. bombers touched off violent explosions, apparently in ammunition stores, in the night attack on Padua. The fliers described the target area as "one sea of fire."

A headquarters spokesman said the destruction of two bridges north of Pogstonal interrupted the last unimpeded railroad from the north to Rome.

Presumed Airman Takes Large Bus To Get Ride Home

Stealing motor cars is somewhat commonplace in this city and area but when a large motor bus is stolen, well that should be news.

Wednesday night the 32nd Triangle Club held a dance at the Triangle Club headquarters on the Trenton ball room and the "Strazdes" orchestra from No. 6 R.C.A.F. Repair Depot, near Trenton was engaged to supply the music. The orchestra was transported to Belleville in a large Repair Given.

R.C.A.F. bus and during the progress of the dance the bus was parked on Campbell Street. At the conclusion of the dance when the orchestra was about to return to No. 6 Depot the bus was missing from its nearby Campbell Street parking position.

Naturally Le matter was reported to police, and a subsequent check-up proved that it had been found parked outside the main gates leading into the R.C.A.F. Depot. Presumably some ingenious airman desired transportation back to his unit and being an observing person saw the ignition keys had been left in the bus and apparently was a believer in the old proverb—"opportunity knocks but once." After the bus was returned for the orchestra.

The morale of this is—"don't leave the ignition key in your motor vehicle."

Cut Them Off, Let Them Starve Pacific Strategy

Allied Headquarters, Southwest Pacific, March 19 (AP)—Leapfrog landings in the Bismarck Archipelago and the closing action of Japan's merchant fleet, vital to the supply of her scattered, stilled Pacific garrisons, are underscoring Gen. Douglas MacArthur's "cut them off and let them starve" strategy of how to fight Japan.

Since Jan. 1, 227 Japanese cargo ships have been sunk in the Central and Southwest Pacific, and from nearly 600 barges, many of them loaded with troops and supplies. These ships were links in lifelines to scattered defence outposts.

The hunting has been particularly good off the northwest coast of New Guinea lately. Land-based and carrier fire-ships enemy convoy was sunk between Hollandia and Wewak and Gen. MacArthur, Allied southwest Pacific commander, announced today that Allied bombers sank a Japanese destroyer and two small merchantmen in that same general area.

Under MacArthur's strategy of by-passing certain enemy strongpoints to cut off their supply lines, thousands of Nipponese troops are facing starvation in the Solomons, on New Britain and New Ireland. The same may be in store for those in New Guinea.

Churchill Tells Joke on Himself

London, March 23 (CP)—Friends of Prime Minister Churchill tell this story:

There is a brilliant Oxford University economist attached to the British Embassy in Washington, from where he assesses United States opinion with a clarity and wit that has enhanced his reports to the Prime Minister. The economist is Isiah Berlin and the reports are signed simply by "I. Berlin."

Mr. Churchill read of the arrival of Irving Berlin. "This must be the fellow who sends us those admirable reports from Washington," he said. "A most versatile fellow, ask him to lunch." was his comment when he read, too, that this Berlin had written many hit songs.

So song-writer Berlin went to lunch at 10 Downing St. The Prime Minister touched on various weighty matters—American reaction to the second front, the Presidential election, the latest Washington intrigues. The replies were not exactly what Mr. Churchill expected.

It began to dawn on him near the end of the lunch that there had been a case of mistaken identity, but he didn't let on to Berlin.

M.P.'s say Mr. Churchill is telling the story against himself with gusto.

Fire Bombs Used More Freely Now

Washington, March 22. (AP) — Fire bombs now constitute more than half of the average loads carried by Allied bombers.

The chemical warfare service, in a summary on the use and operation of aerial incendiaries, said today that at the beginning of the war incendiary munitions accounted for only about five per cent of the bomb loads, but now average 60 per cent. In one recent bombing of Berlin, the C.W.S. reported, "our airmen unleashed 2,500,000 fire bombs which constituted 96 per cent of their entire load.

Fire bombs are used in almost every raid. They are most effective against warehouses, factories and other combustible buildings and are used either alone or in conjunction with high-explosive bombs. In night operations, fire bombers also are dropped to mark the targets for other bombers carrying demolition bombs.

The incendiaries range from two-pound "firesticks" to 500-pound "blockbusters" or "stops". The "stops" are the heavy ones, a mixture of fuelled oil, finely powdered scrap magnesium, shavings and other ingredients and provide a tremendously destructive blaze which "cannot be extinguished". This bomb, C.W.S. reported, is the most recent type used against Germany.

THE LITTLE DOG BARKED by ANNE ROWE

CHAPTER 14

"A history of the American Theatre," she got answered with the temptation pending. "Don't mind Mother, Inspector. This thing has completely addled Aunt Cassie's already too. Uncle Burns would take care of us if he discovered I'm his daughters. And why shouldn't he? The inheritance tax would eat up the lion's share of his fortune if he left it all to one person. And my stepfather doesn't know how a thing. Bill doesn't either, in case you want to know. Which reminds me!"

She suddenly grinned at me broadly. "He scolded me when he found out I sicked little Sissy on you. Made me promise to apologize so here goes. I'm sorry—" was a mind of me but it looked like a funny idea at the time."

"Oh, sure! Good, clean fun, making a grown woman run from a tiny puppy," I agreed ironically.

And the Inspector chuckled: "We-ell, turned out good for the pup and Mrs. Turner. Is she a bell here, or, someone to call Mr. Parris?" He got up, walked over to an embroidered bellpull, and gave it a sharp tug.

The next minutes I only remember as a vague jumble of petulent objections Mrs. Parris, disrespectful comments of her daughter and quiet insistence on the Inspector's part. Mixed with the maid's timid, "Right away, Mr. Parris," the answer to the order to find Mr. Parris.

The discovery that Linda Barolle was really Linda Loring—but didn't want to be—was gradually forcing me to the exclusion of all else. The "secret" of the Inspector's knowledge of it lay, of course, in old Mack's clippings. He must have had a picture or Linda's mother among them, besides other information he was still keeping to himself.

No wonder he had looked smug on the way here! He had known what he would find, had only been sure along as a blind, to start Mrs. Parris talking.

And no wonder Linda had been upset when I'd told her that I knew of the Dyre stockholders! She had had no idea that her father—when she hated him for some reason and her hostile relatives were living with.

What was Linda's story? How did it come Burns Loring had known of her existence? How did Tyler McVane's picking this theatre for myself, fit in? And why were Bill and his father really unaware of the plot against my life —and Linda? Or was Bill Parris one of the conspirators, had he killed old Arden when he'd found out he knew too much?

I was so busy thought, I missed Roy Parris' entrance. The Inspector had to touch my arm and shout: "Mrs. Turner! This is Mr. Parris!" before I came back to earth with a startled jump and acknowledged the introduction.

Roy Parris looked exactly as his son Bill would thirty years from now—tall, slender. He was the perfect semification of innocence, the way he listened to the Inspector's tale absently—hearing, I'm sure, not half of it—now and then shaking his tousled head with a pert, "Imagine!" or "How extraordinary!"

He didn't become noticeably excited or worried either, when his wife and stepdaughter supplemented the Inspector's impersonal account of the tragedy with explanations of the personal aspect of it for the Parris family. His only regret, in case of financial disaster caused by his brother-in-law's revulsion with a hitherto unknown daughter, seemed to be the threat to his comfortable home.

"I'm afraid, in that case, I'd have to lay my history of the American Theatre aside and write another," he chided Inspector Hall. And then beamed in sudden inspiration at me. "Unless I write it again! You see, Inspector, the public taste runs in cycles. Before the World War, and through it, people loved my plays. Then in the twenties they tolerated them. And in the thirties they said, I had no work! Imagine! They ripped them to pieces. Now, I understand, the world is clamoring for 'escape entertainment,' and so I might be popular again. As a matter of fact, Wright, Mr. Turner, what do you think?"

But the Inspector had no intention of letting the talk get out of hand. "Let me get this straight, Mr. Parris," he said firmly. "You and your family are living entirely on what Mr. Loring sent you? What do you do with the money you made the time people loved your plays?"

"Spent it. Lost it in the decrease." Roy Parris seemed vague and unconcerned about his vanished fortune; but never bothered us much. My wife's brother is so very rich."

"Ayah. Must be, if he don't mind giving you all that," The Inspector's eyes wandered around the sumptuous room. "It would bother you though if they was no more money coming from Mr. Loring. You sure you didn't do nothing something about it?"

Roy Parris evidently didn't get the Inspector's meaning. He merely looked puzzled. "Nothing, Inspector," he repeated vaguely. "Oh! You mean talk to my brother-in-law? That's a thought, Inspector. I'll do it. Thank you. I shall do so—speak to him tonight. It really is inconsiderate of me. I'm just starting another period of the theatrical development of this country and I'd like to be sure if I can go on with it before going too deeply into it. Dear me! It's all very confusing and distressing. Mack's death—such a simple, honest old man! The accident on the stairs—a mysterious niece. I might use it for a plot. Thank you again, Inspector. I'll keep you posted on—And, if you will excuse me—my work—"

He was off, dreaming of a scheme and murder.

Unless the histrionic talent ran in the family and he was acting the absent-minded professor-playwright.

Once outside the Parris grounds, Inspector Hall dazed bewilderment of the last hour turned into petulant annoyance. He spat a curse at the ground. I grabbed Inspector Petrequin's sleeve and pleaded: "Have a heart, Inspector! Don't go back to your office and keep me tingling in mid-air! I've got to know all you've found in old Mack's scrapbook!"

The Inspector stopped in his tracks, couldn't very well do anything else, short of dragging me with him bodily, planted down on me, glanced about, and at last waved toward the wooded slope that near the road on the opposite side.

"Okay. They's a couple nice flat rocks up there, for chairs. If you don't mind getting your stockings tore and your legs scratched—"

Presently we were sitting on said "nice flat rocks," safe from interruptions and eavesdroppers.

"Now, Miss Turner, and we'll guess the best way to tell it, show you the clippings and have you the disclosures. Pulling a wallet out of his pocket, taking two strips of newspaper from it and holding one out to me. "Ever seen a quite a such a likeness? I first thought it was a picture of Miss Barolle, got ten up different."

The likeness truly was astounding. The picture was Linda, without her long soft mane, but lovely hatless. The caption above it said: even in the close cropped post-war

JAM MAGNATE'S BRIDE IS WITHDRAWN FROM GROOM.

ANNULMENT RUMORED

And the accompanying story proclaimed:

The recent marriage of Miss Doris Warren, only daughter of Andrew Warren, socialite and sensational of Wayne's Hodgkins bond bokera, and Burns Loring, famous scenic designer and millionaire jam manufacturer, seems to be the center of much gossip in the end of the honeymoon. The bride, accompanied by her father and Mrs. Arellus Warren, sailed for Europe last night on the S. S. Belmouth, with her bridegroom of three weeks completely left behind.

It is said that annulment proceedings will be instituted by Mr. Loring, the ritt only supposedly caused by allegations against Mr. Loring, in connection with a former marriage abroad, undisclosed in this country, and soon legally resolved.

"Now read this." The Inspector handed me the second clipping when I'd finished the first. "It's more gabby and less polite. And when you're through with it, you'll know as much as I."

The second clipping had Burns Loring's picture beside that of his bride. The caption blared:

ANNULMENT ON BIGAMOUS MARRIAGE?

and the text, after stating the fact that Bride's groom's sailing, went into a summary of Burns Loring's past:

Adonis Burns Loring just can't keep his wife in the public eye! The first time it made the front page was in 1907, when he, a boyish lad of twenty, married a girl abroad by his doting father to study art in Paris and lived married to Miss Joyce Mannix, twice-divorced daughter of the celebrated Mannix Jam & Pickles Corporation and their or nine years later than he.

Four years later his name appeared in the headlines again, when his wife lost her life in a hunting accident in Devonshire and left her handsome Burns a fortune amounting to millions, including the famous Jam & Pickles concern. After that came a hiatus of comparative silence. Loring became a widower—if not a mourning one—for years. Also, he became well known as a scenic designer, dividing his time between Paris, New York and his summer-mus summer home in North Harbor, Maine, near the Burns Cove Bumpers, of which both he and his brother-in-law, the novelist Roy Parris, are stockholders.

The press had to be content with such crumbs of news about him as reported appearances to this or that deb or rising stage star, and entanglements with less exalted ladies, on and off the stage.

The announcement of his marriage to Miss Doris Warren, three weeks back, was a bombshell—since actually he was engaged to a distant cousin, Mr. Tyler McVane.

Scarcely had the repercussions of the scandal died away when another bomb burst; a rumor, coming from the offices of an eminently respectable firm of lawyers, anent the former marriage of the Jam Prince, kept secret and not properly dissolved, that actually added up to an accusation of bigamy.

This reporter was unable to verify the rumor, for some reason — a good many thousand reasons probably—but aforementioned firm of lawyers developed publicity fright and assured us that it had all been a "grievous mistake."

Nevertheless, Mr. Loring's romance foundered on the "mistake," for annulment proceedings are definitely in the air, and from London Mr. Warren's secretary, who however has not authority, and says he's glad that bald fact.

Well! No wonder Linda doesn't adore her father!" I told the Inspector, handing him back the clipping.

"Ayah, no wonder," he agreed. "Been brought up on hurt feelings and gall and venom against him, I guess. Only, I suppose, boy she wouldn't meet him. Beats all how people go and spoil their lives for no good reason. Now if this here Doris Warren had the sense of a worm, she'd've told Mr. Mc-Vane—he is your producer, ain't he?—her patched up with Mr. Loring for the kid's sake."

"But—if he were married to another woman when he married her?" I objected.

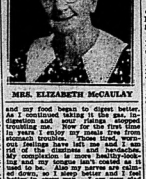
Once More Enjoys Meals Without Gas, Bloat, Indigestion and Sour Acidity. Also Rid of Dizzy Feelings, Headache and Nervousness. Sleep is Sound. Feels Better.



MRS. ELIZABETH McCAULAY

Mrs. Elizabeth McCaulay, 6 Wharncliffe Road South, London, Ontario, is glad to pass her experience along to others who know what it has meant to her to get relief from stomach disorders that brought on years of suffering from indigestion, and distress after eating, nervousness, loss of sleep and tired miserable feeling.

"For many years I suffered from nervous indigestion," Mrs. McCaulay explains. "Indigestion and heartburn with gas and sour acid would keep me so upset almost every meal. Hot water didn't help me. Soda only made me feel worse. I had that tired, nervous feeling in my chest. My tongue was constantly coated and my mouth dry when I awoke. I would get bad dizzy spells and headaches frequently. The acids from my stomach must have affected my kidneys, too, for I nearly always had backaches and my sleep was restless and I always felt tired and miserable.

"A friend recommended Syntona so highly that I thought I'd try it. Now I am only thankful that I did. Syntona relieved me of that terrible acidity in my stomach that improved and my food began to digest better. Gas I continued taking in the day, my digestion and sour feelings stopped and I enjoyed my meals. I sleep well, my kidneys are working fine and I have had no more trouble. Those tired, nervous feelings are gone and I am glad to get rid of the dizziness and headaches. I recommend Syntona highly—it's everything and my tongue isn't coated as it was. I feel that I have gained pounds and down, so I surely believe I am better in every way. I am very glad to recommend Syntona to any friend who suffers as I did."

Little Benny's Note Book

Ma was looking at pop's paper while he was drinking his 2nd cup of coffee, saying: "Listen to the interesting, William, in fact interesting, so, that Quincy the famous war correspondent is going to speak at the auditorium in Hicksville. I'm always interested to listen to a real live war correspondent in the flesh" she said.

No, only in the air, over the radio, pop corrected. I've heard he's real and sometimes heard, but never seen. Anyway, I've read what he has been in the papers. In fact that's probably where he got it" he said, and ma as you mean that's where he put it, but you're wrong, William, because he's going to speak about things that he never dared write in the papers. The very title of his lecture tells you that much. It's called "Censored News Uncensored. Just imagine, William, hearing all those experiences he was allowed to print from his very own lips at first hand, ma said.

If that's all you want I'll give you a chance to stay comfortably and inexpensively at home and listen to an adventure that nearly turned my hair snow white at a time when I still had plenty to turn. pop said. I'm not used to speak of it at the time, but believe me it scared me plenty, he said, and ma said, Why William what do you mean? What adventure, tell me immediately, she said.

I thought I was a goner, pop said. My heart stopped like a triphammer and then practically stopped altogether. I was drowned to water, I had the most awful giddy sensation and I was nearer to passing out in my life, he said, but after we was it, when was it for land sake?

It was the first time you almost got me to believe in ghosts pop. The next few times I was able to put up a little more clear headed decase, but of course you got me in the end. William pop said, you cray nonsencial thing, are you going to stop and get those papers from me or in the office? Who knows? pop said.

Probably meaning yes.

Prime Minister Denies Report

London, March 23. (CP)—Reuters News Agency in a dispatch from Zurich, Switzerland, today learned from "usually well informed sources" that former Premier Nicholas Kallay of Hungary had been able to get a message out of his country to say that he had resigned and that he was organizing resistance movement against the invaders.

The source quoted Kallay as saying that he had been obliged to leave Budapest in order to avoid arrest but he still was in the country as "the legitimate representative of the Hungarian nation" and he enforced absence of Regent Admiral Horthy".

Planes Operating Under Unified Command, Stimson

Washington, March 23 — (AP) — War Secretary Henry Stimson said today that the pilots of 23 American squadrons shot down by friendly gunfire during the invasion of Sicily were operating under a unified command and high command.

A reporter raised the question of command at the secretary's press conference by citing an overseas dispatch which said that the army and navy were under joint command during the Sicilian invasion, while the air forces operated separately. Neither the questioner nor Stimson identified the dispatch which indicated loss of the planes with 410 personnel which have been due to lack of co-ordination.

"The statement that the air forces operated separately in the Sicilian landing operation or in any other joint operation in this war is untrue," Stimson said, "and is a complete disservice to the fine men of the army air forces.

"The loss of the planes ... resulting from a combination of circumstances that may occur in spite of the best and most meticulous planning. I know of no more complicated operation in war than an assault landing operation at night involving not only sea and ground personnel, but airborne troops as well...."

WIRES GOVT ON RENTALS
Hamilton, March 23 — (CP) — Charles R. Purnell of Hamilton, president of the Canadian Association of Real Estate Boards, said in a wire to government authorities today that application for a ceiling order to leases on homes would end the sale of real estate in Canada for the duration of the war.

Messages from Purnell and J. B. Laidlaw of Toronto, Association secretary, expressed strong protest against any further freezing of rental restrictions, especially any action arising from special circumstances in isolated areas.

Mine Commission Report Tabled In Legislature

Wants Ban Placed on Selling of Securities by Telephone From Ontario to United States

DEBATE CONTINUED

Toronto, March 28 — (CP) — The Ontario Legislature, which yesterday received three reports from the Provincial Mining Commission and amended the Municipal Health Service Bill in committee, will consider legislation again today and — if time permits — resume the budget debate which occupied it at a sitting last night.

First speaker when the debate is reached will be J. Frank Kelly (L-Muskoka-Ontario) who moved his adjournment as the House rose following addresses by A. H. Acres (PC—Carleton), Percy Smith (CCF—Parry Sound) and Nelson Allen (CCF—Lanark North) and the last section of an address started Tuesday by Mr. T. L. Kennedy (CCF — Toronto Riverdale).

The Mining Commission report, signed by Chairman Harry C. Urquhart of Toronto, suggested among other things that:

1. A ban to be placed on sales of securities in other provinces and in the United States by long-distance telephone calls from Ontario. (This would be an extension of the present regulation prohibiting security sales by personal visits to residences or by telephone.)

2. The present Provincial Securities Commission and Board of Review be replaced by a part-time commission of three men to be appointed by order-in-council, one a lawyer, another a securities man and the third a person skilled in mine development and financing.

Ask School Be Re-opened

3.—The Ontario School of Mines at Haileybury be reopened. (This was announced Tuesday night in an address by Premier Drew.)

4.—Federal Mining Tax regulations be revised; Geological surveys be expanded; and more extensive educational courses for prospectors be provided.

The report referred to natural gas production in the area south and west of a line from Collingwood to Kingston and suggested provision be made for repeal of a provincial tax "imposed chiefly for the purpose or discouraging exports rather than a revenue measure".

At the afternoon sitting the Health Services Bill was under consideration in committee of the whole for two hours. Six amendments offered by the C.C.F. opposition were turned down on voice votes.

Amendment Proposed.

The measure would empower municipalities to set up health plans under provincial direction and with limited provincial financial aid where needed.

The major issue in yesterday's discussion was over an amendment moved by William Dennison (CCF—

Point Traverse

Fishermen Ready For Ice Break-up

Point Traverse, March 23—Moderate temperatures and strong winds within the past few days, have distintegrated large bodies of floe ice in South Bay waters and at the eastern end of Lake Ontario, and a general break-up is expected the last of the month.

Although the Pt. Traverse harbor is frozen over, the ice is now honeycombed, and commercial fishermen do not anticipate much difficulty in getting their boats out into open water. Fishermen have their crafts and gear in readiness for the spring opening, which they expect will be somewhat earlier than last season. The securing of skilled help is one problem facing the fishermen and in some owners have been unable to employ the necessary labor to carry out their operations.

Several thousand yards of new whitefish and herring net have been put up by the fishermen and they anticipate fair catches during the forthcoming season.

Fox Catches Muskrats

Catches of muskrats taken by trappers from the marshes of Black Creek are the poorest in several seasons, trappers report. The light catch is attributed to the heavy ice in Black River and trappers stated that until a break-up of the ice in the marshes, very few rats would be taken.

News Briefs.

Owners of sugar bushes report a poor run of sap owing to the sudden drop in temperature.

Several cases of measles are reported in the vicinity.

Ice harvesting has been completed at Milford. Clear water ice of some twenty inches in thickness was stored for summer use.

PAPER FINED $20

Manchester, England, March 23 — (CP Reuters)—The proprietors and editor of the Stockport Express were fined the equivalent of $20 for publishing information about the disposition of Allied armed forces, a breach of defence regulations.

The court, in imposing the fine in the first case of its kind since the outbreak of war, said there had not been a wilful intention to give information to the enemy but a breach of the act had been committed.

AMBASSADOR APPOINTED

London, March 23 —(CP)— The Moscow radio announced today that G. N. Zarubin had been appointed Soviet Ambassador to Canada. The broadcast was recorded here by the Soviet monitor.

More Electric Stoves Will Be Available In the Coming Year

Ottawa, March 23 (CP) — The Prices Board announced Wednesday that some electric stoves, rangettes and grills will be available on the Canadian market in the coming year, but said the total number of units available will not be large.

M. C. Lowe, administrator of electrical appliances, equipment and supplies, said it may be "some time yet" before production is started, but permission has been granted for the manufacture in the next 12 months of up to 40 per cent of the 1940 output of electric stoves and 60 per cent of the 1940 output of rangettes and cooking plates or grills.

The announcement said essential-ity certificates, previously required of all buyers of these products, have been abolished. Manufacturers' production schedules must be approved by the administrator to ensure the output of the proper proportion of equipment in the lower price classes.

The Board said there is no restriction on the output of repair and maintenance parts.

CBC Director Questioned About Network

Ottawa, March 23 (CP) — Dr. Augustin Frigon, Acting General Manager of the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation, yesterday told the Commons radio committee that there was little room on CBC networks for any more commercial broadcasting. He was detailing his stewardship since he took over from Dr. J. S. Thomson, who retired in September.

"We've got as much (commercial) as we can handle and still do the things we should do," he said. "I expect us to do in the way of encouraging talent and providing facilities for cultural, educational and entertainment broadcasts."

Answering a deluge of questions following a three and one-half hour speech before the committee, Dr. Frigon said that only about five per cent of the CBC's 30 per cent "cut" in network profits was actually money in pocket because of the various commissions and other expenses the corporation had to pay.

Dr. Frigon told the committee he and his colleagues Minister LaFleche and Rene Morin, BBC chairman, in suggesting a division of authority in the CBC executive to take care of a great amount of work which he said was piling on the shoulders of the single executive.

Desire Partnership.

He was asked many questions on the CBC's relations with private stations, and he said he had evidence that most of them agreed on the desirability of continuing the partnership for their mutual benefit.

He agreed to the suggestion of John Diefenbaker (PC—Lake Centre) that a schedule of salaries be produced at a later sitting of the committee.

He said the CBC platform to give members of the staff in the armed services an opportunity of again joining the staff with their seniority rights in regard to pensions protected.

However, the CBC would have no room for other returned men, he thought. "Our own servicemen will more than meet our post-war requirements," he added.

Dr. Frigon told Mr. Diefenbaker the CBC was always in the search for new talent, and pledged that no opportunity had been withheld from young artists, as Tuesday were probably based on the misapprehension of these artists that they were good enough to take over from experienced performers.

6,000 PLANES OVER EUROPE IN 36 HOURS

7,000 Tons Bombs Rained on Targets In Same Period

Allied Air Forces Blast Objectives In France, Ruhr And Germany

ATTACKS CONTINUING

By GLADWIN HILL
Associated Press Staff Writer

London, March 24 — (AP)—American heavy bombers drove into Germany for the third straight day today, bombing military targets in Western Germany, a United States communique announced, following strong R.A.F. night blows at objectives in France.

The night attacks included a blow at the railroad yards of Laon, 80 miles northeast of Paris, in which Halifax squadrons of the R.C.A.F. bomber group took part. Other bombers struck at objectives along the industrial city of Lyon in southern France.

In additional daylight raids, Mosquito bombers unloaded explosives on Dortmund in the Ruhr valley and other objectives in western Germany. The Air Ministry said two Mosquitos failed to return from the night operations, which included mine laying in enemy waters. All other Canadian planes returned safely.

The night activity brought the total Allied air forces over Germany and occupied territory to 36 hours out of between, 6,000 and 7,000 planes, it was estimated. Bomb tonnage for that period was boosted to around 7,000.

19 Day-Night Attacks

While American heavy bombers smashed into Germany in daylight for the seventeenth time, the R.A.F. announced that 19 consecutive day-and-night attacks on the German war machine, "Achtung (attention) Admiral," have been delivered, the enemy suffered severe casualties."

Gardiner Says Farmers Have Done Great Job

Peterborough, March 24—(CP)—As a result of wartime regulations Canadian farmers have gained four times as many hogs in Great Britain as last year at the end of March, the wet, Dominion Minister of Agriculture Gardiner said here last night in addressing the service club (Kinmen) dinner.

"I am proud that Canada have done a far better job than they thought they could do," he said.

In wartime certain regulations had to be imposed, Mr. Gardiner said, and as a result of farmers co-operation "we have three times as many hogs as we had before the war, 10,000,000 more chickens, and we get hundreds of thousands more poultry."

AMMUNITION FACTORY BLOWN

Stockholm, March 24. (AP)— A Swedish ammunition factory serving Germany said yesterday a Nazi ammunition train, carrying explosives, was hit on railroad bridge, hits on main line and caused considerable damage on river front.

Minenster — lies in densely built up part of city.

Brunswick — The Brunswick district, the aircraft park at Werl and the ally force station at Achmer were hit.

The night assault on the Laon yards, 40 miles south of Saint-Pas-de-Calais, the 90-mile-deep penetration experienced by the Allies have been bombing heavily for the last seven months, was a part of co-ordinated day and night campaign against the network of French and Belgian railroads leading to the invasion coast.

Many Raids on France

Eleven days of the month have been directed at this network, including two yesterday by American bombers and the Orly, Le Bourget and Paris, which they have visited frequently, Tergnier, Laon and Haine-St. Pierre, near Charleroi in Belgium, 30 miles northeast of Laon.

The final assessment of comprehensive British reconnaissance photographs and intelligence reports obtained by the R.A.F. unmanned nearly 20,000 tons of explosives on Berlin in the heavy night raids from Nov. 18 to Feb. 15 in the face of what the Air Ministry disclosed "administrative confusion throughout Germany and German Europe."

An authoritative British analysis said the R.A.F. raiders, five of them on end to almost all industrial activity in Berlin, the enemy's southeast district, by the end of January.

The survey said that at least 330 factories in Berlin have been damaged or destroyed, five of them on Hitler's top-most priority list.

FLORENCE, PADUA HIT BY HEAVY BOMBER BLOWS

No Material Change at Cassino Although Savage Fighting Reported

Associated Press War Correspondent

Naples, March 24 — (AP)—Heavy fighting continued on the Cassino front, no material change in the situation, Allied headquarters announced today, while two new bomber "Gestapo" against enemy-occupied Italy were thrown in on Italy — at Florence and Padua — were disclosed.

Flooding Cassino, New Zealand troops still held savagely against determined counter-attacks around points with the support of tanks and a heavy screen of artillery and mortar fire. The Nazi defenders were supported by both air attacks which worsened overnight.

The night activity brought the total Allied air forces over Germany and occupied territory to 36 hours out of between, 6,000 and 7,000 planes, it was estimated. Bomb tonnage for that period was boosted to around 7,000.

While American heavy bombers smashed into Germany in daylight for the seventeenth time, the R.A.F. announced that 19 consecutive day-and-night attacks on the German war machine, "Achtung (attention) Admiral," have been delivered, the enemy bomber formations flying over western Germany," and the "Gestapo" bombed enemy airfields in northeastern France.

These attacks raised to 19 — a new high record — the number of consecutive attacks in a single month. Fourteen of the attacks in March were directed against targets in Germany.

As 10 yesterday when a six-prong assault was on the railroad yards, aircraft stations and other objectives in the western German city, the bombers today were escorted by strong formations of fighters.

81 Enemy Planes Down

The United State Air Forces announced that 81 enemy warplanes were knocked down in yesterday's blasting at the Reich by the Americans. Thirty-nine of these were accounted for by bombers and 33 by the fighter escorts.

While losing 27 heavy bombers and six fighters, Allied headquarters said an incomplete assessment of the damage inflicted included:

Handley Airfield — Two out of 100 hangars and left burning. Barracks hit. Heavy concentration of bombs on landing field.

Rosieres Railroad Yards — Direct hits on railroad bridge, hits on main line and "severe" damage on river front.

Mimester — Bombs in densely built up part of city.

Brunswick — The Brunswick district, the aircraft park at Werl and the ally force station at Achmer were hit.

CHURCHILL PAYS SURPRISE VISIT TO U.S. TROOPS

'Soon Will Have The Opportunity to Land On European Soil' He Tells Men

By ROGER GREEN
Associated Press Staff Writer

London, March 24 (CP)—Prime Minister Churchill paid a surprise visit to United States air-ground troops in the English countryside today and in a voice of deep feeling told them they "soon will have the opportunity" of landing on Hitler-occupied Europe.

In company with Gen. Dwight D. Eisenhower, Supreme Allied Commander, Senior Commander of American armed forces in the United Kingdom; and Maj.-Gen. Lewis H. Brereton of the U. S. Ninth Air Force, Churchill witnessed the colorful spectacle of many hundreds of American troops waging mock warfare on the green England countryside, and then reviewed parts from the reviewing stand.

Great Fun to Play

"It is a great part to play," Mr. Churchill told the battle-hardened Americans, a nation-wide communique said. "For the most modern equipment and the most

European War May Last Year Or More Says Montgomery

London, March 24 — (CP) Cable) —Gen. Sir Bernard Montgomery prepared today to the people of the United Kingdom for inspired support of the invasion armies and declared that the Empire forces will will lead in that operation would be equal to their job.

"Anyway, we shall win," promised this Commander of all British ground forces for the forthcoming invasion.

The General, under whose command the Canadian forces for the attack an invasion role, spoke with probable confidence of typical of his leadership of the highly successful Eighth Army in its campaigns in North Africa, Sicily and Italy.

In a Mansion House luncheon address inaugurating a nation-wide savings week, saluting the man in battledress, he said the British soldier, once given a task, "never let the side down."

"When the fighting men of the Empire assemble for the fray, the result must be victory," he said, he said Monty.

The European war may last a year or longer, he predicted.

Armies Need Home Support

He said at the present momentous hour, "The inspiration of the armies in the battle zones comes from the nation — of the whole populace in the whole house and from the women and who are their fathers, mothers, brothers, sisters and friends. Only from an inspired nation can go forth under these conditions an invincible army."

Gen. Montgomery said: "It is absolutely vital that we realize that the issue in the battle of man which taken at the flood leads on to fortune' will not be for this nation on this great endeavor. The 49th will flow then or not at all. That is why I say that every man must up in the nation every noble thought, every high ideal, every great purpose which has waited through weary years.

"From a concerted nation such men will abundantly come and "the Lord God highly in battle" will go forth with His power and special Providence will assist our battle...

"All must help and the nation's church must give the lead. The fighting services cannot pull their full weight on the battlefront without the full co-operation of the home front.

"Together the whole Empire team will see this thing through to the end. It is 'a proper job for proper men.'"

We Shall Win It

"We are preparing to take part in the greatest battle the world has ever seen, and if anyone should ask me to go at the end, I say 'yes to the match,' said the general.

"How long will the pull last? No one can tell. It may be a year, or last a year, it may take longer. But we shall win. It will be a proper job and we shall win it."

"The promised land is not so far off now. If necessary, we have got to fight through to it for our and that others may enjoy it."

Gen. Montgomery — who is the son of a bishop—suggested "Let God

DUMP 2,000 TONS BOMBS ON WEWAK DURING MARCH

MANY JAPS CUT OFF

Allied Headquarters, Southwest Pacific, March 24 — (AP)— More than 2,000 tons of bomb concentrated so far this month on the Wewak sector of New Guinea, and done this much damage: wiped out Japanese reinforcement and supply echelons, paused repeatedly the Allied blows in the Admiralties, Needless to say, the Americans showed even keener interest in the Wewak sector with word forward from the black days of Dunkirk to the effect that many Japs.

Of that victory he expressed high confidence.

GERMANS RUSH REINFORCEMENTS INTO RUMANIA

Turkish Reports Indicate Hitler Preparing for Last-Ditch Stand

TURKEY ANXIOUS

London, March 24 — (CP) — Turkish advice reported today German reinforcements had been rushed to all points on the Rumanian and Bulgarian coasts of the Black Sea in what appeared to be speeding of full occupation of all Rumania as part of Hitler's preparations for a last-ditch stand against the advancing Russian armies.

Rumania, Turkey said to be casting an anxious eye over the extensive German troop movements reported from Bulgaria.

An Istanbul dispatch said it had learned authoritatively that the Germans were in full control of the Rumanian and Bulgarian city on the Black Sea, with all local troops under the command of Nazi officers. Rumanian troops said to be using every available boat and barge to transport German troops and materials.

Turkish unconfirmed estimate current in Ankara, the Nazis have drawn off 26 divisions from their Russian front Yugoslav campaign, for to occupy Hungary, Rumania and Bulgaria.

These developments re-awakened Turkey's 1941 anxieties — fears precipitated by the German drive through Rumania and Bulgaria preparatory to the Greek and Yugoslav campaigns, May Invade Thrace

The Turks were said to be re-examining the possibility the Germans might invade Turkish Thrace, the European route to the Dardanelles.

An Associated Press dispatch said the Ankara government was in connection with the report that the Germans had begun taking over airfields, railroads and industrial facilities to produce either confirmation. It stated Turkish-German negotiation between Turkey and Bucharest, the Rumanian capital, was suspended.

No information had yet reached Turkey that the German troops were marching into Bulgaria in the Greek and Yugoslav campaigns, earlier in the week had said Nazi military authorities were assuming control of communications in Bulgaria as well Sofia and elsewhere in Bulgaria.

(A BBC broadcast quoted a Swiss dispatch as reporting that Boris, Cyril of Bulgaria and Regent Bogdan Filov have been deported to Germany following a visit of Hitler Monday," a pattern that Hitler applies to those he has set up or selling country's leaders to him before his troops move in.)

JAPANESE DRIVEN FROM 3 POSITIONS ON IMPHAL ROAD

Enemy Advances 60 Miles into India After Crossing Border In Tiddim Area

COLUMN AMBUSHED

By CHARLES A. GRUMICH
Associated Press War Correspondent

New Delhi, March 24 (AP)—Air-supplied troops of the British 14th army, fighting off a three-pronged Japanese offensive into India, have dislodged the enemy from three road blocks south of Imphal, it was announced today.

The Japanese position farther north was being attacked by British troops, communiques said Admiral Lord Louis Mountbatten's headquarters reported.

Aiming their surprise offensive from the jungles of the Chin hills of Burma, the Japanese first cut the road between Imphal, the capital of Manipur in India, and Tiddim a British area of operations in Burma to the south.

Some of the enemy positions were within 30 miles of Imphal along the road that skirts the western side of the swamps of Lake Loktak to the south, it was disclosed yesterday. Imphal is 45 miles from the Burma border and about 60 miles north of the border.

Force Repulsed.

A second Japanese force pushing up past Tiamu on the border, 110 miles southeast of Imphal, toward the Imphal-Palel road had been repulsed, an authoritative account said. The closest approach of an enemy force during this drive in this direction was about 24 miles. Palel is 24 miles southeast of Imphal.

The third Japanese force, cut off by the Tiddim road block, is in its dense jungle cover was gathering in the Somra hill tract, to the north of Imphal.

One enemy detachment in the Tiddim area, southeast of Imphal was ambushed and some of its men killed, it was said.

The defensive plan appeared to be based on holding the main roads. One up the Imphal Manipur Valley from Tiddim and the other from Kohima, leading into the hilly-cold-dotted plain which would provide plenty of air strips for Japanese aircraft.

Allies Have Superior Force.

Allied headquarters described the Allied forces in the area as superior to the Japanese, to say nothing of the lopsided numbers of planes available to both.

The defensive position was bulwarked by the natural barrier of the Chin hills to the east.

The Japanese attack was launched in 1939 and 190 miles from Kohima.

Tiddim's advance guards, thrusting northward the other south of Tamupol, captured and passed the town of Kopchilime, 25 miles away, dispatches from the front said, and

Germans Feeling Strong Pressure Near Czernowitz

Moscow, March 24 (AP)—Pushing through the foothills of the Carpathian mountains, Marshal S. Konev's 2nd Ukrainian army drove hard today for the Pruth river boundary of Rumania and the important south-north railway paralleling the river five miles farther west—a railway which is one of the keys to the northeastern corner of Rumania.

Advance units of Konev's mobile forces were reported stepping up the tempo of their drive in the Carpathian foothills.

Red army front dispatches said, already, six within sight of the Carpathians and in some sectors the glimpse from high ground the winding Prut 15 miles to the west.

The Nazis apparently were feeling the strong pressure of the converging columns toward Czernowitz, important Pruth river junction 30 miles from the Rumanian border.

Front dispatches said the Germans were hurrying to the defense of the Czernowitz area, already under attack 30 miles northwest of Mogilev Podolski, a key point in the railway network of the Dniester also captured the river town of Otchakov and 18 miles southeast of Mogilev Podolski, as well as other towns and hamlets.

More than 1,000 Rumanian and German officers and men were taken prisoner, the communique said.

Gen. Rodion Y. Malinovsky's 3rd Ukrainian Army, at the same time was reported battling grimly forward in the outskirts of Voznesensk on the Bug.

Jap 'Invasion' of India Inspired By Tojo's Desire to Stir Up Revolt

By DeWITT MACKENZIE
Associated Press War Analyst

Japan's General Tojo is straining hard to make real the boast of an all-out "invasion" across the north-east border of India from Burma, and this of course is the reason we are set to find him trying to build a political sensation out of it with the claim that the so-called Indian National Army, with Japanese troops at its side, is participating with the idea of liberating India.

There is thus far no major threat either military or political, against India. Tojo's propaganda ministers are the importance of the attack. However, im sure they don't mean for it to be taken seriously as an invasion. We cannot forget that this great anti-communist is the chief Allied base for the final smash against Berlin. Its complete security is vital.

Chungking is shocked by the enemy's thrust. Unofficially the feeling is expressed in the Chinese capital that the invasion is supporting the Japanese propaganda guns with the biggest ammunition they've had in months.

The attack has come in the revolt against Britain.

Chindwin River area of western Burma, where the enemy has driven two or more columns across the border into the Indian state of Manipur. The objective apparently is Imphal, headed for Imphal, capital of Manipur and terminus of a railroad which runs southward to the north with the main Allied supply line — the Ledo-Burma Road — to give Allied China.

Characteristic British commander-in-chief for India, sums the position up in the following declaration that "no real threat can materialize unless and until the Japanese manage to overcome the points where they can attack our supply roads and river communications or our airfields in Assam". He adds that the Japanese have to divert Allied forces and relieve the pressure on China by creating a diversion where the Allies are driving for the big Japanese airbase at Akyab.

That's the picture. Tojo's thrust strikes me, however, that there's much of more than a diversionary purpose in this Japanese operation. There is small doubt that Tojo long ago abandoned hope of invading India by that way for he's never given up hope of causing the revolt against Britain.

Trenton Boy Writes of Life In Iceland

Trenton (Special) — PO. Harry Brant, now stationed at an R.A.F. post in Reykjavik, Iceland, has sent a most interesting letter to Miss Hazel Farley, one of his former Trenton High School teachers.

PO. Brant is the son of Mr. and Mrs. J. Brant, Division Street, and graduated as a wireless air operator from MacDonald, Man., in the fall of 1942. He was commissioned and promoted, R.A.F., in August 1943 and has been on operations on the Atlantic and West Coasts of Canada prior to being posted to Iceland.

In part the letter reads: "I'm writing to you from the capital and only city in Iceland, Reykjavik. I've been surprised before, but not quite as much as when I first saw it on the 5th daylight. It is a wonderful, and the most modern city I've ever seen. Also the cleanest.

"The town is laid out uniformly well, with streets running north, south, east and west, with perhaps one or two streets at angles. The houses are large, very modern in design, and built for the greatest part of reinforced concrete with stucco. The houses are white, green or pink; many have the green roofs, which are very noticeable from the air. Most of the house is provided from hot water springs nearby, and the hot water is piped into the houses. Of course the only remote homes as yet depend on coal for heating. Daily, coal trains are a project is being completed slowly but surely, to convert the whole heating and thus free the city of coal smoke.

People Mostly Blonde.

"The people are of Norwegian, Danish and Irish origin, and for the most part are very fair looking. Most of the girls, 75 per cent, are blonde, also the men. They all get their hair done, and some of the girls have the most beautiful hair and the backs of their necks, and some of them make me sit up and take notice for a few minutes. Would I have a picked?

"The whole island is of volcanic origin, and the city is of three levels, or rather a dirty brownish black, gray, or brick red. The lava rock which blows over, settles in the valleys in dry weather is stifling. As a result of the recent fire, moreover here is very high among Reykjaviks. We are now supposed to stay here very long for that reason.

"The hills are very odd shaped. A mountain behind the city is a height of 2,000 feet, and then the top of it. Will be as flat as a billiard table. The mountains are like that, all over the island. And none of them are higher than 4,000 feet. A few of the nearest ones however here is very high among Reykjaviks. We are now supposed to stay here very long for that reason.

And none of them are higher than 4,000 feet. A few of the nearest ones however here is very high among Reykjaviks. We are now supposed to stay here very long for that reason.

Icebergs Weather.

"This weather is considered the worst in the world next to the Antarctic, so it changes so rapidly. It frequently rains, snows, freezes, hails, thaws and the sun shines all in the same day. We had quite a thrill a few nights ago with icing on the wings and with a few hours previous there wasn't a cloud to be seen in this area. What a country!

"I'm on my second tour of operations now, but only this time received my operational wing. Everything is quiet here, and I'm looking especially the mail".

Mrs. Brant, one of the girls of Iceland, PO. Brant said they were all keen to make their home in Canada. Constable Isn't a bad place generally. We have good comfortable wooden huts in which to live. Ours, is one of the best in 'Camp Maple Leaf.' It is divided into three sections. A day room, bedroom for four, and washroom. We have electric lights, radio and all accessories and fixed the hut very nicely. We have a radio, and all oil-heated air circulator stove which keeps us nice and warm when these Icelandic nights give us their worst. Being connected with the R.A.F., of course, requires no explanation about the food. We had chicken today but don't know where it came from. We probably 'scrounged' it from the Yanks."

E. Van Allen Given 18 Months On Robbery Charge

Convicted of robbery with threats of violence, Everett Van Allen of this city, was sentenced to 18 months in the Ontario Reformatory after pleading guilty before Magistrate J. L. Lloyd here today. His Worship also decreed an additional six months indeterminate sentence. Van Allen was charged with robbing Clark Kent Shoe store, situated on Front Street in Belleville on March 4th, last, with thieves of cash.

The principal witness called today by Crown Attorney R. C. Donnan K.C., was John McGee, manager of the Kent Shoe store, who identified Van Allen as the man who entered the store about 4.30 p.m. on the evening of March 4th, and asked to speak to him. When we approached the office for the store the accused moved his right hand into his right breast pocket and mumbled something about "This is no toy—keep your hand in his pocket," testified Mr. McGee. He definitely identified Van Allen and stated—"This is a hold-up". Mr. McGee stated he was very afraid. At that moment there were in the cash register and the robber backed out of the office door. Upon cross examination by E. E. Mitchell, counsel for the accused, Mr. McGee admitted Van Allen had footloses been drinking.

Tells of Chase.

Constable Don Carruthers told of the police chase that followed and the subsequent capture of Van Allen on Victoria Ave. He found $80.66 on his person at the police station. Van Allen, when taken into custody by Constable Carruthers, McGee had previously stated that approximately $77 was stolen from the till at his store. P.C. Carruthers also identified the smelling liquor on Van Allen's breath.

"My client informs me he was drinking," stated counsel in outlining of this incident. He says he does not remember anything after late morning until he woke up in the police cell about 7 o'clock that night," Mr. Follwell, as he pointed out it was Van Allen's first offence.

"I don't see how he can hope to escape penitentiary, after all there were threats of violence," interrupted Mr. Donnan. His Worship cautioned the accused before passing sentence and also congratulated police upon the "fine" manner in which they arrest in the case. "It is a serious thing to go about threatening the lives of others" concluded Magistrate Lloyd.

Just returned from a tour of his troops, Gen. Montgomery said he found them in good trim and added that when they go into battle he believes they will prove the best army Britain ever had. The troops under his command include Canadian forces in Britain.

(Gen. Montgomery, Canadian Press war correspondent, said ten days ago following an interview with Gen. Montgomery: "It is obvious that this general . . . is coming to a lot on Canadians to make a good showing in the campaign. He wants them and he is likely to see that the Canadians have a few hard knocks when they land on the continent.")

Best Possible Arms

Emphasizing the need for supplying Allied soldiers with the best possible arms, he declared:

"I must frankly redound to our shame that we sent our soldiers into this most modern war with weapons and equipment that were inadequate. We have only ourselves to blame for the disasters that early overtook us in the field. They must not let that happen again. Nor will we."

One of the factors of success in battle, he said, is the human factor, but he added that there must be mutual confidence between the commander and troops. "And the surest foundation for creating confidence is success," he added.

Chaplin's Motives Were 'Legitimate' Says His Counsel

By JAMES LINDSLEY
(Associated Press Staff Writer)

Los Angeles, March 26. (AP) — Charles Chaplin's answer to the United States Government's charge that he violated the Mann Act in that his motives were "legitimate, above board and honest" when he provided railroad tickets for a trip to New York for his former protegee, Joan Berry.

This was a portion of the reply by Chaplin's attorney, Gerald Giesler, to the opening statement in the Government's case by Charles H. Carr, that the movie comedian engaged in intimacies with Miss Berry in a New York hotel in 1942.

Giesler told the jury of seven women and two men that he would not endeavour to excuse the "propriety of any intimacy prior thereto". (The alleged intimacy in New York.) Then, Giesler added:

"We shall prove to you that any time Mr. Chaplin desired a young lady, she would consent willingly".

Opening his case in which he hopes to send Chaplin, to the Federal Penitentiary, Carr said that Miss Berry, while under contract to Chaplin's studio, repeatedly asked the actor for permission to make a trip to New York, and Chaplin persistently refused.

No Business Relationship

Carr emphasized his allegation that at the time there was no business relationship between the actor and the 26-year-old Joan. Chaplin did arrange for her transportation, the Attorney asserted, and in New York Miss Berry registered at the Waldorf-Astoria Hotel and later at the Pierre Hotel.

Meantime Carr asserted, Chaplin had arrived in New York and Miss Berry visited him at the Waldorf-Astoria. This was in October, 1942, Carr said, and a few days later Chaplin allegedly provided Joan with funds for the return trip to Hollywood.

Chaplin is charged with two counts of Mann Act violation, one involving the asserted trip to New York and the other based on the return journey.

Carr said Chaplin and Miss Berry first met in May, 1941, when they were introduced by Thomas Well (Tim) Durant, a friend of the actor. He declared their alleged intimacies began about June of the same year, after Chaplin had placed her under contract at $75 per week.

Met at Sterk Club.

Carr said that after making a speech in Carnegie Hall, Chaplin met Miss Berry at the Sterk Club.

Later, Chaplin said, "I'd like to have you go to my hotel because there are some things I want to talk over with you". The three went to Chaplin's apartment in the Waldorf-Astoria Tower.

"Presently Durant excused himself, saying he was fatigued, and went to his own bedroom, leaving the other two alone.

"There was a short conversation between Miss Berry and Chaplin, and then they went to Chaplin's bedroom and there engaged in sexual relations. . . .

"In December the defendant and Miss Joan Berry again had illicit relations on more than one occasion".

Chaplin's attorney, Jerry Giesler, followed Carr.

Giesler said the only times Chaplin saw Miss Berry in New York were the night she was with him at the Sterk Club and when she accompanied him to the Waldorf-Astoria. "But Mr. Chaplin will deny there was any intimacy there at that time."

"I shall not try to excuse the propriety of any intimacy prior thereto in relation to this young woman", Giesler added.

Would Consent Willingly.

"We shall prove to you that any time that Mr. Chaplin desired a young lady, she would consent willingly, whether in Los Angeles, Beverly Hills or wherever it was".

Giesler asserted the defence expects to prove that in 1941 Miss Berry "was not then a virgin".

Carr leaped up at that point with an objection that "this has no bearing on the case".

Giesler told Judge O'Connor:—"The picture shall be developed that this defendant did not take advantage of an innocent child".

"He is not so charged", said Judge O'Connor, sustaining the objection.

Giesler charged that Miss Berry demanded $150,000 from Chaplin before filing her civil paternity suit. He asserted also that Miss Berry "about October 1942 told a confident she knew where she could get money from a certain man because he had been taken from one place to another place and that was unlawful".

METROPOLITAN LIFE CONTINUES PROGRESS IN 1943

Ottawa, Mar. 21.—The Metropolitan Life Insurance Company, in 1943, the 75th year of its existence, issued $2,905,262,410 of paid-for life insurance, bringing to a new high of $29,180,396,994 the Company's total life insurance in force held by more than 30,500,000 persons in Canada and the United States, and increased its assets to $6,463,803,551 as revealed in the Company's annual business report released today.

Featured also is the fact that Canadian and U.S. investments in obligations of the Canadian and United States Governments had reached more than $2,300,000,000 — of which $580,000,000 had been purchased last year. This amount exceeded the $468,867,975 reported in Government Company assets during 1942.

Payments to policyholders and their beneficiaries amounted to $554,873,000 during the year—making the twelfth successive year these payments have exceeded a half-billion dollars. These payments were at the rate of almost $4,600 a minute of each business day during the year.

An increase of more than $1,900,000,000 of life insurance in force was reported for 1943 over 1942. Unprecedently low rate of lapsation and of surrender by policyholders in both Ordinary and Industrial Departments continued to characterize business, are reported as being responsible for this increase.

A declaration of dividends, payable in 1944, amounting to $105,974,814 was made. This is the eighth successive year that dividends of more than $100,000,000 have been declared. Dividends paid by the Metropolitan since its incorporation three-quarters of a century ago together with those declared for 1944 amount to more than $2,000,000,000.

EDWIN C. McDONALD

Vice-President in Charge of Canadian Head Office of Metropolitan Life Insurance Company reports a total of $118,500,000 invested in War Loan and Victory Bonds to date.

Commenting on the Company's operations in Canada Mr. McDonald pointed out Canadians had taken out $176,849,896 of life insurance with the Metropolitan last year. This new insurance brought the total life insurance owned with the Company by its 2,200,000 Canadian policyholders to $1,558,011,369.

During 1943, over $27,000,000 was paid out by Metropolitan to its Canadian policyholders and their beneficiaries. In addition, Metropolitan's Nursing and other Welfare services were maintained in 1943. A total of 230,045 nursing visits were made last year to holders of Industrial, Group and other policies in Canada.

Realism...now and after the war

WE hear a great deal these days about postwar planning. Some of it seems sound and practical, and some of it is "crystal gazing."

While literally hundreds of public and private agencies are thinking of postwar planning, there are a few things that realistic individuals are sure of. They know that first and foremost the war has to be won and nothing should interfere with all-out efforts toward this end.

They know that economic tides ebb and flow; that the future, like the past, will experience good times and bad; that when bad times come, many people will face economic hardships.

They know that they, like everyone else, are growing older; that the life of any individual is uncertain; and that in accordance with the immutable laws of nature, heads of families will continue to pass on.

Knowing these things, some 30 million people insured by Metropolitan in Canada and the United States are providing definite measures of protection against these uncertainties of life through some 29 billion dollars of life insurance.

In addition to providing an anchor to windward for the individuals involved and for their families, the thrift of these policyholders is bound to be of a stabilizing character during the postwar period.

This is Postwar Realism of the highest order.

Let Them Take Their Fish Home

The contention of W. L. Miller, Liberal Member for Algoma-Manitoulin, who told the Fish and Game Committee of the Ontario Legislature this week that American tourists are helping to deplete Canada's game fish by being permitted to take fish across the line to their homes, shows a lack of appreciation of the value of tourist trade. He even goes so far as to urge a virtual ban on tourists taking fish back to the United States.

Up until the war began Canada spent considerable sums of money in the States on advertising the beauty of our country and the fine fishing to be had over here. Partly because of the publicity, as well as hearsay, the Americans did flock over here in great numbers until our tourist business was one of the most lucrative in the country. Not all of them came over for the fishing but a lot did and those who were exceptionally successful in catching some fine specimens of fish took them back with them principally to show their friends examples of their skill. This helped to advertise our country to our advantage and created a desire on the part of others to spend their holidays over here.

Everyone knows that fish is one of the most perishable of meats, and unless kept well chilled, tends to lose its flavor rapidly. We do not see how many American tourists are going to take any quantity of fish home with them and hope to use it unless they live close to the border. The idea of getting melted ice water with a string of fish odor on their cars must stop a lot of fishermen from bringing home their catches from long distances. We have read of an American catching a large muskellunge and immediately packing up so he could get the trophy home but we think this type of person is the exception rather than the rule for most of them prefer to stay until their holiday period is finished.

Mr. Miller stated further that despite the restocking of our lakes and streams there has been no appreciable increase in the number of fish. In some circumstances this is probably true and may be due to the way in which the restocking is done. The trend of later years, first in the United States and then here, has been to use fingerlings instead of fry for restocking purposes. The fry which are just hatched and then planted in strange waters make fine food for the native fish with the result that only a small percentage of the fry reach even the fingerling state. The fingerlings are naturally more alert to the dangers which surround them and are able to fend for themselves. Not so are the fry which serve for food for the real small fish which thrive on fry. This in itself enables a large number of them to survive the early years.

There are other factors which enter into depletion of fish in lakes but we cannot agree with the latest suggestion that the few fish which American tourists take home with them is one of the main contributing causes. It would be bad publicity tending to create resentment among large numbers of our friends across the border. It would place us in a "dog in the manger" class at a time when every dollar we can get from the tourist trade is that much extra jam on our bread.

Rationing Is No Hardship

With new ration books soon to be issued again to Canadians, it is just as well to reflect that Canada has not suffered from any severe shortages. There may have been inconveniences, but that is not suffering. The recent government order temporarily suspending meat rationing shows that some effort is being made to relieve the situation at an early date, or as soon as it is practical.

No, Canadians have not really suffered from their rationing. Already there have been changes in the rationing schedule. Meat is off the list, and coupon values have been increased in certain instances. No government would dare to legislate the appetites of its citizens unless it was forced to do so by thoughtless buying which resulted in excessive shortages.

Admittedly there are a few items which some people think should be available more freely, as coffee for example, but as soon as conditions warrant it the restrictions will be lifted. The moment the supply of these articles is assured, then the bothersome rationing program and the administration associated with it will likely go.

It has been rather clearly demonstrated already that when rationing restrictions are suspended, consumption does not increase very noticeably. The temporary removal of meat rationing, for instance, was not followed by an appreciable decrease in the supply, or increase in demand. Shortages preceding the introduction of meat rationing were caused by the immediate purchase of large quantities of pork and beef to the British Isles for civilian consumption and for feeding our own fighting men as well as those of the British Army rather than any lack of supplies. Now that there is an extra supply on hand rationing was lifted and sane buying seems to be the rule. Canada is certainly one of the favored nations of the world and there should be no complaints on the manner of our living.

"Let's Not Be Dupes or Dopes"

(From "News From Belgium," New York)

Let us not be dupes or dopes. Americans should not use fine-throwers against Japs, but rather Japs get on killing rampages. Pilots. Hitler can kill 50,000 British civilians, 30,000 Dutchmen in Rotterdam and 10,000 Belgians on the road, but we can't do harm to a German city? We aren't human because we are human and the enemy is inhuman?

There is nothing human about war. Its aim is to break the enemy physically and morally. If the fight is carried within certain limits, all the better, but that depends on the fighters. The fighting will always descend to the level of the meanest of them. That should be allowed in fairness to the gentlemen.

Hitler and Mussolini asked for the air attacks. They got them. It is regrettable that they did so, but it has one great moral advantage besides its military results. It tells the Germans what the word war really means: not merely gloria victoria, but women and children blown to pieces, houses demolished, darkness, filth and unending misery.

The Germans are hard of hearing. They have never heard the voices of reason and of wisdom. They may listen now.

Money At Interest

(Chicago Daily News)

Back in 1857 one Samuel Francis deposited $150 in a Utah (then) bank. Not long ago the bank closed his account, paying his heirs the original $150 plus $8,095 interest.

That is an intriguing and an inspiring item; but what really caught our eye was another item that appeared about the same time under a Jerusalem date line. In the outskirts of Jerusalem, it appears, some one dug up an earthenware vessel containing a half-dozen shekels and some other coins, all minted before the Christian era.

What would have happened had that hoard of coins been deposited in a bank and draw compound interest continuously until 1944 A.D.? We shudder to contemplate the cataclysmic result. That pile of gold buried at Fort Knox would be just a piece of small change in comparison. Inflation would be a fact, not something to contemplate with jitters.

Perfect virtue is to do unwitnessed what we should be capable of doing before the world.—Rochefoucaud.

JUST FOLKS

FREEDOM AND TYRANNY

Oh, what's it all about,
The bloodshed and the strife,
The heartache and the doubt
That fill the world of life?
And this they dare to say—
The Nazis and the Japs—
To find a better way!
To rearrange the maps!

A better way to what?
More glory for the few?
More helpless victims shot
For what they've tried to do?
Oh, when have tyrants grim,
Since first the world began,
Given any thought to him—
The ordinary man?

But ask the first you meet,
Who battles to be free,
Of land or sky or fleet,
And his reply will be:
"I want a chance to live
Beneath a gentle rule;
The right to earn and give;
The right to church and school.

"I want a home secure
From hunger and despair;
The doctor's coming sure
When illness threatens there;
Good friends to come to call;
The chance to rest a bit;
And all the comforts small
Which tyrants won't permit."

Betting on Dog Races in Britain Reaches Unofficial Total of $200,000,000 in 1943

MANY TRACKS OPERATE

By ALLAN NICKLESON
(Canadian Press Staff Writer)

London, Britain, (CP)—Britain went to the dogs in 1943—to the tune of more than $200,000,000.

That amount passed through greyhound race betting windows, chiefly, it came from the thousands of service personnel and workers who flee London each Saturday—mostly around London—to wager on the sport that has challenged football as the greatest drawing card in the country. A large part of the money, of course, returned to the pockets of the bettors.

Publication of the staggering figures—admittedly only an estimate since no official government announcement has been made—recalled that all betting machines are owned by the commission which runs the tracks and that by a special act passed 10 years ago these companies get 90 per cent of the money invested by the public.

That same act limits for every $100 wagered, $66 is shoved back across the betting counters in bets to bettors whose choices finished in the money.

In addition, the track operators and the government share admission prices which range from 45 to 90 cents at most tracks.

20,000 Employees.

From the gross profits come the expenses. At least 20,000 regular employees are on the track lists besides a great number of "casuals". Each track has its own expert veterinary surgeons, trainers and kennel maids, time-keepers and engineers.

Behind the scenes are the bookmen, private trainers and owners. Dog prices have skyrocketed since the war and the average price for a good racer is $1,200. The demand is terrific.

"To get a greyhound pedigree puppy without knowing his performance would cost perhaps 300 guineas (about $1,500)," one expert said. "A champion dog which would run in London Saturday's big races would cost its owners $1,700 ($7,650)."

All this wagering didn't escape the eye of the army of New York, Dr. Cyril Garbett. Addressing an annual bank meeting, he said:

"I have read the enormous increase in the amount or money lodged spent in connection with dog racing. Very large sums are being spent in this way and the increase in the last few years has been tremendous. But surely it would be better for the nation if some of the money were put into an insurance fund later."

Toronto, March 24 — (CP) — Lacrosse is due for a big boost in popularity across the provinces in western Canada if plans now being hid work out. The Dominion Amateur Lacrosse Association will launch an all-out drive to interest juniors and youngsters in that province, while the Canadian Lacrosse Association is expected to break the prairie loop strength.

Wm McGroggan, chairman of the Dominion body's promotional committee, revealed that C.L.A. is prepared to spend between $2,500 and $5,000 in the three prairie provinces to get the game. The Amateur Association will help youngsters starting lacrosse by paying for half the equipment, and established clubs will be helped in various ways.

With schools closed all but by the war, the boys men see an excellent chance to lay a foundation for the future among the younger players. It's a chance for the youngsters to join.

Family Entertainment:

It happened in London, Ont., during a wrestling match between Bill Longson and Frankie Sexton. Someone tossed a lighted cigaret at Longson, and when police tried to evict the suspected offender a near riot broke out. Bedlam reigned for a few minutes, with orange, paper cups and even (the reported) a set of false teeth in the fling by angered fans. When things quieted down a little promoter Sammy Sobel stepped to the public address system and announced in French, English and Yiddish, by telling them, "Bring your mother, wife or sweetheart here — it's safe."

Incidentally:

Goaltender Ray Fredericks of Fort Frances Abitibi team in the Thunder Bay district, is only 14. He is believed the youngest netminder ever to complete in the Allan Cup playoffs... MAURICE RICHARD DEFEATS TORONTO ALL BY HIMSELF

Star Right Winger, Ably Assisted by Lach and Blake, Scores Five Goals

HAMILTON SCORES

By HAROLD FREEMAN
Canadian Press Staff Writer

Montreal, March 24 — (CP) — Montreal Canadiens and Toronto Maple Leafs adjourned to Toronto today to continue their Stanley Cup semi-final feud Saturday night with the count tied at one game each. Canadiens tied things up Thursday night with a 5-1 victory, thanks to the sensational five goals of Maurice Richard.

A solid crowd of more than 12,000 practically raised the roof when Richard fired number five midway through the third period to establish a new league record for individual goal-scoring in a play-off contest.

But Richard had plenty of help on those goals. Elmer Lach and Toe Blake were sensational on the line with him, and every time they set him up perfectly for his close-in drives on Paul Bibeault, Leaf goalie. At the other end of the ice, Bill Durnan was right back in form with a sparkling exhibition that made up for the bit of sloppy work he was charged with when the Leafs took the opener 3-1 Tuesday night.

Reg Hamilton was the only Leaf who could find the range on Durnan, and he did it the long way through the second on a shot that was out of the reach of the goalie handled during the evening.

Richard started his parade with the Habs early in the second and he added another before Hamilton banged the Leaf tally. It was a busy period for Richard, because he drew two penalties as well. He finished things off in the third with another couple of counters. Blake drew another of the five goals and Lach on four of them.

He Cashes In On Freak Beat

Sydney, Australia, (CP)—Just before the boxing is going to start two bookmakers were discussing prospects. Each handled a horse called Main Topic. The other pooh-poohed its chances.

"What will you lay me?" asked the first.

"A pound a week for life, all to nothing", said the other.

Main Topic won and the winner is collecting. His only regret is that he is 70, and "won't enjoy it long".

Incidentally, he claims to be the biggest bookmaker in the world — 265 pounds.

BUFFALO BISONS TWO GAMES UP ON INDIANAPOLIS

Hershey Bears Draw Even With Cleveland by Beating Barons

SMART CONTESTS

(By The Canadian Press)

The Buffalo Bisons invade enemy territory tonight, but they have the satisfaction of knowing it will take the Indianapolis Capitals at least two games to catch up with them in their American Hockey League playoff series.

The Bisons took the 2-0 lead in games last night at Buffalo by turning back the Capitals 3-1 before a crowd of 8,798, largest weekday turnout of the local season. Meanwhile the Hershey Bears were drawing even with Cleveland Barons at the same score by defeating the Clevelanders at Hershey, 3-1, two nights running. Both clubs are at Cleveland tonight.

The Bisons and Capitals continued all their scoring to the first period, with the Bisons again being paced by second leading goal getter Bernie Ruelle put the Capitals in front midway through the period, but the Bisons tied it up a little later and Ruelle's pass set up Kelly for the lead on Larry Tidbeault's goal. Fred Hurst set up the thing Bison goal by Jack Fisher.

Gason Gauthier notched Hershey's first goal on a shot from inside in the first period. Heck Posso made it two on a second Hershey goal in the second stanza and in the third period Art Bachbuchs scored the Bisons tied it up a little later and Ruelle's pass set up Kelly for the lead on Larry Tidbeault's goal. DETROIT WINGS ON EVEN TERMS WITH THE HAWKS

Team Storms Back Into Contention With 4-1 Win on Home Ice

PLAY ON SUNDAY

Detroit, March 24 (CP)—The Detroit Red Wings and the Chicago Black Hawks were on even terms today with one victory apiece in the best-of-seven series in the Stanley Cup hockey semi-finals.

The Red Wings stormed back into contention last night by whipping their rivals 4-1 before a home crowd of 13,767.

The victory averaged a setback on Tuesday night when Chicago took the opener 3-1 to win their first game on Detroit ice in four years.

After a scoreless first period, Detroit jumped into the lead early in the second season on a goal by Joe Carveth. Syd Howe made it 2-0 in the final period of that frame and with the third period only 31 seconds old, Don Grosso sent the 20-foot shot for the Wings' third goal.

Detroit then assumed a defensive role during the game—and it doesn't include the red-faced thumbs that Paul Bibeault performs with each toot of his whistle every time the game's over—but it's also nothing better than thinking up new tasks for the ref . . . This weekend the directors will be voting on the proposals to stop "goal tending" by awarding a goal when a defensive player touches the ball on its descending arc toward the basket . . . That sounds tough, but one rules-maker points out that no worse than making a referee decide when a player jumping to bat out a shot gets his hand above the basket . . . "At least in the latter case there is a clear where he can see it," this sent explains.

One good point about the basketball-type rule, the man adds, is that the same ones apply, with minor variations, to all players from high schools to the high-salaried professionals . . . That's why a good high school player often can step right into the pro ranks . . . "If we had separate school and college competition," the man in the know says, "there might be so many variations that a boy might have to learn an entirely different game."

Western University Approves Resumption College Athletics

(By The Canadian Press)

Acting on a request from the Students' Athletic Council of McGill University for information as to the status of the ban on all senior intercollegiate sports, combined undergraduate bodies at the University of Western Ontario, London, yesterday unanimously passed a motion supporting a proposal for the resumption of college athletics.

At Toronto Varsity, T. A. Reed of the Blues' Athletic Association said last night that question of resuming intercollegiate sport had been discussed briefly, but that there was it was "out of the question for the duration".

It was officially announced at Halifax last night the Maritime Amateur Hockey Association would have no team in the Memorial Cup playdowns because the Amherst, N.S., Ramblers had been unable to secure financial backing for the scheduled series with the Quebec winners, to whom the Ramblers were defaulting.

Pitcher Johnny Gorsica has come to terms with the Detroit Tigers and will report at the training camp at Evansville, Ind., next week. It was announced last night by the American League Club.

The Department of National Defence yesterday ruled two soldier-players, Chad Bark and Jack Hanson, were ineligible to play with Barrie Colts against Kingston Navymen in the O.H.A. Junior "B" sudden-death playoff game at Toronto tonight.

Former Middleweight Boxing Champion of the World, Teddy Yarosz, yesterday passed his army medical test at Pittsburgh. He weighs 154 pounds, is 5 feet 10½ inches tall and Cleveland meets Pittsburgh at Muncie, Ind., so that the major league fans can get at it—can spring be far behind?

"There is a pride of organization among the players this season. The long association has placed a rule around them," Conacher declared, "and it will not be discarded." So spoke John A. Mertler, chairman of the board and president of the National League for 16 years, who has seen the league weather many a storm, in looking to the 1944 season.

"For 44 years the National League has operated with the same eight clubs," the age of the senior circuit reveals. "Consider that in 44 years those clubs were part of the old 12-team league, they've been together 52 years. Within that time Chicago haven't been out of the league a single time it was organized back in 1876. The American League has had the same eight clubs for 42 years.

"Some fear the attendance may fall far under the usual standard, but I do not subscribe to that idea. I don't believe the absence of established stars will hamper the gate to an great extent. To me, it appears we are in for an interesting season—one full of thrills."

CASUAL COMMENT
by K.J.C.

(Well, why not!)

It seems some Canadian boys, after taking Naples, were looking at the ancient ruins behind Mount Vesuvius.

One Canuck remarked: "Looks as hot as hell."

Whereat an English soldier mumbled under his breath:: "These Canadians have been everywhere."

(Nothing new!)

It's oft been said; "There's nothing new under the sun."

That may be true enough, but the mails this week brought a letter to the one who winks the most tiddles from a standard who has won minutes with the champion Upton Allen withholding his entry.

However, we don't think much of Mr. Winkler's idea if for no other reason than it would limit the tournament for March 32nd, which on the calender would be just about a week from next Saturday. (Take a gander, folks).

Received the 1944 official guide of the National Baseball Congress of America through the mails recently and we must say it is a splendid publication full of information. Besides the history of baseball in both Canada and the United States, the Baseball Congress made its first appearance at Wichita, Kan. The Baseball Congress made its first appearance at Wichita, Kan., 25 years ago and today is serving to halt the inroads of baseball's deadliest foe, infantile paralysis. This season will see the first championship playoff for the United States national tournament in baseball's history, the winner of the Canadian tourney to be played in Toronto in a seven game final series starting Saturday afternoon, August 19. Saturday is nation-wide registration day and applications for participation registration will be accepted at each of 16,000 polling booths across the country. Applicants must be between the ages of 18 and 45 years, and will be required to fill in his name, age, street address, telephone number, previous baseball experience and playing position and these lists are then forwarded to team sponsors in each section. The 1944 guide is chock-full of interesting data all the details in connection with the nation-wide baseball program as well as a wealth of other information in regard to the doings of the semi-pro baseball world. Pictures of the outstanding semi-pro baseball clubs of last season.

Lol Solomon, noted Toronto sport's promoter, died 12 years ago today. He had built the old Mutual Street Arena in Toronto, where the Arenas, Toronto and St. Pats played their N.H.L. games, and the Toronto Maple Leaf games for years. He was also instrumental in the erection of the Toronto Maple Leaf Stadium, home of the Toronto baseball club and baseball club. He was president of the Toronto ball club at the time of his death.

(So soon?)

Exhibition baseball games will be played between major league clubs commencing this week-end. In the American League the Chicago White Sox will play the old Mutuals in Evansville, Ind., on Saturday, while the Washington Senators will play Cleveland Indians at Pittsburgh. Philadelphia A's at Pittsburgh, and Cleveland meets Pittsburgh at Muncie, Ind., so that the major league fans can get at it—can spring be far behind?

Horse Sense Bridge

LESSON NO. 238

By SAM GORDON
The Kibitzer

Bridge players are sometimes human rjaks. Their rake of mortality is power. Come to think of it, power is the reason the unskilled at the bridge table. But only because thoughts do not kill.

Come a pair of partnership hands like these:

SOUTH
♠A Q J 10
♥Q J 10 9

♠8 7 6 4
♥A K 7 4 3
♦A K 4
♣Q J 5

The bidding sailed along like this:

SOUTH	NORTH
1 S	2 D
2 H	4 D
4 NT	6 D
6 NT

The four no-trump bid was the convention for asking partner how many aces and kings he holded. In this case a list of code replies, the six diamond response showed two aces and one king.

Right here is something to chisel into your bridge brain. When a player bids four no-trump, and partner has last bid in that deal, that player must say by the next no-trump the last for that side.

All systems do not adhere to that policy. But Horse Sense advises no exception. The bid will lead to a sticky situation calls for quick communication between partners.

The four no-trumper is the one who says he sees a chance for a slam. He is the one who asks partner for his aces and kings. He is the only one who knows the total number of aces and kings in the pair.

Consequently, the four no-trumper is in a position to know where to stop. He knows what danger is, set. He knows what the final bid must be. He should make the final decision.

Six no-trump was easy to make, but seven was not. Seven is played north carried it to seven no-trump. Which was defended. Now you know why we are thinking of the mortality rate. I could moda de suy.

WOES OF YANKEES MOUNT AS MANY CALLED TO ARMS

Roy Weatherly, Outfielder, Latest to Meet Draft Board on April 1

BASEBALL ROUNDUP

New York, March 24 (AP)—The Yanks are going and at the rate they're losing ballplayers to the army for the service perhaps it was slightly prophetic when Manager Joe McCarthy had the boys participating in a potato race yesterday. The American League race will be just that to them if the migration continues.

Outfielder Roy Weatherly is the latest definitely to be hit. It was learned he can expect to go into the service April 1.

To add to McCarthy's woes, Jack Phillips, a centerfield candidate McCarthy had been watching, announced he would have today to meet his draft board April 1.

Just a week ago the Yankees lost catcher Bill Dickey and second baseman Joseph Gordon, and yesterday, who played centre field part of the time last year, and the club has had 14 backfield, as the saying is the strength of a team is through the middle.

News of other camps:

Wallingford, Conn. — Infielder Whitey Wietelmann of the Boston Braves threw his right elbow out of joint yesterday in batting practice.

French Lick, Ind.—Third baseman Lonny Frey of Indiana was down to stir today, and only one—Ace Adams—is regarded seriously.

What's Doing in Sport

Bear Mountain, N.Y. — (AP)—Frenchy Bordagaray, holdout outfielder, yesterday failed to reach a contract agreement with President Branch Rickey of the Brooklyn Dodgers but it was announced Pitcher Fred Fitzsimmons had come to terms. Second-Baseman Frank Drews will be purchased from Rochester of the American Association.

Toronto, (CP)— Secretary A. L. Irwin of the Ontario Amateur Basketball Association yesterday announced that the final series for the provincial senior title will open on Wednesday, March 29, at Windsor, Wednesday, March 29. Between Windsor and the Hayes Steel Kings of Merritton. The return game will be played in St. Catharines on Saturday, April 1.

CALVES ALSO OUT

Omaha, Neb., March 24. (AP) Ted Miller, apartment house proprietor, who has had arguments about cats, dogs and children, took a new tack today when Gene changed it to "no dogs or calves allowed." A city boy and a young cougle who had engaged an apartment from him tried to sneak a calf into their living quarters, he said.

GOVT. PRAISED AND CRITICIZED FOR ITS POLICIES

C.C.F. Member Objects to Interest Charge of Premiums Paid

COMMITTEES NAMED

Toronto, March 24. (CP)—The Ontario Government was both praised and criticized for its policies and administration during a night sitting of the provincial legislature Thursday night and it is expected the budget debate will be finished at today's session.

Three governments have held provincial assistance and provision for members of the armed forces after brief investigation, it was learned by the committee stages of the soldiers' civil re-establishment bill.

One of the measures, providing payment by premiums on insurance policies up to $10,000 which a serviceman may have taken out, contains a clause providing for a three-per-cent interest charge on the premiums.

A. Williams (OCF-Ontario) criticized the clause and said "any government that would stoop to do a thing like this is not worth a damn."

Asked to Withdraw

Requests for quotes from the government side for withdrawal brought Dewar half way to his feet but Committee Chairman R. Patterson (L-Grey North) instructed the C.C.F. members to withdraw the clause, which he did, saying that he would "feel just as strongly".

The remark brought a reply from Attorney-General Blackwell later that "the members for Oxford wouldn't make such comment except out of ignorance no matter of person would make it".

Also reported from the committee was that respecting the city of Fort William: Victoria Hospital; Port Arthur Civic Hospital; and the Boards of the Baptist Convention of Ontario and Quebec and Assembly Fathers.

Introduced by Labor Minister Daley and given first reading was a measure amending the Factory, Shop and Office Building Act. Mr. Daley said it would provide for the health and safety of women for workers in these establishments.

Under a motion submitted to the House by Premier Drew, a select committee of fifteen will be appointed to study the report of the Provincial Fuel Commission on the development of liquite resources in Northern Ontario. Premier said experimental work to date had cost thousands of dollars.

In reply to a question by Ftt. Lt. E. F. Winters (OCF-Toronto Riverside), Premier Drew said the bills that went through committee stages for the protection of members of the armed forces also had volunteered for overseas service.

Four Members Heard.

Four members were heard at the night sitting. They were: E. W. Connor (OCF-Hamilton East), who said that if government plans to bring British industry to Canada after the war were carried out British workers might be put on the "dole" in Canada. Mr. Connor said the Toronto Bellwoods), who urged the government take over 50 per cent of the cost of education instead of making a grant of $3,000,000 to the province; Colonel Noble Taylor (PC-Huron) and A. Belanger (L-Prescott).

Mr. Belanger re-iterated a call for co-operation between members of all political organizations to work together for the betterment of Canada.

Mr. Connor was critical of the proposal to bring to Canada after British capital to Canada after the war. He said: "Canada is a country that our greatest post-war markets will be found in the home living on proper wages".

Dr. Taylor said no economic policy could be laid down for the re-cords it's still the Phillies in the cellar, regardless of Philadelphia. Although they'll wear a Blue Jay emblem on their shirts.

The late and lamented contest to select a new emblem for the club was the handiwork of owner Bob Carpenter and his public relations counsel, Bill Phillips.

Returns flooded the Phil office, over 4,000 of them, and among the entries, sentence, but then, was a healthy stand of mail from Toronto and the west fans who begged that the Phillies be allowed to keep their nickname.

Now the club is busy disclaiming any change in name.

FATS FOR SNARING DEER

Midland, March 24. (CP)—Marjorie Desbarres, of nearby Tiny Township, Simcoe, paid a total of $82.50 in Midland Police Court yesterday following his conviction of a charge of snaring deer, contrary to the Game and Fisheries Act.

Washington Spotlight

By C. B. BLACKBURN
(Canadian Press Staff Writer)

Washington, March 24 (CP) — American veterans of the present war are assured of generous aid to rehabilitate themselves in civilian life even in the midstream of measures now being favorably considered by Congress.

Already Congress has voted to give them mustering-out pay up to $300 depending upon service, in addition to pensions and treatment when needed.

Other provisions for the veterans' welfare include a year or more of schooling or vocational training at the expense of the government, the payment to $1,000, interest free the first year, for part payment on homes, farms or business, unemployment compensation and services; and, unemployment compensation ranging from $15 to $25 a week up to 52 weeks in the first two years after return to civilian life.

American ex-service men are looking to their own future inde-pendently, too. They are saving about $1,500,000,000 a year—more than 10 per cent of current service payrolls, through insurance, war bonds, cash deposits and money sent home.

Numerous provisions are contained in the so-called "G. I. Bill of Rights" which seems sure of easy passage through Congress. Other provisions are for the expenditure of $500,000,000 for veterans' hospitals and $300,000,000 for enlarging existing civilian hospitals.

Congressional Feuds:

Apologetic and deferential, straining for realization of the hardships suffered by those on the fighting front, members of the Senate and House, representing the George Senator (Rep.-Ohio) stood in the House on the other day and plaintively asked if something could be done toward ridding the cities of the bulldozers of the cockroaches which infest them."

House Front Lesser:

More than twice as many American dead in accidents in 1942 than in the battle fields of the war to date, and about 50 times as many were hurt in accidents than has been wounded in the war. Accidental fatalities in 1942 totaled 94,000, a 7,000 increase over 1941. Cost of accidents was estimated at $8,000,000,000.

Phillies Refuse To Change Name

THE LITTLE DOG BARKED

by ANNE ROWE

CHAPTER 15

"Don't believe as he was," the inspector said thoughtfully. "Looks like another kind of shenanigans to me. Don't forget, he was awful rich an' Shirley Temple's pappy. Kids like playing around with got big ideas of how rich they be, specially when they're spoiled."

"But he's really been married, they've been more nine and ten years, do about each of the millions. Wanted to know more, but they ain't another word of it in them society rags. Seems funny. They should've, Mack, kept everything like they was and I got a hunch. It's funny. I'm funny. Knowing all that's back of that old ruckus, I mean."

"As a case to Mack's murder?" I asked.

"Ayuh. And to the attack on the Barolle girl," he nodded. "I ain't feeling so easy about it. Them two along—but slow. Just got an inkling of the motive? Mr. Lord's money, and I know who's in danger!"

"In danger? You think there may be another attack on Linda?" I asked worriedly.

"Sure to be," the Inspector nodded. "Old Mack—guess he just happened. Seems like he got wise to who Miss Barolle really was, either through her thanks to the clipping, or by overhearing something. And so he went to the old inn to stand guard over her and—"

"Inspector Pettengill, he's confronted him and was killed," I finished for him.

"Ayuh. But we figured that all along," the Inspector agreed. "Look Mrs. Dorcas! Let me go over the case the way I see it? Maybe it'll help you and me." He settled himself on his hard seat with a great sigh and began his analysis.

"You're this Mr. Amrose write a play together. Mr. McVane's producer here it and fixe with Mr. Linwood to try it out here. Why, did you do it?"

I hadn't said. But I explained: "Because it's the one really good festival summer theatre far away from New York to have the critics away. Mr. McVane wanted to be his own judge about Linda's performance."

"I see. Mr. McVane has your play locked up tight, and not a word off as an actress, says he. But really to bring her here he had together." The Inspector reasoned. "That's why he sneaks off every where. Can make sure she can't get after him for it. We—I, so far, so good. Now I see how it was. Them's two playwrights don't like this here Pettengill. Also Mr. Loring's sister, done near having a fit when she heard his mother's coming and it may cost a lot if he finds out he got a daughter. So she sends her husband after them two old fools and they hatch out a plot against him and Linda. Only she means the girl. And she tells her own daughter to keep mighty thing, but got braine and knows what she'll do. It's his turn to whom else did he talk?"

"Meaning to Bill Parris to on it, and did he mention old Mack?" I asked.

"Ayuh. Something like it," the Inspector acknowledged. "But only because he's the one else in the motive, fer's I can find out. Might be, young Parris really only went to the old inn to scare Linda, or plot Mack's death, and old Mack's dead. Might've been more or less. And as I said, somebody else might've cut that rope in the theatre before rehearsal started. Can't keep fitering old playwrights likely."

"But you're pretty sure it was Bill Parris at the old inn?" I insisted.

"Him—or one of them others on the stage. Wished I knew for whom your little dog was making. Way they all stood it's hard to say. They was Linwood and Paulsen and Cathy and Miss Marshall and Mrs. Linwood—beg pardon; Miss Wyland. It is a bunch, and the back of 'em young Parris and the stage manager and them kids who play small parts. They's out of it. Too dumb, and no reason at—all."

"So it could also be Linwood," I thought but loud.

The Inspector nodded. "Could. Or Mrs. Linwood, that matter. But you're right. Could been him, or Miss Wyland, female impersonator side young Parris. Only one it could've been, from motive standpoint, is Colby. They's too much of him one way and not enough the other. Kinda funny, Colby. Don't want to talk with him. Come on, and we'll see."

"What am I going to do now? What shall I tell Mr. Lord?" I asked the Inspector on our way back to the inn.

"Same's I've said, to her or Mr. Loring's nothing," he advised me. "Not to her, but don't let on you know. Make her tell you. And you may do me a favor. Go to your room and write down all we said at the Parries. I'm going in the theatre and watch rehearsal a while."

It would have been funny, if it hadn't been so irritating, I thought, hearing the scenes in the inn: Inspector Pettengill watching my rehearsal, while I typed his notes.

It was nearing noon on my typewriter when Ada came in with some freshly pressed dresses for a different Ada from the prim school marm, tearful innocent and scared conspirator of yesterday: ten years younger looking and almost pretty in a new print dress. She had color in her cheeks and sparkle in her eyes. And they were going to part.

If I'd imagined I could tell her news, I'd have changed my mind. Ada knew all I did and more, having struck up an ardent friendship with the nursing Hatch. Hatch was over to the house for supper last night. My dear, he said those he don't get good vittles often, poor man! He's a widower with five little girls. He showed me their pictures and they're sweet!"

So Ada's Adam's atrophied heart had come to life again. Permanently and happily, I hoped.

"Thank you for not letting on it was me who told you of the plot against Linda," Ada went on. "Mr. Loring's sister has softened, she even gave me the evening off when I'd my turn to stay at the office. And the request's granted, Dorcas. Come she had to. I've got dinner guests' tonight. The whole police force, herself, three wives. Sheriff Weymouth and Inspector Pettengill and Doc Chesnut, the coroner. It was Sergt. Hatch's idea, they meeting at our house. For privacy. To talk over poor Mack's murder. Sup he can't be there himself, now's he the girl. It's his turn to stay at the office. And the request's granted, Dorcas. Come she had to. Accountant Foils Attempt to Rob Toronto Bank

Toronto, March 24 — (CP) — An accountant in the Bank of Toronto branch at Dundas St. and Dennison Ave. in west end Toronto today foiled an attempt by two men to rob the bank, wounding one of the pair in the arm and subsequently a slight head wound himself in an exchange of gunfire.

The wounded robber, whose name was not given out by police, is in hospital where his condition is said to be serious. The wound suffered by the accountant, Douglas Kline, is described as not serious.

The two men entered the bank this morning shortly after 10 a.m. while a number of persons were lining up at the teller's cage. One stood at the door with a drawn revolver and the other went to the cage. With a sweep of the shotgun

After one of the men said "This is a holdup", he pointed the bank revolver and fired at the man with the shotgun, wounding him. The man returned the fire and Kline was hit in the head. The wounded man dashed for safety and the women among them screamed.

Despite his wound, the robber jumped on the bank counter in an attempt to get the cash but Kline, blood streaming from the wound on his face, threw him to the floor and then collapsed.

The two bandits ran out to a car parked about 200 feet away with the motor running. The door was locked and they were unable to get in. The one with the shotgun fired a shot against the lock but it remained locked although it was broken. Kline was made in the door.

Then the pair drove away and turned down a nearby street where they came to a tall fence. They abandoned their car and it but the other was unable to do so, a trial to crawl through a hole in the fence caused from loss of blood and was captured by police.

Police said the one who got away was about 18 years of age, five feet, eight to nine inches tall and was wearing brown windbreaker and light colored trousers.

Angry Scenes as Commons Debates Wood Fuel And Distribution of War Plants

J. G. Diefenbaker Charges $800,000 "Thrown Away" in Fuel Movement

HOWE REPLIES

By JAMES McDOOK
(Canadian Press Staff Writer)

Ottawa, March 24. (CP) — The Commons yesterday listened quietly to discussion of munitions contracts, fabrication of skis and the government gasoline rubber plant, and then flared into an old-fashioned hammer and tongs debate on wood fuel and distribution of war plants.

There were angry scenes as John G. Diefenbaker (PC-Lake Centre) said that about $800,000 of the public money had been "thrown away" in the unnecessary movement of green wood fuel from the Lakehead to Winnipeg.

Munitions Minister Howe said the wood had been shipped out in case the weather turned cold and it would be needed in Winnipeg.

Mr. Diefenbaker said he did not criticize Mr. Howe for having the wood cut.

"Thank God for that", said Mr. Howe.

Then I do not thank the Deity that this wood was shipped to Winnipeg, particularly at the $8 [illegible] freight rate when it could have been stored at the head of the lakes until needed", said Mr. Diefenbaker.

Could Have Cut Coal

If the wood had been left to dry, the freight would have cost half as much. The timber control authorities had gone ahead with the shipment although the wood was not needed in Winnipeg, "and in that one small item the people of Canada have lost a million [illegible] from $600,000 to $800,000".

Mr. Howe: "All right, that is a charge we will investigate and see whether $600,000 to $800,000 was lost in the Winnipeg situation. All the wood raised there was not worth that much. My honorable friend is making a very definite charge; I suggest a royal commission or a committee to inquire into whether $600,000 to $800,000 was lost".

Mr. Diefenbaker: "The Minister, as usual, is faced with facts, seeks refuge in truculence".

Mr. R. B. Hanson (PC-York Sunbury) said he had been "astounded" to find that of a total of $714,000,000 invested by the Munitions Department in fixed assets relating to war production facilities and the like, "less than a fraction of one per cent" had been spent in communities outside the central provinces.

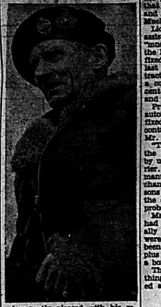
ADDRESSED CANADIAN TROOPS IN BRITAIN



Apparently pleased with his reception by Canadian troops in England for the invasion, Gen. Sir Bernard Montgomery makes a telling point in his down to earth address. Microphone is erected on jeep which formed improvised but effective platform. — (Canadian Army Overseas Photo.)

Few in Maritimes

Mr. Hanson read the locations of plants which had been given assistance, noting that few were in the Maritimes. He said there were had been [illegible] of this department, "and he must have had a good many" requests.

Mr. Howe: "Very few . . . I think the opposition has touched on them all".

Mr. Hanson: . . . "We have not scratched the surface of the failures because we cannot get the information".

Mr. Hanson said the Clark-Russ plant at Dartmouth, N.S., had received an advance of $2,500,000 and he wondered if the money was recoverable, "or a dead loss".

Mr. Howe: "My honorable friend has been complaining about no plants built in the Maritimes. Now he has a very decent industry that has done a fine job and he asked if the money is recoverable".

Mr. Hanson said he wondered what the plant buildings would be used for if the firm was to be closed down.

Mr. Howe: "If the Maritimes keep yapping about them—"

Mr. Hanson: "Yapping!—I resent that".

Mr. Howe: "Yes, yapping, that is all".

Mr. Hanson: "I never yip anything", insisted the minister, "all the yapping now. And I say, too, that this is very rude and out of order and he ought to take it back".

Much Speculation

Lionel Chevrier, parliamentary assistant to Mr. Howe, said that much speculation had been made by the Munitions Department how the fixed price ceiling on all contracts in the last quarter of 1943 only 18 contracts out of a total of 600 were on a cost plus basis. In 1942 33 per cent of contracts were cost plus and in 1943 only 9.75 per cent.

Previously all contracts for autonomous equipment were on a fixed price basis, but in aircraft contracts this was found impossible, said Mr. Chevrier.

"There is no way of determining the efficiency of aircraft except by use in combat", said Mr. Chevrier. "Hence we must ask our plane manufacturers to make further changes in design . . . For these reasons aircraft contracts must be on the cost plus basis and they will probably remain that way".

Many changes in the contracts had to be made and where originally all any-accumulation contracts were fixed price contracts they had been re-adjusted and in these cases a fixed price or a fixed-fee plus a bonus for reduction of cost to date. The whole idea was to get the best thing to a fixed price as it presented an incentive to cost reduction.

Large Ships Sunk By British Subs

London, March 24 (CP)—Summarizing submarine actions of the eastern fleet, a British naval affairs announcement said today a Japanese cruiser of the Kuma class, a 7,000-ton aircraft carrier, eight supply ships and several other naval craft have been sunk since the first of the year.

Another cruiser was torpedoed and one small and one large supply ship were damaged; Japanese Kuma class cruisers displace 5,100 tons and carry 439 officers and men.

Pilot Comes Home On Two Engines 50 Ft. Above Ground

A U.S. Bomber Base in Britain, March 24. (CP)—A United States heavy bomber carrying Lieut. John A. Tollefson, Oakland, N.J., flew home from Brunswick yesterday on two engines after bursting over Germany for two hours at less than 50 feet altitude.

The hedge-hopping of the "Ves Mac" stampeded cattle and sent one farmer so angry he threw a rock at the plane.

The engines of the plane were shot up by German fighters, the hydraulic system was wrecked and a box of flares was set afire. Tollefson smothered the flames and threw them overboard.

A huge black-and-white bird was found imbedded in an engine, when the bomber got back to its base.

Full Pack Made Him Weigh 300 lbs.

London, March 24.—(CP)— During his visit to United States parachute troops somewhere in England today, Prime Minister Churchill paused to speak to Laddie Valek of Cleveland, O.

As Valek stepped forward with a full pack, Mr. Churchill asked: "How much do you weigh?"

Valek, who weighs about 135 pounds, stuck out his chest. "Three hundred pounds, Sir," he replied.

The Prime Minister lifted a skeptical eyebrow, smiled and walked on.

R.C.A.F. PILOT LEADS U-BOAT ATTACK

A veteran Atlantic coast pilot with more than 30 months of operational experience, Flying Officer A. P. V. "Pat" Chester, 1612 Angus St., Regina, climbed up his first submarine attack on St. Valentine's Day when he made it a good one, attacking the U-boat with depth charges and machine-gun fire as Chester swept over the conning tower time, once or twice that the air-gunner said they could have dropped a hand grenade down the conning tower. The submarine sent a hail of flak until the last, but failed to hit the hurtling Liberator. — (R.C.A.F. Photo.)

Cheese Production Season Should Be Longer States Chief Grader

Canadian cheese production should not be sacrificed at certain periods of the year in order that good showing from the standpoint of quality might be made. Rather records should be used to indicate where greater care on the part of the producers and makers is necessary in order to maintain high quality during all seasons.

Thus was the advice of W. C. Cameron, Chief, Dairy Products Grading and Inspection Services, Ottawa, as he spoke before a representative group of Central Ontario cheesemakers at their annual spring conference in the city. Speaking at the final session of the conference, Mr. Cameron pointed out in connection with the current wartime utilization of Canadian milk and milk products.

Pointing out the necessity for producing increased quantities of cheese of the highest quality, the speaker advised cheesemakers not to attach too much importance to records showing the quality of cheese. They should be a means to an end, indicating the weak and strong points in the operation of the factory, he said.

Year Second Grade Make

In many instances cheese factories are not opened as soon as they might be in the spring, and are frequently closed in the fall while there is still sufficient milk available to continue making. This is being done, he said, because of the danger of making second grade cheese. The difficulties of operating cheese factories under winter conditions were fully appreciated by Mr. Cameron, but he insisted that these were not normal times and the need for cheese is urgent.

Credit was given by the speaker to those responsible for leadership in Canadian dairying that the balance of relationship between industrial production, consumption and exports of the various dairy products had been maintained essentially the same as that which had existed in the year prior to the war. In pre-war years approximately eight per cent. of the total milk production in Canada, expressed in terms of butterfat, had been exported in the form of cheese and concentrated milk.

Cheese Industry As Balance Wheel

The cheese industry has been considered the balance wheel of Canadian dairying. This had been true because when it was profitable to make cheese and the price paid for cheese milk was attractive to producers, milk was diverted from other products to cheese. As a result other branches of the industry enjoyed a condition whereby there were no burdensome surpluses to depress the home market.

The speaker claimed that it had been fortunate for the Canadian dairying industry that dairy products required by the United Kingdom as the result of the war had been those which Canada had previously been manufacturing for export, namely, cheese and concentrated milks. Canadian farmers had responded magnificently to the appeal for greater milk production as had been indicated by the 8.7 per cent increase in 1943 to that of 1939. Production for 1943 had been 17.4 billion pounds.

Less Butter Made

During 1939, 54 percent of all milk had been used in the manufacture of butter, while during 1943, only 49.14 percent had been so used. Of greater significance had been the fact that the proportion of total milk production used in the manufacture of dairy butter had decreased from 15 percent in 1939 to 7.4 percent in 1943. Despite the drop in butter production, however, the relative position of the butter branch of the industry remained essentially the same as domestic requirements are now being met on a rationed basis.

In reference to the increase in the manufacture of cheese it was noted that in 1939 8.5 percent of all milk was utilized for making Cheddar cheese, while during 1942 the figure was 13.26 percent. The 26 million pounds of cheese made in 1942 had been the greatest in Canadian records. The 1943-44 Canadian cheese contract with the British Food Ministry had been set at 150 million pounds.

Approximately 80 district cheesemakers and dairy officials attended the final session of the conference, a discussion between makers and instructors concluding the program.

Patriotic Grants By P. E. County Total $14,525

Picton, March 24. — Prince Edward County Council met in the council chamber yesterday, by voting patriotic grants totalling $14,525, this is a reduction of $1,000 from that payed to last year; the cut affecting each dependent. This is due to the fact that road expenditures last year exceeded appropriations and left a deficit. As council had also set aside $500 for relief this year, members found it necessary to reduce grants in order to prevent an increase in the tax rate.

The Red Cross was granted $11,200 instead of $15,000; Sir Thomas Picton Chapter I.O.D.E., $900; Salvation Army $1,350; Navy League $870; Chinese Relief $270; Women's Institutes $225; British War Victims' Fund, $50.

There was a lively discussion over road expenditures of last year and council decided that the $60,000 appropriation is not to be exceeded this year. Should any emergency arise which necessitates additional expenditure, the entire council is to be notified.

PRISONERS ESCAPE JAIL

London, Ont., March 23—(CP)—A widespread search was being made through western Ontario today for two prisoners who fled the Middlesex county jail in the last night after one of them, Jail Governor Charles Mitchell said, faked suicide, beat a turnkey and robbed him of his keys.

Mitchell identified the men as Ray Loughrey, 32, Newark, N.J., being held in custody awaiting deportation; and Lucien Lassalle, 32, under three years sentence at Woodstock, Ont., and awaiting trial here on robbery and theft charges.

Cold Weather Hinders Trapping Of Muskrats

In view of weather conditions, season for trapping of muskrats was started too early this year according to the opinion of local fur buyers who report that so far very few hides have been offered for sale in this district. The muskrat trapping season began on March 15th.

Absence of water in the marshes and the fact that nights thus far have not been warm enough to thaw the ice, is said to be given as the reason for the small number of hides being offered. Ice is still in the marshes in the district north of Belleville.

Forecast of higher prices for muskrat hides before the season was completed was made by one Belleville dealer. Top prices being offered at the present range from $2.75 to $3, but it was thought this might be possibly increased to $4 before the season ends. Closing date of the trapping season has not yet been announced by the game department.

Oddfellows Hold Jolly 'At Home'

Bonarlaw, Ont., March 24.—Officers and members of Springbrook Lodge No. 429 Independent Order of Oddfellows and visiting brethren from Bonarlaw entertained a number of friends, not members of the order, at an at-home held in the lodge room on Tuesday of this week.

The Noble Grand, Howard Martin, acted as chairman. Addresses were given by Earl Fox, District Deputy Grand Master, of Stirling, and J. F. Baker of Springbrook Lodge. BRITISH LOSE 73 AIRCRAFT IN BOMBING BERLIN

2,800 Tons Bombs Sent Away By More Than 1,000 Planes

Kiel, Other Targets In Western Germany Also Bombed During The Night

BITTER SKY BATTLES

London, March 25 — (CP)—More than 1,000 R.A.F. bombers poured a heavy load of explosives upon Berlin and other targets in Germany last night in operations which cost the R.A.F. Bomber Air Ministry announced today.

Squadrons of the Canadian bomber group participated in the raid on the German capital, which was blasted anew with 2,800 tons of bombs. Thirteen Canadian bombers were among the 73 planes lost.

Kiel and other objectives in western Germany also were bombed during the night.

Flying from the Tiger, Leaside, Snowy Owl and Porcupine squadrons of the R.C.A.F. bomber group flew to Berlin. Members of the crews reported perfect visibility and said there was heavy flak and intense searchlight activity.

High explosives and fire bombs blanketed the German capital.

The German radio said other British bomber formations raided Leipzig and Weimar but there was no immediate confirmation of this in London.

Bitter Sky Battles

The night's bombers which pounded Berlin fought through one of the bitterest night battles of the whole war. The Berlin radio said large forces of German night fighters began attacking the huge armada as it crossed Heligoland in the north Sea and described it all the way to the capital.

Germany claimed 103 bombers were shot down in the long running night battle which began in the early long battle over the capital as formation after formation roared over. It was the 16th major R.A.F. raid on Berlin since Nov. 18.

American heavy bombers had hit the capital five times in daylight since the last long night raid Feb. 15.

Last night's bomb load equalled the record load loosed over Berlin in that raid but fell short of the all-time mark of 2,360 tons dumped on Frankfurt Wednesday night by an R.A.F.-R.C.A.F. force.

Bombers Attack London

As the British armada streamed eastward, about 150 German bombers broke through London's entire barrage to blast at the British capital's business properties, theatres and churches with tons of incendiaries in the longest raid in twelve months. Many were shot down.

The loss was the R.A.F.'s highest in its 18 months assaults on the Reich. German target but fell afr'short of the record of 96 lost in the R.A.F. Jan. 19 blow at Leipzig.

The wording of the British communique — issued last night by high command dispatched over 1,000 aircraft, Berlin was the main objective" — did not make clear how many of the total force struck at Berlin itself.

In the revived German opposition, after the beating Hitler's air forces have taken in recent American daylight bombing raids was an indication that the Germans are undertaking a last-ditch stand for the protection of what remained of their capital.

Fellow Daylight Blows.

The attacks followed daylight blows by the United States army bombers against Frankfurt and Schweinfurt and, the French airfields of Rennes and St. Dizier.

Berlin was attacked by daylight Wednesday by a great American armada of up to 750 heavy bombers, escorted by another 1,000 long-range fighters. Hundreds of fires were left burning.

The last big attack in the night battle of Berlin was made by the R.A.F. and R.C.A.F. March 16-17, 500-ton assault, the biggest single air attack of the war up to that time.

About 800 bombers and 50 fighters, including a R.A.F. Mustangs, took part in yesterdays daylight raids and encountered little opposition, although two of the targets, Frankfurt and Kiel, were said to be the heavily defended in the past. The raids cost 37 bombers and 11 fighters. The fighters destroyed two Nazi aircraft on the ground and a third as it was taking off.

The German radio struck back at London during the night with the longest raid in 12 months, burning and blasting churches, homes and business properties with tons of incendiaries. Fire of an attacking force which broke through the capital's balloon barrage during a continuous barrage early today in a fresh attempt to set fires were brought down.

Judge Rules Out Probe into Joan Berry's Romances

By JAMES LINDSLEY
(Associated Press Staff Writer)
Los Angeles, March 25 — (AP) — Jurist and heart-throbbing love letter Joan Berry wrote to Charlie Chaplin was in the court record of his Mann Act trial today, but efforts by the movie comedian's counsel to probe into her romance with another man have been blocked by Judge J. F. T. O'Connor.

Just what will be the method of approach by the defense when the trial resumes next Monday was not disclosed by Jerry Giesler, Chaplin's lawyer.

"The court's ruling greatly limits my cross-examination," Giesler told newspapermen. "It simply means that we cannot now go into certain matters that I'd like Berry's past."

The ruling followed an attempt by Giesler to have Joan state whether she had a romance named Denis Reusch (otherwise unidentified) that she was broke but could get money from a man in Oklahoma because she had made a baby for him. "Joan didn't have to answer, and apparently she won't have to answer questions about associations with any man other than Chaplin," under Judge O'Connor's ruling. She completed her direct and cross-examination testimony yesterday, but U.S. Attorney Charles H. Carr said he may recall her briefly.

Tears welled into Joan's eyes when Carr read from the letter after her she wrote to Chaplin November 18, 1942, from Chicago.

She hid her face from the gaze of the jury of seven women and five men as Giesler read: "Thank you, dear, so much for your every-you, the greatest gentus and artist living. You never really knew me or the conditions of those nights and millions of unsent letters. Your laugh at them, but they were pretty real to me. Now you're just interested in my plan, but I'd like to tell you, anyway. I wanted to go to New York to get married (there really is a boy who wants to marry me)."

Carr objected to testimony between lawyers on the admissability of another letter, but Judge O'Connor overruled it. The court ruled out the first page of six lines of the second page.

From one of the letters Giesler read this fervent passage:

"I'm not sure what mess there are only two things that remained perfect. I never doubted one one moment that I'd be the bridge of role she presumably was to have in Chaplin's production. The bridge compensated for the pain I knew I'd have to endure when I really close to you.

"I'm going to add loving you and knowing that you never wanted or would never allow me to become a part of your life was torture, but now that I know I am not to be Bridget, Hilary or Ruth, I freely admit, though, that after the way you've acted, it's the only thing you could do."

GERMAN CHUTISTS HARD TO DISLODGE IN CASSINO AREA

Enemy Reinforcing Sector By Moving Troops Thru Secret Tunnels

SITUATION UNCHANGED

By LYNN HEINZERLING
(A. P. War Correspondent)

Naples, March 25 (AP) — "Tough" German paratrooders, ordered by their commander, Lt.-Gen. Richard Heindrich, to cling to Cassino at all costs and there to die on it if possible, are holding New Zealand troops in tight confines in the southern part of the town.

The Germans have been able to get fresh parachutists into the ruins of the Continental Hotel and apparently are reinforcing the Under troops through secret tunnels, it was disclosed today.

One of the tunnels used by the Germans was said to extend more than 1,000 yards from the Albert Abbey Monastery Hill to the vicinity of the railway station. The Germans have been trying desperately to take from New Zealand troops on the 5th. Army.

Allied communique said nearly heavy fighting continues in Cassino where the general situation remains unchanged.

After more than a week of bitter but indecisive fighting for the ground around Cassino, Allied chances of breaking through the German defences there and advancing into the Liri Valley leading to Rome were considered as remote as when the battle first began.

Although the Allies rocked the town with 1,400 tons of bombs and dropped another 1,000 tons on the Germans beyond last week, the Germans threw back counter-attacks to their major positions in Cassino and in surrounding hills. Yesterday yesterday strengthened his defences with powerful new artillery and aerial support.

Guns Support Tanks

Allied big guns supported tanks and infantry in a thrust with German armor in the vicinity of both the Continental Hotel and the Albert Abbey Monastery Hill. Both sides maintained almost continual other heavy guns, but the action was well as the battlefront.

The main part of the difficult situation at Cassino was indicated in Allied Force Headquarters Bulletin 323 and 435, or "Sangamon's Hill" which were supplied with ammunition when they fought their way to these crests beneath the Monastery Hill and the town.

The German mainlained heavy pressure on the Allied bridgehead beachhead areas and there were heavy patrol activities.

German forces ringing the Allied beachhead were consolidated at the of the tanks were reported knocked out of the Carroceto, 21 miles south of Rome. Five others were reported damaged in Wednesday's duel of Cisterna by artillery fire.

HITLER MEETING WIDE OPPOSITION IN BALKAN STATES

Rumanian Delegation to Turkey on Secret Mission Awaited

BULGARIA AFLAME

London, March 25—(CP) — The expected arrival of a Rumanian delegation in Turkey on a mystery mission was reported today in an Istanbul dispatch as other advices indicated Hitler was meeting wide-spread opposition in his military occupation of Balkan state.

Writing from Istanbul, Associated Press correspondent William B. King said the Rumanian mission, headed by Foreign Minister Jenescu, is of the Rumanian Foreign Office, was due there today from Bucharest.

"The announced purpose of the visit is to reach a commercial agreement with Turkey," King said, "but in view of the turbulent Balkan situation unusual importance is attached to the mission. It is unlikely that routine commercial problems would be handled by top Rumanian diplomats."

A dispatch from Madrid, meanwhile, said the Hungarian legation there had announced Hungarian ministers in four of Europe's neutral capitals — Madrid, Berne, Stockholm and Lisbon—had taken the position of "not recognizing the puppet government set up in Budapest by Hitler. For the Hungarian ministers, the action was tantamount to resigning their posts.

No Word from Bulgaria

Although the German armed forces now appear in full control of both Hungary and Rumania, there still has been no full satisfactory word on the Nazi occupation in Bulgaria, the third Balkan state said to be slated for military occupation.

Rumanians in Turkey said they doubted pro-Allied elements in the Rumanian army might offer resistance to the German troops—a move which, these sources said, might have the assistance of Julio Maniu, elder statesman who retained an important position under the government of Premier Ion Antonescu because of his large personal following.

An Associated Press dispatch from Madrid quoted Hungarian sources there as saying that carefully-laid sabotage had blocked Hitler's plans for looting Hungary's food stores and using her transport system.

These Madrid sources said the Germans had set up a new police force in Hungary, one of their chief functions being the Nazis operate and just how to control them.

CENSOR WASN'T THIRSTY

Chicago, March 25—(AP)—Miss Jeannette Dahm received a letter from her brother, Pfc. Phillip C. Dahm, in North Africa. He complained about the weather and the miseries of a long march under the hot sun without drinking water, to this point the censor drew a cartoon of himself winking and wrote, "This is 'ran'."

15 MEN OF FIRE FIGHTING CREW BELIEVED DEAD

Fight Blaze in Coal Mine After Explosion Rips Thru 3,000-Foot Slope

HOUSES ROCKED

Clarksburgh, W.Va., March 25.—(AP)—An explosion ripped through the 3,000 foot slope of the Kalbarine Coal Company's No. 4 Mine at nearby Shinnston early today, trapping 15 men. The fire fighting crew who had entered the mine at 11 o'clock last night to battle a blaze near the bottom of the slope.

Mine Superintendent John Hogue said he believed "all the men are dead."

When the blast occurred flame shot throughout the 3,000 foot slope and burst out of the mouth of the mine.

Windows in homes in Shinnston, five miles away, were shattered and buildings in the area rocked. Hogue said the force of the explosion was felt by ventilating fans throughout the shaft hindering rescue work.

L. S. McKee, district mine inspector, said he believed the blaze was caused by an explosion of mine gas that had collected near the bottom of the bituminous shaft.

Fire was discovered near the bottom of the shaft about 11 o'clock last night, Hogue said, and the men on the night shift were ordered out of the mine and firefighting crews were formed. The 15 trapped men formed one of the crews and entered the shaft a short time before the blast. None of the other five fighting crews had entered the mine.

The mine is located in Harrison County in North Central West Virginia.

Broderick Fights To Keep Lonergan's Confession Out

New York, March 25 (AP) — One of the most vital parts of the case against Wayne Lonegran balanced today on the legal question of whether of a stubborn defence fight to keep his unsigned confession from becoming a part of his trial record.

Edward V. Broderick, chief defence counsel, was on his feet quickly when the prosecution sought to introduce the confession yesterday, charging it was obtained by threats and what he called "duress."

The defence chief still was battling vigorously as the trial recessed for the weekend.

The prosecution already has conceded that only the 26 year old Lonergan defendant and his heiress wife, Patricia, were in the master bedroom of their fashionable apartment when she was bludgeoned and strangled last October 26 and that the State has only Lonergan's word as to what happened.

When Broderick sought to learn from District Attorney Frank Hogan whether a confession had been made to Lonergan, Judge James Garrett Wallace asked:

New Delhi, March 25—(AP)—Japanese invasion of mountain ridges three invasion roads into India are meeting with increasingly stiff resistance through the northeastern corner of Poland into a full-scale battle with the Germans and Soviet Czernowitz to the Carpathian sector.

Fresh and the mighty thrust between Mogaung and Myitkyina is gaining headway. This terrain consists of a rising slopeland where the Russians already were within sight of the distant peaks of the Carpathian mountains in the Balkans to Rumania.

(A Berlin broadcast said that "the battle in the Tarnopol-Proskurov area is raging with unabated fury, with the Germans and allied forces into the area.)

Tarnopol is a railway junction and Proskurov's Tarnopol drive cut the Tarnopol-Lwow railway and lulled close to the Lwow-Czernowitz road in the Soviet Ukraine's vital rail control point for Northern Moldavia, appeared to be a matter of hours from digging said. Its fall would give the Russians virtual control of a 300-mile-long stretch of the eastern bank of the Dniester River.

The Red army force here would then be in a position to go smashing up upon Galicia and the Danube Valley on the exposed side of the mountain barrier. Radautz, capital of Moldavia, lies 60 miles south of this developing offensive in the path of any drive in this direction.

Front dispatches to Red Star said Zhukov's army cut the German front to pieces in its 62-mile, four-day advance, and separated enemy groups were offering stiff resistance.

Streating the prevalence of deep flying fields on all parts of the Ukrainian front, the army newspaper's dispatch added:

Fighting Rages With Unabated Fury Says Berlin

Reds Expect To Push Enemy Past Czernowitz To Carpathian Border

Moscow, March 25. (AP)—Striking in its weight and force of victory the Red Army was reported today to be exploiting its broad Tarnopol breakthrough in the southeastern corner of Poland into a full-scale battle with the Germans and Soviet Czernowitz to the Carpathian sector.

Fresh and the mighty thrust between Mogaung and Myitkyina is gaining headway. This terrain consists of a rising slopeland where the Russians already were within sight of the distant peaks of the Carpathian mountains in the Balkans to Rumania.

Speech Expected To Prepare Allies For Invasion

By JAMES M. LONG
Associated Press Staff Writer

London, March 25 — (AP) — Prime Minister Churchill's broadcast speech today is expected here to steel Britain and her Allies for the sacrifices of the forthcoming invasion march on Berlin — more of the blood and sweat he so grimly predicted nearly two years ago, but this time bright with the confidence of victory.

The Prime Minister probably will tell of the highest stage of developments in the Balkans to emphasize the collapse of the last Nazi pretense of a benevolent new order and unified European defence. Rumania, Bulgaria and Rumania doubtlessly are awaiting the news of Mr. Churchill's words for the faintest clues of their future fate.

Others will be listening as tensely — Finland on a hint of the new move after her rejection of the Soviet Marshal Gustaf Mannerheim terms for a suggestion of the extent of her isolation from the rest of the world.

There has been some editorial speculation in London that the Atlantic Charter also may be mentioned, with her Churchill reiterating that it still embodies the underlying Allied war purposes, whatever speculation or misgivings may be aroused to keep it adapted to changing circumstances.

But a call for a final effort for victory is expected to be the keynote of the speech, to be delivered at 5 p. m. E.D.T. 4 p. m. E.S.T.)

STOLEN BUTTER RECOVERED

Kenmore, N.Y., March 25 —(AP) — Stolen pounds of butter which for two days went begging for an owner, today was back in the hands of the company from whose truck it was lost Wednesday. Mrs. Al. F. McAfee, Kenmore resident, was while driving home with her husband from a party when she had left it to a company representative after trying in vain for two days to have police or the owner claim it. "And don't think even give me a pound," she sighed.

Occupants of Ten Apartments Escape in $300,000 Cornwall Fire

Cornwall, March 25 (CP)—Occupants of ten apartments escaped from their smoke-filled residences when fire swept part of the McLennan block in downtown Cornwall early today causing damage estimated to reach a total of $300,000. The blaze, which started early in the morning, was still burning at 10 a.m., but danger of it spreading to adjoining buildings was past.

The fire started in premises occupied by Woolworth's 5 and 10 cent store and spread to the organization—and then to the upper floors, burning overhead, and to the Pirie-Shoe Store. Adjoining stores occupied by the Chalmers Ladies Wear and the Marvel Shoe Shop suffered extensive smoke and water damage.

A fire wall confined the blaze to the south half of the McLennan Building although smoke filled the north half of the block which contains six apartments and four business places. The occupants of these six apartments were forced to vacate while the escape of the persons living in the four apartments in the south half was described as "spectacular."

Mr. and Mrs. Clair Laidley, formerly of Lindsay, Ont., were the first of the apartment residents to emerge from the building, followed by all of other occupants of the apartments. Mrs. Laidley, pregnant, was very able to salvage any of their possessions.

Rebuilt in 1924 after Cornwall's business section was swept by a great blaze in Civic Holiday, 1923, the McLennan block was a brick structure. Cause of this morning's blaze is unknown.

Business places in the north section of the block which suffered smoke damage included Lew's Men's shop, the T. Eaton Order Office, Medical Hall Drug Store and W. J. Carson's hardware.

The first of the winter coat of mail from the Canadian dam to a depth of nine inches above the bridge, the lower ice remained practically fast from that point to the bay. Then lowering water caused the ice field above the lower bridge to be lifted and the current cleared for itself a channel among the floes.

The open channel, still only a matter of feet across, has now been extended gradually to a point beyond the railroad bridge with remaining river ice between the lower bridge and the bay still remaining unbroken.

House Discusses Mining, War Plants, Education, Divorce

Provide 10 Millions for Province's Assist Technical Education

TRAIN 300,000 PERSONS

By JAMES McCOOK
(Canadian Press Staff Writer)

Ottawa, March 25. (CP)—The Commons discussed trail projects and led it past British Columbia mining ventures, Maritime war plans, technical education and left it finally considering divorce laws and the status of the Indian.

At the evening sitting approval was given a bill to establish a Technical Education Act of 1919, which provides $10,000,000 for the provinces to assist technical education. At the moment $147,000 is the appropriation for Manitoba, and the bill makes possible the expenditure of this amount.

The bill must receive royal assent before March 31, the end of the fiscal year, when payments are made, and Manitoba will have used up their appropriations.

Members of opposition parties suggested further federal interest in education to see that Canadian children had equality of education-at opportunity; all parts of them should be no undue interference with provincial rights over education.

Labor Minister Mitchell, sponsor of the bill, said he agreed with those who favored continued provincial jurisdiction over education.

Receive Full Co-operation.

The Dominion had received full co-operation in the war training program from the provinces and co-operation with the provinces had spent over $100,000,000 in technical training and trained some 300,000 persons.

Mr. Mitchell said it would be a poor thing for the C.C.F. if education was taken out of all party struggle as C.C.F. speakers had claimed. Educational facilities now were available to Canadians generally, but to hear some speakers one would suppose there was no educational system at all.

Speaking on the bill to add a puisne judge to the Exchequer Court of Canada Bench, thereby the number to three, Gordon Graydon, Progressive Conservative House Leader, said the public believed it was time a "satisfactory" basis for the judicial legislation should have to be dealt with by parliamentarians.

Divorce Bills come to Parliament from Quebec and the Province of Island, provinces in which divorces are not granted in the courts.

Graydon Expresses Opinion.

Sate, Graydon said divorces should be referred to the Exchequer Court.

Frederic Dorion, Conservative, Saguenay said that Quebec would never consent to have divorce cases decided by judges outside the province. Study might well be given to extending the jurisdiction of the Exchequer Court to divorce cases.

"It would be necessary to make special provisions regarding the Province of Quebec," he said. "We could not be heard when the petitioner is a Catholic unless he can produce leave to proceed which has been granted him by the Bishop of the Diocese in which he has his domicile", he continued.

"This suggestion would not interfere in any way with the rights of all those who are not of the Catholic Faith, and it could not then be opposed by anyone, because the only effect would be to restrain the divorces of Catholics and help them to respect their faith, their religion".

Supports Graydon.

T. C. Douglas (C.C.F.-Weyburn) said he supported having divorce cases dealt with by the exchequer court.

Justice Minister St. Laurent said that under the existing law divorce cases could not be referred to the exchequer court by the House. In House cases litigants had to come to Ottawa from all parts of Canada, and if the judge was correctly reported it amounted to "legislation by bill." The government had the matter under consideration.

Ration Books Will Be Available Beginning Tues.

A request is made by the local Ration Board, Belleville, that the public as to what to do during the issuing days, March 28-29-30-31st. No. 5 Ration Books will be distributed to the city and district residents. Mr. R. B. Upper, chairman of the issuing committee says that the public will be well advised from coming to the City Hall between the hours, 2.00 p.m., and thus avoid the crowding which was experienced during the issuing of the Sugar Book last summer. He says there are sufficient workers to handle the cars of the crowds each day and there will be no necessity to stand in line as the people will just take their time. It would be better to be a half-hour late than to be a half-hour early. Mrs. Upper said, the doors will not be opened until 2.00 p.m. sharp and, with orderliness, each person will be dealt with speedily and there will be no waiting or discomfort. By giving this co-operation the public will facilitate the work and there will be no delays.

During the issuing of No. 5 Ration Book last year, people were lined up outside the City Hall at an early hour and when the doors were opened, crowded into the building as one. In this way the members that it took considerable time to straighten things out and get the work under way. With the issuing point this year in the long main hall, the rear of the City Hall and the necessity to climb stairs has been eliminated. Mr. Upper said it possible has been instituted to conduct the issuing with the least of trouble and difficulty. There is no danger of there not being enough books to go around.

MAY PROROGUE ONTARIO HOUSE ABOUT APRIL 6

Legislation Slips Through Rapidly, Twenty Bills Ready for Signing

BUDGET DEBATED

Toronto, March 25 (CP)—Monday is expected to see the windup of the budget debate in the Ontario Legislature, with the estimates then slipping through so rapidly that prorogation by April 7 is likely.

More than 20 bills have been passed through the House and given Royal Assent; and many others await only the approval of Lieutenant-Governor Albert Matthew. It is expected the once may wind up its business about April 6.

Friday was a good indication of the speed of the present session. Two measures were introduced and given first reading; five were given second reading and six given third reading. Included were a number of private bills.

C. G. Robinson (CCF—Waterloo South) and E. A. MacGillivray (Liberal-Glengarry) spoke in budget debate which was adjourned by R. E. Leavens (CCF—Port Arthur) when it will continue Monday.

Mr. Robinson urged greater stress on "secondary industries" and believed representatives of one government's new Department of Industrial Research and Development should be placed in every province and as closely as possible in contact with other authorities.

Criticizes Budget

Mr. MacGillivray criticized the budget as "stalling-hiking" budget with the government "coasting along on the prosperity created by the preceding (Liberal) government." He was glad to see the Civil Service Commission functioning; they were working for the welfare of the people, although did not agree with their beliefs.

One of the bills given second reading is to put authority or incentive for on-the-premises prosecutions in cases of beverages in Ontario in the hands of a three-man Liquor Board, the power at present handled by the Ontario Liquor Control Board.

Attorney-General Blackwell told the House the Board would be given the right to appoint inspectors to provide the "standards of decency" would be established if the public were to longer enjoy liberties in the consumption of alcoholic beverages.

Another measure given second reading would provide penalties of two months of the amount of forces on active service. Their property would then be protected and provision was made for payment to the province of the interest premiums on life insurance policies up to $10,000.

Municipalities would be authorized to fix nomination day 14 days before election day under provisions of a bill introduced by Dana Porter (PC—Hamilton South). Up to now measure was given first reading.

Private measures given leave to the city of Hamilton and the township of North Monaghan were given second reading after only four days debate was held over. He said it had not been settled at committee and the opposition wished to study it further.

A Weekly Column Devoted to the Activities of the Members of the Armed Services at Home and Abroad

Announcement that Group Captain "Larry" Wray, formerly of this city, is reported as missing, following what is believed to have been his first operational flight over enemy territory, recalls to mind the fact that this ranking Belleville airman rose to his location into military life with the local 34th Battery R.C.A. This was almost twenty years ago when the unit was under the command of the late R. J. E. Graham. G/C Wray rose to the rank of sergeant before resigning from the unit to join the permanent force of the R.C.A.F. in 1930.

Well-liked by his former associates in Belleville, the report of Group Captain Wray being missing, while in execution of his position as commanding officer of an R.C. A.F. bombing base in Britain, has resulted in a sincere feeling of regret in the city. His duties as a commanding officer did not call for him to subject himself to the risks entailed in a bombing raid over Germany, but he felt it was only right that he experience some of the dangers of the men under his command. All hope and trust for further word informing relatives of the safety of the former Belleville boy.

As per regulations recently laid down by the Department of National Defence regarding the training program of Reserve Army units in Canada, training periods for officers and members of the 34th Battery, R.C.A., will be curtailed to one night per week starting next week, it has been announced by Captain Steve Sword, commanding officer. It was not stated whether or not the hours of training will be permanent but such will be the case for the immediate future.

Reunion

There was a gala reunion in London, England, the other weekend when Major Ron Church, of the First Battalion Hastings and Prince Edward Regiment, arrived back overseas after taking an eight months' course in Canada. Major Church went overseas with the first Canadian contingent. He and his old baseball cronie, Captain Jack Yanover, met "along the Strand" and really did Piccadilly Circus and the rest. It was like old times as Major Church was Captain Yanover's ace moundsman when "Jack" managed the Picton baseball team back in the early 30's. Incidentally reports have Captain Yanover sporting a real English moustache, waxed and all, to say nothing of the Blighty enunciation.

Back We Go

Argyll Light Infantry training reverted back to the Wing style of training on Tuesday night, when several new recruits were paraded on the floor. In the future this is the recruits will be trained and then advanced to "C" Wing with subsequent specific advances until "A" Wing has been attained. Then advanced training will be given until the members can qualify for junior N.C.O. ranks. This system gives the rank and file privates some tangible objective and a basis reason to take more interest in their work, namely advancement.

Following Tuesday night's training period the Sergeants' Mess appointed their officers by inviting Lieut.-Col. Donnan, commanding officer of the unit, and his junior officers to an impromptu hour's social gathering. Things was enjoyed with Sergt Geo. Lancaster breaking the ice with his singing of 38 cents of the night. It was truly a surprise to the officers and helped to cement the goodwill of the Argyll Battalion.

Take a Flip

Eleven senior N.C.O.'s from the Argyll Light Infantry enjoyed the 'experience of a lifetime' last Sunday, when they journeyed to the Mountain View R.C.A.F. camp to make a tour of inspection and also enjoy the experience of practice bombing flights.

Some of the senior N.C.O.'s enjoyed the happy afternoon flights that lasted well over an hour. "It was a real education and we wouldn't have missed it for anything" they chorused to a man after enjoying shortly after about the countryside. The local Garrison Sergeants were also royally treated as guests of the Mountain View Sergeants' Mess.

On St. Patrick's night the Sergeants' Mess at the Armouries entertained the N.C.O.'s from Moulds View and No. 3 I.T.S. at a St. Patrick's night social evening. However, the occasion served a dual purpose as it almost marked the first anniversary of Lieut. Col. B. G. Donnan taking over command of the Argyll Light Infantry (T). As a token of appreciation the N.C.O.s presented Mrs. Donnan with a beautiful bouquet of roses to mark the anniversary. The presentation was made by RSM. Herb Willerton.

During his stay in Belleville "Jeff" became associated with the Argyll Light Infantry, became sergeant-major and president of the mess. All his friends were glad to hear he had made his return crossing safely.

CANADA'S "GRACIE FIELDS"

Belleville theatre-goers did not have the opportunity of seeing the great Canadian Army Show, that toured the Dominion last season, but local entertainment lovers will see Mildred Morley, who starred in the show with impersonations of Gracie Fields and Martha Raye. Proceeds go to the Kinsmen Pay and Milk for Britain funds. Then there will be that fun-making black-faced Jimmie Goode of old Dumbell days who also will be featured. Valuable draws for twenty-five and one hundred dollar bills also are being featured.

The hosts will be Col. Smith, Lieut.-Cols. S. Young, A. V. Yates, B. C. Donnan, who at present is also commanding officer of the Argyll Light Infantry, and of course, Brig. Graham, who commanded the First Battalion R. and P. E. overseas. A number of distinguished military dignitaries from M.D. 3 at Kingston will also be present for the reunion.

With wrestling at the Armouries Wednesday night the C.W.S.F. Wrestling Club couldn't be idle. However Marion Harden and her able assistant Mrs. Ivan Wilson stepped in and packed a large carton to be sent overseas to their adopted "E" troop in Italy.

Incidentally the C.W.S.F. would appreciate any gifts of magazines, as reading matter is vitally needed and especially so at the front. Such donations can be left at the Armouries and will be faithfully applied to our fighting troops.

The C.W.S.F. purchased three new kettle drums for the newly organized women's pipe band that now is taking shape and will be on parade this spring, or at least when their new pipes arrive. In the meantime the ladies in the pipe band practice twice a week along with the men.

This is one in a series of advertisements explaining problems of electric supply to farm and hamlet consumers served direct by The Hydro-Electric Power Commission of Ontario.

New Hydro Rural Rates Reduce Your Bills

Note the saving you will obtain under the new rate of 4c' 1 6/10c, and ¾c in the following examples showing comparative quarterly bills for several commonly used quantities of energy:

Where Old Rate Was 4c, 2c, ¾c

STANDARD FARM SERVICE			HAMLET 2-WIRE SERVICE
3 Months' Kilowatt Hours	YOUR BILL AT Old Rate	YOUR BILL AT New Rate	3 Months' Kilowatt Hours	YOUR BILL AT Old Rate	YOUR BILL AT New Rate
150	$ 8.60	$ 6.56	100	$ 6.93	$5.52
300	11.52	8.86	200	8.87	7.54
600	17.35	13.53	300	10.82	9.10

These examples illustrate the savings you will secure in your Hydro bill in Rural districts where the old rate was as shown above. The amounts shown are for quarterly net bills, including Provincial Government War Tax. The reduction in your bill in a district having a higher old rate (such as 6c, 2c, ¾c or 5c, 2c, ¾c) will be proportionately greater than the examples shown above.

Please note that the service charge for farms is discontinued, but the minimum bill for such consumer is $6.56 per quarter, for which amount up to 168 kw.-hrs. can be used. In a district having a former rate of 4c and 2c, this same amount would have cost the consumer $8.29.

Hamlet consumers have the service charge cut in half, but the minimum bill is $4.87 per quarter, for which they can use an amount of 83 kw.-hrs. In a district having a former rate of 4c and 2c, this amount would have cost the consumer $6.46.

These explanations are given to help you understand the new rate. In our next advertisement, we will discuss for your benefit, the UNIFORM RATE. In the meantime, if you need further information, please ask your Rural District Superintendent.

Get Your Licences Now

A casual survey of cars along the main streets reveals that the majority of motorists have neglected to buy their car licences for 1944. They are reminded that they cannot buy any gasoline after April 1st unless they have new ration books and the books cannot be obtained without buying a licence. Probably because there are no new plates to remind motorists that the time is getting short and that the sale of permits is slow.

If the government sets an arbitrary date beyond which last year's licences are not valid then the last-minute rush will begin with the usual result of delay and inconvenience. The wise car owner will not delay longer but will go and get his licence immediately.

Outlook Obscure for Airmen

Canada's future for post-war aviation in Canada is far too indefinite to promise any great amount of security for the men who will return to Canada after the war. These men are highly trained and efficient aviation experts, trained in a school which has altered rapidly with the changes in aeronautical engineering, they are highly trained technicians, with capabilities which have been developed by tremendous responsibilities. They have displayed reckless courage and resourcefulness, but they are not mere heedless boys. They are men who have a contribution to make to their country in a field which is closely bound up with the nation's future.

The Hon. C. D. Howe announced in a statement on the government's air policy, made to parliament on March 17, which sets forth the aims for a permanent air plan and calls for an end to ownership of air lines by the Canadian National and Canadian Pacific railways "within one year of the ending of the European war, "with a view to avoiding extension of railway competition into transport by air." It also calls for the maintenance of the government-owned Trans-Canada Air Lines' monopoly on trans-continental and international routes, and for the reservation, in the interests of airmen now on active service, of a field for small business enterprise in feeder-line operations and pioneer lines into the northland.

This passage in the announcement seemed to offer a promise that there would be a useful future for these men. It spoke of the desire of the government to see them engage in aviation not merely as employees but in executive and administrative positions, but the whole scheme as explained by the Minister makes it possible for large monopolies to get hold of the great system of feeder-lines which will be co-ordinated with our main trunk system.

There will be certain jobs available for a certain number of pilots and navigators who are now fighting overseas, or are under training in Canada, but the new Canadian air lines are not going to be too extensive as to absorb all the trained men who will return looking for jobs, especially if the plans for the T.C.A. are projected now instead of after the war. These men will return to find that there is nothing left for them, that the jobs have all gone to others who have got there before them, and few will find opportunities to make a place for themselves other than as salaried employees.

The need for greater consideration and straighter thinking about this problem is essential before any future planning might be made successful and serve the intended purpose. It is granted that the future air policy of Canada cannot be entirely governed by the desire to employ as many men as return after the war, but there must be a great deal more thought given to it than has been given if even a minority are to benefit.

Fine Progress On Bacon Contract

As a result of continuing heavy slaughtering of hogs, the Meat Board has been able to make excellent progress on the 1944 bacon contract with Britain, states the Current Review of Agricultural Conditions in Canada.

So far purchases of export bacon have averaged twenty million pounds in weight per week, and at the end of the second week in February 151 millions pounds or thirty per cent of the entire minimum 1944 commitment has been secured. On this basis it should be possible to make available to Britain substantially more than the minimum quantities.

In these circumstances fears of a possible cut in the British bacon ration expressed at the December conference by British Food Minister Llewellin will undoubtedly be allayed.

Pennsylvania Dutch Breakfast

(By Geo. Benhoffer in Reader's Digest)

To those who think in terms of orange juice, toast and coffee for breakfast, the eating habits of the Pennsylvania Dutch have long been a source of wonder. In the days before rationing I breakfasted at the home of my granduncle, a hearty trencherman of the Pennsylvania Dutch country. After a steady flow of pancakes and sausage, fried potatoes, eggs and bacon, homemade bread and three selections of jam, a huge coconut cake was placed on the table.

"What!" I exclaimed to my neatly bibbed relative. "Coconut cake!"

A hurt expression clouded by granduncle's face. Then he said to his wife decorously, "Better bring in the chocolate layer, Anna. The young man doesn't seem to like coconut!"

Has No Airman Earned the V.C.?

(The Financial Post, Toronto)

The House of Commons Hansard, page 808, publishes a list of 1,000 members of R.C.A.F. and 164 Canadians in the R.A.F. decorated for gallantry in the present war.

It is beyond the imagination of any person adequately to conceive the bravery and sacrifice behind this record.

But what are we to make out of the fact that not a single Victoria Cross has been awarded to any one of the tens of thousands of Canadian boys who have risked their lives in air operations?

Has there not been a single deed by a Canadian airman worthy of the Victoria Cross?

Canadians may very well ask that question and ask Ottawa for an explanation.

A Fine Generation

(London Daily Mail)

Peace itself will bring a partial remedy, for those who profess to be shocked by the behavior of an entire generation forget the terribly unsettling effects of the war upon our schools and universities. But, on the whole, the young men and women of our race have risen superbly to face the grimmest ordeal in our history. In their millions they have learned to familiarize themselves and have shown themselves to be intelligent, high-spirited, and of excellent repute. These are the people who only a few years ago were ridiculed by the schools which "conditioned" them to teach them even cleanliness and honor. Let us hear no more of such nonsense. To say that is not to say that we must rest content with the standards we have reached. They are obviously ripe for improvement, and Britain is taking one more step towards giving the best possible education to all. This is not, however, a process of turning bad citizens into good. It is designed to make better use of some of the finest human material in the world.

Wonder is involuntary praise.—Young.

THE SEED CATALOGUE

It seemed good for awhile war's demands to forget
And read of the charm of a new mignonette;
From Hitler and Tojo to turn with disdain
And sit reading of lilacs and roses again.

I had vowed there was nothing could cause me to slack
Or give over my task till the boys were all back,
But there in the mail was that booklet of charm,
Which I sat down to read—but intending no harm.

Some gentle old chap every gardener knows
Had succeeded in growing a new yellow rose,
And another good graybeard like Burbank,
I think,
Was announcing with pride a new,
sturdier pink.

Oh, soldiers and sailors and pilots,
I pray
That with victory soon you may come from the fray,
And when threatened no more by tyrannical wars,
We may all have more time to devote to our flowers.

Cleaning Up a Notebook Eight Weeks Abroad—

By VERNON M. KIPP

(Special to the Ottawa Journal and The Ontario Intelligencer)

LONDON, March—Perhaps you will wonder if there is any sign of Servicemen in London. Well, there is. It goes in a big such as this, which, The Ontario Intelligencer, will be the first to admit, is not exactly a metropolis. The answer is "No"....When I left the hospital ship I thought everybody was playing the piano and a sing-song was in progress, every pub was filled with men and women sitting on the floor, and waiters, who must have been in the army, carried around soft drinks—all beverages are soft on the hospital ships—as far from the thoughts of the men, and girls, as Mars is from a woman who ate pamegranates, as though they were drinking tea in the Chateau Laurier.... But every passenger had his Rhibell over his shoulder or on the arm of his chair. There is a strict rule that when you leave the hospital ship Rhibell must be taken along....Another strict rule is against smoking in the streets of Piccadilly....Any offending serviceman is promised arrest and court-martial.

There has been a general disinclination to Rhibell, while a red light is clipped to the top front of the hats worn by the girls. Except when a simple connection is made on the battery suspended by a cord long enough to reach from one's seat all connections being watertight.... The Rhibell is supposed to burn for three hours....Yesterday we had instructions on the Rhibell and I left over the side of the ship, to the small boat, in the order ever to abandon ship....

Outside London the clerical staffs of hotels were entirely feminine. "Yes, we have no room for you," said an intelligent and pretty girl at the reception desk of an hotel in Glasgow as we lined up to sign our forms....

Over the breakfast table: "Every week I feed my pigs with 20 pounds of potatoes." Anybody can have it who will come and get it. "I can't make it profitable, and it does pay me to feed it to the pigs." "Eggs, Englishman?" "And I pay a shilling for a head of lettuce!".....Another thing that's on mind they told us at a Canadian bombing school was the uselessness of German heavy bombers went off to attack Germany, and the consequence that their deterioration badly over the home base.....Every machine must be given a refinement and every machine landed safely on the aerodromes in Britain.....That is a miracle of navigation, they told us, because of the many maritime privations are something terrible....Bacon and egg for breakfast, cold meat for lunch, roast turkey for dinner.... "Yes, I'm a Canadian, but I'm not sure I were eating porridge without sugar, with milk and cream."

Jim Stanton, once of The Journal, returned, was in the last war and also has been bombed out twice....Mrs. Stanton showed me a photo of her home which stood at a bridge game in Ottawa years ago. "Here's a picture of it as it is," their china which survived the two bombings. Mrs. Stanton is the part of London which enemy bombers seem especially to dislike....Mrs. Stanton has a little niece put the children in a downstairs window-seat between the heavy curtains, don their tin hats and go out to the front door and look for the sky. "I saw a block of flats was hit recently and people were trapped in the wreckage. That means to be in the front line....The next morning the young Stantons went to look for pieces of shrapnel.....

Mrs. Stanton had a new vacuum cleaner which cost them 16 guineas.... "It's wonderful, except that another fault and a repairman took it away, said he would bring it in a week, but he never did."....That night his shop was bombed and the machine finished the fate....A report came through of Bennett's speech in the House of Commons. "What did he say?" he asked. "Dafoe?" replied Mr. Bennett. "Dafoe? Oh, yes, he wrote Confederation."

You don't say "Goodbye" or "Good luck" to a chap taking off for Germany on a bombing raid, you don't shake hands....You say, casually, "See you in the morning," and then hope—and pray....When we left a Canadian bomber station I asked the Padre, one of the press relations officers, if there were a canteen fund which our party might make a small contribution....He did not, but added that if we wanted to do something for those gallant young fellows we should encourage the folks at home to send over more cigarettes.... They can be addressed to Pit. L. Baker, Public Relations Offices, R.C.A.F. Overseas H.Q. and will distribute them to commanding officers and messes of aerodromes....Baker himself does not smoke.....The call is directed especially to organizations seeking an outlet for their patriotic impulses; the need is for tens of thousands of cigarettes.....

Canadian Scene A Century Ago

By J. L. G.

Where is the true Canadian who has not attended—and happily enjoyed—a "sugaring off" party? Even the Indians of long ago, to whom the sylvan glades were home, knew that "maple water" was delicious and that precious sugar could be produced by boiling it. And when the Indians struck deep into the forests, the red men ate the bark of the tree that had given him so much welcome sustenance.

This is the way that the early Indians made maple syrup. They chopped the bark away, and with tomahawks, and let the sap drop into a wooden chip or trough into a birch bark receptable. Then they dropped red-hot stones into the sap. Indians until the liquid at long last became brown and thick, or until it became sugar. Some tribes were lucky enough to possess earthen pots and iron kettles and cooked the sap in much the same way that we do today. The sugar was conveyed to market in "mokuks" or birch-bark baskets.

Then a sugar bush of 500 trees produced 800 to 1000 lbs. of sugar. The farmers worked hard to bring up the total, for on their efforts depended the ease with which Canadians to go into the meals of the forthcoming year; and if there was more than enough sugar than was required for the household, there was the consolation of selling it—being in urgently needed money.

An inhabitant of Panama is called a "Panamanian."

The accepted English pronunciation of "Versailles" refers to the former royal family of France, is BOOR-bun. But in Kentucky the name of Bourbon County and whisky is pronounced Versailles and which gave its name to a famous brand of whisky, is invariably pronounced BERR-bun by the local people. Kentuckians often employ the word as a sort of shibboleth to determine whether a person unknown to them is a native of the state.

A large drinking vessel, particularly a bowl for punch, is called a "jorum." The term is supposed to be a corruption of "Joram" in II Samuel 8:10, which says in part:

"And joram brought with him vessels of silver, and vessels of gold, and vessels of brass."

The word, especially a large riding cloak for women, provided with a cape and buttoned down the front, used to be known as a "cosph. The name was suggested by the Scottish garment which left in the hand of Potiphar's wife.

IF IT'S ABOUT YOUR EYES . . . SEE McFEE

As is commonly remarked, even by children, it's easy to be aware of the difference between a deliberate, careful ANALYSIS of the entire visual set-up—the modern Optometrie procedure—and the practice of a hasty, limited "examination" which can justify the sale of a stylish pair of glasses through which one can see clearly. While there's no difference in the $ result all the time, the former method is eventually economical, and the finished pair of eyes eminently more comfortable.

Mr. and Mrs. L. Brickman Honored On 45th Wedding Anniversary

A social event of interest to many took place at their beautiful farm home in Ameliasburg Township, when about sixty close relatives, old friends and neighbors were entertained on Wednesday evening, to celebrate the 45th wedding anniversary of Mr. and Mrs. Lorne Brickman.

In the early evening the guests were warmly welcomed by the host and hostess, who received congratulations and graciously met old friends with the hospitality so long a tradition in Mr. Brickman's home where he was born, the only child of the late Mr. and Mrs. Synard Brickman, whose home still stands beside the newly modern home in The Glen.

His bride was formerly Miss Emma Ainsworth, daughter of the late Mr. and Mrs. Danford Ainsworth, of Sunny Brae, Hillier, and Joe also called for a beautiful polished walnut table, a gift from the staff to be given Mr. and Mrs. Brickman.

The wedding ceremony took place at the home of the bride's parents in the neighborhood, Rev. Gooding minister being the late Rev. Mr. Bandwell, who officiated at the sad and best man, Mr. and Mrs. Merritt Brickman. The bridesmaid was formerly Miss Ada Doolittle of Burrs. Both were happily present at this anniversary.

The long tables, seating the entire company, made a picturesque setting, decorated in turquoise and white streamers, and each table ornamented by large baskets of snapdragons and ferns with small pink and white candles in silver holders.

A unique feature of the service for the guests of honor, was a complete set of dishes, given to Mrs. Brickman and used by her grandmother over 100 years ago.

Mr. Harry Sager, of Trenton acted as master of ceremonies and after the initial toasts the program was made interesting by several witty stories and short speeches, all referring with golden memories and paying tributes to both Mr. and Mrs. Brickman for their years of kindly neighborliness and their untiring service to the church and community, ever working together in their kindly acts and thoughts for others. In a few words, both thanked all for their gifts and good wishes.

The Children's Aid Society Its History and Growth

ARTICLE 2.

(Prepared by the Association of Children's Aid Societies of the Province of Ontario)

"History tells us that in France people became interested in children born out of wedlock owing to their decomposed bodies floating in the water supply from the River Seine."

Let us turn from this almost incredible paragraph in the social history of mankind to the feelings and motives that inspired the immediate founding of the first piece of legislation anywhere in the world to protect the child.

The last article told something of the compassion that touched the heart of a reporter on the old Toronto Globe at the suffering and depravity to be found among little children begging, selling newspapers and shoe laces in Toronto. No one in all the world, it better pleased God to see this agonizing, sordid side of life than a newspaperman! These children often sought shelter at night in cellars, sheds, and "Newsboys' room; they lived in the side streets and alleyways of downtown Toronto; food was to be found daily in the police courts.

What was to the newspaperman, Mr. J. J. Kelso, saying when, alarmed at the increase in child delinquency in Canada in 1891, he was asked: "Why another society?"

"Because," replied Mr. Kelso, "up to the present time no society exists to look after neglected children!"

Three years before, Mr. Kelso and a little group he had gathered about him, Margaret Marshall, just raining from the Ontario Government a piece of legislation—very meagre in its scope, but the first of what was to follow. It stated that "Children under the age of fourteen (please note that!) could be committed by any police or other person willing to receive them and authorized by government, and for a special committee, to be neglected offenders apart from adults.

This Act was regarded as a temporary refuge for destitute and neglected children, but in the following year the Toronto's Children's Aid Society was founded. In 1894 the foundation stone of what we have today in Ontario for child protection was laid when Hon. John Gibson, later Sir John Gibson, Provincial Secretary, introduced the Children's Protection Act.

From this Act, with subsequent amendments and additions over the past half century, has stemmed in these days beautiful growth, the whole effort and undertaking—governed as basic but given life by the spirit by committees of men like—familiarly known as "Children's Aid" let us never forget—J. J. Kelso and Sir John Gibson. From as an acorn cultivated, nurtured and pertinacly grew a great oak tree that shelters the children who have no normal love-tree of their own!

Let us see with what vision these foundations were laid! It is especially interesting to note that the original intentions embodied in Sir John Gibson's Act of 1894 exactly with the most enlightened attitude today in regard to what is the best, the most normal and most successful method of caring for boys and girls deprived of their own homes.

The highest concept today all over the world is to provide the child with the nearest possible approach to what should be a normal home life. Not to institutionalize him, but to place him in a natural family setting, sharing both the privileges and responsibilities of normal child.

There will be something to say later about boarding or foster home care and what thousands of foster homes in this province have done for Children's Aid Society wards; how these homes are selected and supervised; how foster parents are trained and made fit for the great family of Children's Aid. You will be told something about the magnificent, and unique, service of thousands of foster parents.

But listen to what Mr. Adam Brown, Hamilton's "grand old man" had to say about his friend, Hon. John Gibson's act as the founding father of Children's Aid Society in 1894:

"The first principle of the Children's Protection Act is the improvement of the home and the second to place homeless children in good foster homes....."

Every day throughout Ontario, trained, experienced, humane social workers of Children's Aid are striving first to rehabilitate the home; to introduce love in by living patient understanding and high standards and more intelligent concepts of homemaking. Every day right of this big part of Children's Aid work!

"It has always been my view," continued Mr. Adam Brown, "that the voluntary administration, the voluntary principle in local communities should be a principle to be safeguarded. I always felt that there should not be allowed to become an ordinary governmental department in administration—that it should be the result of philanthropic effort in localities; that the work should be carried on for the love of the work by the good men and women in the various communities where the act is being applied."

This is what designed to be and has steadily become a unique service to the children legislated for and protected by Government, but kept a living, breathing, human organization by the people in the community—your Children's Aid Society!

Protest on Ice

George MacGregor, one about the fastest men on the ice, tried his best to keep Kingston in the game. He scored the Victorias' first goal. Myke, Jake Wallis and Bud Ohlke, ability little fellows, gave Barrie lots of trouble.

Al Bowen, tall and awkward-appearing, scored three times for Barrie, while Mason got two goals. Center George Fowler, another Barrie ace, set in the Colts' win. So were Leighton Clark, Geo Cook and Murray Richardson.

Jack Stone, Kingston goalie, was an injured man. In the second period the puck whacked him in the throat. In the third he was clipped on the head.

Lineups:

Kingston — goal, Stone; defence, Metcalfe, Plumb; centre, MacGregor; wings, Fowler, Jackson; Myke, Wallis, Ohlke, McCarney, Watts, Sinden.

PLAYOFF SCENE FOR STANLEY CUP NOW IN TORONTO

Likely Coach Hap Day Will Use McLean Instead of Johnstone

TEAMS CONFIDENT

Toronto, March 25 — (CP) —The Stanley Cup play-off scene today shifted to Toronto, Montreal Canadiens arriving this morning for a renewal of their best-of-seven semi-final play-off series with the Leafs which opened in the series now is tied, 1-1, after two games in Montreal.

There is every indication of a sellout crowd for tonight's game at Maple Leaf Gardens, where seating capacity is just under 13,000, and interest is at about a best in the fourth game which will be played here next Tuesday night.

Fresh from their 3-1 conquest of Leafs in Montreal Thursday night, which gave the Canadiens victory in the opener Tuesday, Canadiens were hailed as favorites in early betting.

Coach Clarence (Hap) Day of Leafs is openly confident of the outcome of both game and series, has not, yet decided which one of his 16 players will start at only the game. Flery Jack McLean, a thorn in the side of Canadiens all season, will be available for tonight's clash although he was unable to go to Montreal because of university examinations. He may replace Rosa Johnstone, rookie forward who saw action in the Montreal games.

Coach Dick Irvin of Canadiens probably will follow his policy of Thursday night and bring four defensemen and using eight forwards, instead of the usual three defensemen and three full forward lines.

With a smile on his face Ralph "Highpockets" McCabe (above) visited his parents, Mr. and Mrs. Jerry McCabe, Chatham St., en route to Toronto, where he will join the pitching staff of the Toronto Maple Leafs tomorrow and leave for Lancaster, Pa., for spring training with the Toronto International League baseball team on Monday. When signed to his 1944 contract by the Maple Leafs, McCabe was in splendid condition and after a stay with President Pete Campbell assured the Belleville hurler he was expected. "Highpockets" to be a starting pitcher with Toronto this coming season. Recently he underwent a successful knee operation at Sudbury and today the Ontario Intelligencer he weighed eight pounds more than when he reported to the 1943 spring training camp one year ago.

Toronto March 25 — (CP) — The Canadian Press poll of sports writers which established Toronto's Gus Mortar as the N.H.L.'s outstanding rookie set a fire that will burn in the dressing room of the Standard quotes Canadiens as saying, "Bill Durnan is the greatest goalie in the Standard," she "the reason is attributed to several local writers have been giving French-Canadian newspapers to Fernand Majeau....this spilt the team."

To keep the record straight we should add that what d'ya know? Majeau was named on only one of the seven Montreal ballots and that not in first place. Bodnar polled 583 points, Durnan 511, Elwin Morris 484 and Majeau 62.

(Montreal Gazette) Carroll quotes Dick Irvin: "What won the trophy for Bodnar was the Montreal writer who made him their real victim. But Dick is only second 'choice.'"

Really Old Chap!

Football is a wild and weird game, in the opinion of the London Daily Sketch sport writer. Describing a recent game overseas between Canadian and United States service teams, the Britisher wrote with fur-rowed brow:

"The players were padded all over and wore crash helmets. I don't see why. Because there was no blame them. The funny thing from the English point of view was to see four fellows in white shirts wandering about the field...every so often the referee blew his whistle and clasped their arms around each other, their heads together and then they were discussing a secret front."

At least, he conceded, the game cemented relations between the two nations.

Incidentally:

Percy Feeles, former ruler of the six-day bike racers, now is an R.C.A.F. pilot and is physical training supervisor for Air Cadets in No. 4 Training Command, Calgary . . . Ken Doraty, former ace burler with Calgary Chinooks, is returning to the Kenosha, Wisconsin, club again this year. Helen was a leading pitcher last year in the All-American Glamor Girls Softball League . . . Several former N. H. L. stars, including Wally Stanowski, Pete Langelle, Alf Pike, Jack Stewart and Paul Ptata, have been playing in exhibition and benefit games with R.C.A.P. teams in the prairies.

CASUAL COMMENT

By K.J.C.

Matched

After a long, scrapping cross-examination, the Judge asked the lone witness-box remained quite calm. At last the lawyer exclaimed: "Your Honor had no education, but you answered all my questions smartly enough."

"Yes, sir", replied the witness meekly, "but you don't have to be a scholar to answer silly questions".

Softball Round-Up.

Last year there were eight teams in the Belleville Senior Softball League, No. 5 I.T.S., Reliance, Vets' Juniors, Alemite, Stephens-Adamson, Bristol, Foundries and Belleville Garrison, but indications today point to a much smaller entry for 1944.

At the softball executive conclave discussion was heard regarding the potential entries for 1944, season are definitely not returning to the softball wars, but will conduct only an inter-plant league of their own. Belleville Garrison is not expected but we will No. 5 I.T.S. now the Department of National Defence has announced the possible closing of the local Air Force base. Nothing has been heard from the camp of the Belleville Foundries team and the same holds good for Alemite, however, rumors have Bristol moving out to Wallbridge on their home diamond. Last year, while no doubt Al Hitchon and his associates will be back with a strong "Marine" team from Foster Ward and the Stephens Adamson plant.

Money Daisies!

It seems the National Baseball League will open the 1944 season with nearly all possible games of-its schedule booked to be played on the dates best calculated to draw the crowd. These are the openers, the Sundays, the holidays and the nights. The tendency becomes more pronounced each year and the reason "League chart" is included. Between them, the two major leagues have scheduled 910 of their 1,232 championship games. More than half of these will be played on those choice dates, when fans are more likely to have the leisure time in which to attend than is at their disposal on the week-day afternoons.

In fact, the two 1944 schedules received the greatest concentration of "money dates" ever attempted in major league circles, with the American League club making more of an effort than the National to crowd the openers and the holidays but not by much.

The schedule of the Washington club being given permission to play all of its scheduled series at home games at night, starting May 10, that club has 43 mazda operas on the schedule, second best, with the number of "money games" on the American League chart to 218 out of a possible 616, while the National League clubs have 201 such bookings out of their possible 616.

In addition, the Detroit club, one of the three in the American League with lights for night ball, has scheduled seven twilight games, one with each opponent, all in July and August. Washington will have only six home nearly evening afternoon games, all in April.

Scattered Around Now.

Bill Walshe has the following interesting comment in the Whig-Standard on the Kingston Junior B team of a few years back: "Kingston Vics have an added objective in their search for the Ontario Junior B Crown as the token of the title is the Dingo Game Limit. Sunderland Trophy, which was presented by the Ontario Hockey Association, in honor of Kingston's dean of hockey, A. Kingston man, directed by Wally Elmer, won the trophy when he was first put into competition in 1938 and Max Jackson, manager coach of the Vics, was leading the bricks of that trade as Wally Elmer's assistant. The map of the world has changed since Kingston's last little junior club completed a Memorial Cup campaign as Ontario Junior B champs. Most of the championship team of nine years ago are now in the service. Ken Partin, tricky forward, is piloting big bombers over Europe, while Jackson, pivot-man, Gerry Younger-Lewis, holds an important position in the army. Goalie Carl Hewitt is overseas in the army and his understudy, Jimmy Simpson, has been in the navy since the start of the war. Leo Cassidy, fleet defenceman, is in the RCAF overseas and Hector Dubeau, the fifth member of the Vics' defence, is in the army and Aymer Burtch is in the air force.

Remember When.

Jr. Willard, with a finger fracture put in a splint round and carefully defended his world's heavyweight championship against Frank Moran in ten rounds at New York years ago. Willard won a ten rounds in 1919 to Jack Dempsey, taking a terrific beating from the latter's fists at Toledo, Ohio.

Cage Play-offs.

Coach Roland Pryke says he's unearthed a new secret weapon for the Reliance play-offs against Frank Martin's Alemite lassies in the second game of the best-of-three Softball finals at the "Y" on Monday evening. About the only secret weapon Roland Pryke needs Coathup, on the loose for about ten minutes. The last time meeting the Alemites won 34 to 22 as the result of a first half rout that Reliance just couldn't hawl down. However, in the last half it was an entirely different tussle. The second game of a best-in-three series come up Monday.

Horse Sense Bridge

LESSON NO. 237

By SAM GORDON
The Kibitzer

We all love Nita Tyme. Her cooking is sublime. But when it comes to contract bridge, efforts are crushing. If caused enough, she may learn what a trick should be. Leaving a double, She will not take the trouble.

When an undoubled bridge contract is played and made, each odd trick pays its points: 20 if clubs or diamonds; 30 in hearts or spades; 40 for the first and 30 for each one thereafter in no-trump.

To make a game, it takes 100 points in odd tricks. But the only odd trick points that apply toward game are those that have been bid and taken; not those taken in excess of the bid.

The odd tricks taken in excess of the bid are also scored. But they have no effect as game-helping points. They are known as premium points.

But suppose a contract is doubled by an opponent and made. Now, the points double for each odd trick bid and made: 40 in a minor; 60 in a major; 80 for the first and 60 for each thereafter in no-trump.

The doubled points for bid and taken count toward game and affect the making of a game. Just as if the bid were for as much with each bid-taken odd trick counting as two tricks.

Take a pair of partnership hands like these:

SOUTH	NORTH
♠ 7 6 5	♠ K Q 10 8 2
♥ A K Q 6 2	♥ J 9 3
♦ A K Q 3	♦ 8 7 4
♣ 9 3	♣ 10 5 4
♠ A Q 6 2
♥ 8 7 5
♦ J 6 5 2
♣ K Q 8

When south reaches a bid of two no-trump, an opponent doubles and there is no more bidding. South takes the eight tricks needed to fulfill the odd trick.

Each undoubled heart trick would have been worth 30 points. Doubled, each heart trick is worth 60. Having bid and taken two odd tricks in doubled, south gets paid 120 points for his side.

Since the taken tricks were bid, the 120 points apply toward the making of a game. Just as if south had bid two hearts. That as if he had won twice 30 for each trick.

But that is not all. Under present scoring rules, a trick that is over-bidded, doubled, counts 50 points of 50 premium points. These are known as "insult" and other bonuses for making game and such.

Careful when you double. Don't do it on a bubble.

"The Oklahoma Kid"

The management of the Belle Theatre is pleased to announce the return engagement this week end of the Oklahoma Kid, starring James Cagney and Humphrey Bogart. The Warner Bros. re-issue was prompted by the great popularity of its stars who scored tremendously in recently-released films. James Cagney's excellent portrayal of the late George M. Cohan in "Yankee Doodle Dandy" won him the Academy Award, while Humphrey Bogart sky-rocketed to fame in "Across the Pacific," "Casablanca," and "Action in the North Atlantic."

The supporting cast features Donald Crisp and Rosemary Lane and includes Harvey Stephens, Hugh Sothern, Charles Middleton, Edward Pawley and Ward Bond.

The picture is laid in the wild and lawless days when the Indian territory was being opened to settlement. One of its most impressive scenes is the beginning of the famous land rush of 1889, which some thirty thousand homeseekers took part in, all determined to stake out sites in newly opened Indian territory.

The Canadian Paramount News, with Miss Bibbeau ockerton as cameraman, "The Early Worm Gets the Bird," and a vitaphone musical-novelty headliner, "Jerry Colonna in Oboe That Thrilled the World," will also be exhibited on the same program. Continuous show, will be present-ed today.

AT THE McCARTHY

Mystery Action

Mystery action, described as strictly furtuga, is the mainspring of Universal's new picture, "Spider Dull Moment" which opened today at the McCarthy theatre. The Ritz Brothers are starred, which should be a guarantee of the picture's hilarious and hysterical qualities.

...adilmers is an impressive supporting cast are Frances Langford, Mary Beth Hughes, Franklin Pangborn and Stuart Boyd Crawford.

Stanley Roberts authored the original story, a lively concoction of spy stories dealing with a jewel robbery. Locale of the plot is a night club of doubtful reputation where the Ritz Brothers perform as entertainers but are unwitting accomplices to a gang of crooks. Miss Langford appears as a singer in the club and Miss Hughes portrays a glamorous and skilful pick-pocket. Action of the film is said to reach a dizzy pace when the Ritz Brothers are discovered to have a stolen necklace in their car and they go to establish their innocence and locate the girl on the actual thieves, are declared to be ingenious as well as highly comical.

The Ritz Brothers acrobatics are amplified by music in the new film by Frank Skinner, accompanied vocally by the famous Mellowaires. Lyrics for the songs are "My Blue Heaven" and "Sleepy Time Gal," both presented by Miss Langford.

"Spider Woman".

For the first time in his intricate history of mystery unraveling, Sherlock Holmes will perform under chilly clever feminine opponent, Adres Spedding, in Universal's "Spider Woman," the latest feature attraction at the McCarthy theatre today.

Basil Rathbone and Nigel Bruce are co-starred in the respective roles of Holmes and Dr. Watson, while Gale Sondergaard appears as Adres Spedding.

An absorbing dramatic plot, concerning the hunt for the slayer of a thrilling mystery involving a series of apparently inexplicable "hypnotic" suicides. Each victim is found dead under the most peculiar circumstances which, indicate self-destruction; but Holmes, with unerring instinct detects the sinister hands.

Employing clever disguise, he contrives to get the murderer of the crimes and, aided by the faithful Watson, arranges a marvelous trap to solve the ghastly murders.

Gale Sondergaard's versatile declinations qualifies her as a worthy adversary to the great fictional detective. She has portrayed roles of Oriental mystical through the gamut of foreign intrigue and smartly gowned; sinister schemng; adoss wfoel in the tac; pred "Spider Woman".

The supporting cast in the large cast includes Dennis Hoey, Arthur Hohl, Mary Gordon, Alec Craig and Vernon Downing.

AT THE BELLE — Humphrey Bogart and James Cagney together, in "The Oklahoma Kid." Warner Bros. desperadoes, double star bill, features Donald Crisp and Rosemary Lane.

AT THE McCARTHY — Basil Rathbone as Sherlock Holmes, Gale Sondergaard as Adres Spedding, and Nigel Bruce as Dr Watson in "The Spider Woman," now at the McCarthy Theatre, along with the Ritz Brothers in "Never a Dull Moment."

AT THE CAPITOL — Action fierce across the screen in "High Explosive," starring Chester Morris, Jean Parker and Barry Sullivan, and comes to the Capitol Theatre Sunday night. On the same program the riotous comedy "Holy Matrimony."

AT THE CAPITOL

"Holy Matrimony"

If you'd like to see a wild and Woolley-Fields day and time and frolic—and who doesn't, these days we'll say this, "Holy Matrimony," which is slated for the Capitol Theatre on Sunday midnight.

For when he of the pointed beard and double-jointed tongue—Monty Woolley—gets together with that lovable lady of laughter and song—Gracie Fields—there's bound to be an uproar! And that's the way it is all through the new 20th Century Fox comedy hit, according to advance reports.

As you might imagine from the title, Kid Cupid draws a bead on bewhiskered Monty, and before he knows it he's together with Gracie at a rose-covered cottage—and a laugh for every minute on the roof.

The Producer Nunnally Johnson goes the gratis for much of the hilarity in the film, for in addition to the responsibility of filming the picture, he wrote the screen play from Ilka Chase's novel, "I Married Ind Alive." And he made certain that the film was peopled by expert actors, well known in Hollywood.

The cast of this hilarious and gigantic Laird Cregar, and his very last tussles with the irascible Woolley, while Eugene Pallette and Jane Darwell are co-starred.

In addition, there is a top-notch cast that includes Jerry O'Connell, Alan Mowbray, Melville Cooper and Franklin Pangborn, to mention but a few. Add to this the services of Gracie Fields, and you have the makings of a laugh for every minute on the roof.

"High Explosive"

Mirth-provoking little men who ride their lives to transport it for millions of the nation are the basis for the exciting action movie, "High Explosive," which Paramount brings Sunday midnight to the Capitol Theatre, with Chester Morris, Jean Parker and Barry Sullivan starred.

The romantic side of the story deals with the rivalry of Morris, a nitro driver, and Sullivan, owner of the nitro concern, for the love of Jean Parker who works in the Sullivan's office as his secretary.

The Canadian Paramount News completes the big double attraction.

Armored Corps Unit in England Wins Cage Title

Somewhere in England, March 26 (CWP)—Despite the absence of two members of Canada's 1936 Olympic team, an armored corps reinforcement unit has defeated an infantry reinforcement unit for the C.M.C. Area basketball championship.

The thrilling last the first game of the two-game, total-point series was 34-32 and swamped the opposition 56-16 in the second to take the series 90-48.

The Olympians—Maj. Ian Allison of London and Windsor, Ont., and Tpr. Dave Nixon—sparked their club's offensive by scoring a total of 34 points in the series. Allison, with 14 points, led all scorers.

Cpl. Stan Rimshnit of Toronto was leading scorer for the winners with 18 points in the two tilts.

The series climaxed the most successful cage season since the war began. Eight teams made up the C.M.U. Area league and some continued with exhibition games against United States Army units stationed here. After being eliminated from the playdowns.

In the first of such inter-Allied affairs, two battalion teams of an American regiment broke even in a double-header against two Canadian teams.

A couple of lieutenants from Toronto led the Canucks to a 37-36 victory in the opener. They were Al Dean with 12 points and Rudolf Terasa with six. L/Cpl. John Lockington of Brantford, Ont., shot four.

The Yanks won the second

INKERMAN TEAM BURIED BENEATH HAIL OF RUBBER

Defeated 24-0 by University of Ottawa, Who Move Into Toronto for Next Round

USE TWO GOALIES

Ottawa, March 25—(CP)—Allie Garland's University of Ottawa sharpshooters buried Inkerman, Ont., Rockets beneath a hail of rubber yesterday by a score of 24-0 to advance into the first round of the Memorial Cup hockey play-offs against the winner of the Oshawa-St. Michael's series.

Spearheaded by Bob Pepin and Andre D'Aoust, U. of O., raced to an 8-0 lead at the end of the first period, increased it to 15-0 at the end of the second and got together for a nine-goal assault on the completely outclassed Inkerman defence in the third.

The forward unit of Pepin, John Murelich and Ray Cullerier cashed in for 26 of their team's 34 scoring points. Pepin garnered six goals in five assists to shade D'Aoust by one for premier scoring honors. Murelich accounted for eight and Cullerier for five.

The Rockets used two goalies in an attempt to stem the rush, Ray Baldwin giving way to Cecil Bailey midway through the second frame. Baldwin was beaten 10 times and Bailey suffered for the remaining 14 goals.

For the approaching series against either Oshawa or St. Michael's, U. of O. will add four new players to their roster. Pat Osborne, Ray McDonald and Henry Schmidt will accompany the team to Toronto, while Johnny Allan may go along as well. It is expected the series will start Wednesday at the latest.

THE LITTLE DOG BARKED

CHAPTER 16

Linda wasn't stupid, she knew that her story was in danger until Mack's murderer—she also was either—her murderer was convinced he had been caught. In other words, she really was a brave girl, definitely a "girl," not a boy's impression.

It was a gratifying conclusion, but didn't solve the murder or lighten my load. Nor was I sure who I had in my pocket particularly consoling.

It was Tyler McVane's office, had arrived shortly after Linda left, and read:

Police inquiry re boss whereabouts received. Who is murdered? Boss disappearing somewhere Arcostook unreachable but planned arrive Penn Cove Saturday. Please tell police. Ralph Sherwin, Office Manager.

I laughed when I'd read it the first time, picturing the uproar into which the Inspector's telegram must have thrown the McVane office, the frantic attempts to locate the truant "Boss."

But at a second reading it had made me angry, and blue. McVane would arrive Saturday. Yesterday was Wednesday. That meant three more days in which I had, or felt I had, the responsibility for Linda. McVane had had no right to saddle me with his ward.

I stamped up the steps of the Inspector's house, thoroughly disgusted, handed my telegram to Sgt. Hall, who was sitting at a substitute before a crackling fire, and marched out to stand by the road, shivering deeper into my coat, undecided whether to turn back or go on.

The Sergeant's fire had emphasized the coldness of the evening. But all the same, it was very beautiful. Still light, a little misty—by the grace of northern latitude and daylight-saving time.

Soon I found myself walking toward the cove of yesterday morning, and thought about the possible identity of old Mack's murderer.

George Vickery might have cut the fly rope, as the Inspector had hinted. But—everything pointed to Bill Parris as the logical murderer suspect. Even if his alibi with mother insisted he didn't know Linda.

There was the situation of his family, openly dependent on Burns Lasting's favor. Mack would have had seen Bill near the winch at the critical moment. He looked like the man Linda and I had seen climb out of the downstairs window. And could have been the object of little Stray's fury. Besides, why had the rushed to Vic's house the moment he had heard the injured dog was there? As witness? To bring Stray chocolate or—?

On the other hand: Parris had picked Stray up when he lay licking and had hurt in a corner. I still could see him, coming across the stage, holding the limp little body as if it were something precious—

Then had the Inspector hadn't found out more about the scandal that had involved Linda's parents according to Mack's clippings.

What really had it been all about—probably the Burns' was right when he said it must have been some wandering to feather her nest by blackmail.

Nothing there. Years back in the past and today, right here, two children old men out to "rake-rage" my play. Mrs. Parris out to cheat Linda of her father's money. The three bending together, flattering Josie Kilburn into co-operation, attempting to lure Tom Lisle wood into their ranks . . .

Successfully, judging by the director's treatment of me, but whose tool had he become? Surely not powerful, self-sufficient Mr. Mrs. Parris! She must have told him when Linda really was dead—told him a share in her brother's estate would start when . . .

Inspector Pettengill could tease me all he wanted about my clues and theories, but—there was more to it than hurt vanity. Call it a hunch, call it instinct.

I had traversed the dark lane from the road to the dunelike when thinking these thoughts, and now I walked slowly down to the shore through the grass, keeping close to the bordering bushes from where I could faintly discern a path.

And then, suddenly, there was a house. I hadn't noticed before—a small cabin with a railless porch, perching on a rock above the water half buried in foliage. It looked unoccupied. Some of its windows were shuttered. Others had shades drawn over them from the inside. And there was a padlock at the door.

I sat down on the edge of the porch—it was just the right height to make a good seat—to see the final afterglow of sunset, when I heard a voice behind me say: "Shh, but it's cold, Honeyboy. Hold me closer."

Sondra Marshall — affection, Southern drawl and all! No one answered her. Silence and then—"But after an interval of silence I heard her laugh, a low and threatfly. And then she said: "I wish it were over, lover. I wish we were free and together," with a long sigh.

A man's voice murmured an answer. I couldn't understand the words or place the voice. It sounded like a reproach—gentle reproach. And Sondra declared herself, inaudibly loud.

"But Honey, I promised! I must go through with it. It don't mind much. He's so ill, it won't last long, and—it won't really be a marriage. I couldn't bear that. Honeyboy, you couldn't be unfaithful to you—"

"Honeyboy" murmured something in reply. He had a soft baritone and an inflection that was familiar.

More reproaches probably. For Sondra said in her most affected manner: "But, lover, I'm doing all this for you. I can't stand Burns. I'll cut the last days. It's always I'm the one who has to be nice to Burns' money? Please don't scold me all time, Honeyboy. Hold me close. Kiss me."

And then a sort of purr, and Sondra shewing "Honeyboy" was accepting the invitation.

I, meanwhile, had started slowly, straining my ears to recognize the man's voice. But I had no wish to be an ear witness of Sondra's love making.

And so I got up, as soundlessly as I could manage, and walked back the way I'd come. One thought—a prayer almost—in my mind:

"Inspector Pettingill! Please come home from your clam and lobster party, or, I can never be you. I'm not such an utter idiot with instinct—Inspector Pettingill!"

My prayer was answered. As I approached the police cottage I saw the Inspector Pettingill coming from the opposite direction on the shore road.

He was such a welcome sight I rushed toward him at top speed, arriving all out of breath and gasping out incoherently: "Thank you, sir! You're back! I had no idea it was there. It looked empty, but they were inside. You'll catch them if you hurry. Sondra and her boy friend—I could swear it's he, yet I can't swear to it."

It took the Inspector about ten shrewd questions to make sense of my disjointed and find out that it was, presumably, Linwood.

"I'll get a flashlight, you'll soon be sure," he said briefly, running up his steps over my protest that I'd left the house unlocked, my pocket and one was enough. And presently I was hurrying behind the fleet man's long legs, trying to keep up with my companion's rapid strides and repeating more rationally all I had overheard.

"Honeyboy"—"Honeyboy's" retreat lily peacefully in the paling light between the trees. Not very deeply though. For suddenly I found myself sitting bolt upright in bed. Wide-awake, and straining my ears for a repetition of the sound that must have awakened me.

What is the Secret of Family Health

One family is always healthy. In the next family there seems to always be someone sick.

Why?

It used to be customary to blame this condition on "nerves."

But recent investigations show that far more depends on living and eating habits.

The underlying cause of low vitality is the lack of certain kinds of vitamin B; and essential minerals derived from the food consumed.

As a result whole families may be found to be subject to a low condition of health which leaves them prey to serious and annoying ailments.

More and more intelligent thinking people are learning to depend on Dr. Chase's Nerve Food as a "tonic-laxative" to help them out of a low condition of vitality.

It is usually the mother in the home who is largely responsible for the family health and most mothers know about Dr. Chase's Nerve Food and what it can do to help restore richness to the blood and vigor to the nervous system.

In most families, these days, there are excesses of work, worry and excitement that overtax the nerves and cause headaches, irritability, lack of energy and nervousness.

But these troubles do not need to last long if you let Dr. Chase's Nerve Food help you.

School age children who have become pale, nervous and anaemic are soon helped back to robust health by the use of this tonic-treatment for the blood and the nerves.

Ask your druggist for the economy size bottle of Dr. Chase's Nerve Food.

Canadians Best Street Fighters In the World
Toronto, March 24 — (CP)—Back from seven months with the Canadian forces in Africa, Sicily and Italy, Lieut.-Col. G. R. Walsh, of Toronto and Moncton said today that "British officials' appreciation of Allied force headquarters described Canadians 'The best street fighters in the world.'"

"Fighting qualities of our troops were well demonstrated from the landing in Sicily until the bitter fighting at Cassino. The 1st Canadian division of course is now at its training for more than three years in England had been altered. We had an operation to make room and now in other future theatres it should importance to the war effort."

Toronto Editor

Former member of the editorial staff of the Toronto Star and for the past three years of the Information Journal and the Toronto Globe and Mail, Col. Wallace attended army Dec. 2, 1939. He went overseas in August, 1940, as a machine-gun Lieutenant and in 1943 was transferred to public relations work and given charge of Canadian Public relations. He was promoted Lieutenant-Colonel in 1943.

Col. Wallace experienced London's "big blitz" and "little blitz" which he said: "They don't last as long or cover as much territory as the heavy blitzes of 1940 and 1941 but there's something very precise and deadly about them." His residence to precision may have derived from his February experience when for three hours bombs bracketed the London Club, where he was staying and fell on both sides of it.

The Great Smelt Industry

(From Time)

"The greatest catastrophe in fishing history!"

The incredible Great Lakes smelt situation was so described last week by Dr. John Van Oosten of the U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service. The vast smelt population of Lake Michigan and Lake Huron (where some 95 percent of U.S. fresh water smelts breed) had suddenly vanished. Two years ago fishermen took 4,000,000 lb. of smelts there; last year, 1,000,000. Total catch this winter, 2 lb. No one knew why the smelts had died.

Originally from Maine fresh-water lakes, the smelts were transplanted to Michigan's Crystal Lake in 1912 as food for salmon. The salmon unaccountably disappeared, but the smelts thrived, soon spread through the Great Lakes. In Huron and Michigan fishermen dipping for bigger fish found them a nuisance. Developed into a popular table delicacy, the silver smelts became a big industry in the past decade; prices jumped from 1-3c to 8c a lb. This year OPA had counted on smelts for 10,000,000 lb. of food.

In Green Bay, off northern Michigan, where smelts grew thickest, fishermen caught them through holes in the ice in winter, dipped them out of streams with nets when they swam upstream to spawn in spring. A terrific breeder (the female spawns some 30,000 eggs), the smelt fed on insect larvae, other fish and sometimes its own young. Green Bay fishermen began to notice something wrong last winter, when dead smelts popped up through their fishing holes in the ice. By spring great shoals of dead fish were being washed ashore and the lake bottoms were carpeted with them. The unknown malady spread rapidly northward through Huron and Michigan, but apparently left untouched the smaller populations of Erie, Ontario and Superior.

Pathologists could find no clue to the disease; there seemed to be nothing wrong with the fish anatomically (a diseased fish usually shows tumours or lesions). Said Dr. Van Oosten: "I am completely at a loss. The fish died regardless of age, sex, size, exterior condition or anything else." Last week Dr. Van Oosten hastened to Crystal Lake, where the smelts still seemed healthy, to fish and analyze further.

SPRING

5D

IF SPRING whispers to you in the dulest tones of a flower-fired med hat, you'll find that many designers have turned their hearts to especially charming flower-trimmed hats this season. One such designer is Anitra Artiz, who uses this dainty feminized fedora in natural straw and trimmed it with a cluster of violets topped by a tiny flame colored flower for additional color accent. The cirrage of violets worn on the shoulder intensifies the Spring accent.

Mr. Howe: "I think it would be a great idea—wonderful."

WITH ALL GOOD WISHES: A wedding present that neither she nor her husband will ever see..... nor will anyone else. Next week's ad "the best present I ever expect to get" by a newly married W.R.C. N.S. lieutenant, in Naval Intelligence. The present is a sunken German submarine.

The lieutenant's wedding day was Feb. 7, and on that day a friend, a pilot, officer in the R.C.A.F. overseas, sank a Nazi sub. He cabled that that was his wedding present to his navy friend.

To make the romantic picture complete, it was the Wren lieutenant who had played cupid by introducing the pilot officer to the girl who is now his wife.

Generals: Somebody dug into the files and found that Canada had fewer generals in the last war than in this one. In the First Great War Canada had four active divisions comprising one corps. At present the Dominion has five divisions overseas in two corps. Canada has a full army organization now whereas in the last war her corps was part of a British army formation.

Here is a table of generals in this war and last:

	Lieut.-Gen.	Maj.-Gen.	X-Brig.
Last war	5	29	50
Present war	4	41	139

X—Last war the ter mwas Brigader-General.

Maple Leaf Club New York Haven for Servicemen

Right in the heart of Manhattan, on famed Fifth Avenue, is the Canadian (Maple Leaf) Division of the British War Relief Society, which serves the dual end of making clothing and other necessities for stricken war areas within the United Nations and providing food and relaxation for servicemen of all United Nations. At left, Mrs. M. B. Cornell, of Rutherford, N.J., makes buttonholes for pyjamas. She comes from Toronto. Mrs. S. F. Raymond, of Short Hills, N.J., secures theatre tickets for gunner N. Rainer of Folkstone, England. Miss Mary Hanley inspects a rag doll, and above three servicemen relax in the Club.

Ottawa, March 25.—(CP)—Weep no more, citizens. When you struggle with your income tax forms know that you have a companion in baby faces who shares your misery.

C. K. Fraser (PC-Peterborough West) said in the Commons the other night that there should be some arrangements to assist workers in war plants in making out their income tax forms as they were "pretty much troubled."

Munitions Minister Howe, whose department has charge of war plants, knows how they feel.

"So far as income tax goes, I have to have the help of the Minister of National Revenue (Lt.-Col. Colin Gibson) to make out mine, so that I am afraid I would not be of much help to the man in Peterborough in helping him income tax return," he said.

"Perhaps you help the Minister of National Revenue make out his," quipped T. C. Douglas (CCF-Weyburn).

"But does not the Minister think it is a good idea," persisted Mr. Fraser.

What Would Happen If All Jews Vanished?

(By Phillip Wylie, in the Miami Daily News).

I have heard hundreds of malicious charges brought against the Jews by people I know, most of whom should know better. These charges are always of two kinds: either charges that could be made with exactly equal truth against all humanity, or lies.

The people who make them are unable or unwilling to check fact and find out truth. So they repeat lies without the slightest realization of their origin or their monstrousness.

They do not—don't reason. They tell me—all of them—that some of their best friends are Jews and that there are "fine" Jews. Five minutes later, they belittle and demean Jews—thus thrusting knives in the backs of those "best friends."

They are too empty-headed to perceive that, by everybody else, their Jewish friends are automatically included in their generality. That is one measure of their stupidity.

They ought to know, if they are over 10 years old, that the proportion of "fine" people among gentiles runs just the same, to the last decimal point.

And they should remember that whenever a group is disenfranchised or destroyed, mankind then has the tyrant or executioner to deal with. In such a case it would be—themselves.

Finally, they should have been taught this truth: Those who persecute one group inevitably turn upon others. I daresay 50 per cent of the anti-Semitic talkers known to me are also anti-Catholic. Suppose their words, which have the same darkling color that made pogroms in Europe, become reality? Against whom would they strike next?

But—let us half-suppose it. Like the shrewd hill-billy in the fable, let us turn propaganda into imagined reality. If it happened—what? Suppose all Jews vanished at the stroke of midnight. What evil would be undone? What blessing would result? What's the talk all about?

The next day, there would still be as many crimes committed, per capita. Prices would remain proportionately as full.

The incidence of gangsters and rapists would rise slightly.

The number of corrupt political leaders and office holders would hardly diminish by a handful.

We'd lose ground in the war, where hunreds of thousands of good allied soldiers were missing, and because the axis would lose nobody.

No problem of the peace would change a fair-breadth. Even Palestine would then be the Arab problem it always was.

The strikers would still strike; John L. Lewis and Petrillo would still haunt us.

There would be four per cent more food—but distribution would buckle, four per cent more material for clothes—and nobody much left to make clothes, and, of course, taxes would rise four per cent.

The movies and the radio wouldn't miss a beat, in spite of what the anti-Semites have said. Only the quality would suffer.

The market would sag, but not collapse, for there are not that many Jews in it and the average Jew is poor, in spite, again, of the illiterate folklore.

No gain. What loss? Well—most of the people who make America laugh would be gone, for one thing. And many of the people who touch our hearts every day. Poets, writers, dramatists, publicists, best-loved radio and movie stars and musicians—thousands of these. You can write the list yourself.

We'd lose hundreds of great philanthropists, myriads of lesser ones, and hundreds of thousands of the kindest people in America besides.

Our culture would be knocked out and the throat of our mirth would be cut. Guilt's, too. But it's nothing.

We'd lose so many scientists that the progress of man would be set back the length of your whole lifetime.

We'd lose the millions of babies and adults their research was going to have saved.

We'd lose thousands of men now thinking up instruments of victory—and all the uncountable engines they would have invented for the empire we call the Future.

If we had caused this, we'd lose the American Constitution and its Bill of Rights, our security, everybody's liberty, our self-respect, and the immortal souls of those who had contributed to the measureless catastrophe even by talk. "Information, Please" would be wiped out. We'd lose Barney Baruch for the LaMarr and Albert Einstein and—Hell!

Think. Think honestly. That's all it takes.

RED ARMY POISED FOR THRUST INTO RUMANIA

Russian Big Guns Lay Down Barrage On Rumanian Soil

Soviet Forces Now At Point Where Hitler Started Drive Three Years Ago

53-MILE FRONT

London, March 27 — (AP)— The Red Army was poised today for the first thrust onto enemy soil after smashing triumphantly to the Prut river border of Rumania from which Hitler launched the southern wing of his ill-starred invasion of Russia nearly three years ago.

Russian big guns already are laying down a barrage on Rumanian territory, front dispatches said today, and Soviet infantrymen were expected to surge across the narrow Prut within a few hours, set on a 53-mile front yesterday, only a mile after they crossed the broader Dniester, now 60 miles behind them.

As 24 volleys from 324 guns thundered out Moscow flooded night in celebration or the drive to the enemy's border, the army newspaper, Red Star, declared that the Red army there are no boundaries; her hatred is boundless for Berlin, and a straight jacket for the mad Fuehrer.

Premier Marshal Stalin, who announced the conquest of part of "our state and frontiers," also reported the capture of the Rumanian rail city of Ungheni, victory which closed another German avenue of retreat from Kishenev, and Soviet forces were declared within 10 miles of Iasi (Jassy), through which runs the major Nazi escape railway from the big Black Sea port of Constanza.

Germans Doomed at Odessa

The snags to the Prut was regarded in London as already doomed Germans at Odessa, key Black Sea besieged Nikolaev, Turkish reports said today, was making salvage of armed reinforcements through Bessarabia and Rumania suggested he probably would make a stand in Rumania in an attempt at least to save the Ploesti oil fields. The Russians were reported within 200 miles of this vital region and 250 miles from Bucharest, Rumanian capital.

The Rumians also hammered out new gains on the Middle Dniester river yesterday, a Soviet communique announcing that Kamenets Podolsk, the south Bessarabian corner of the Ukraine, had been encircled and that the Red army already was storming through its streets. The encirclement centre is vital as an escape gage for defeated German troops streaming southward from fallen Proskurov, Tarnopol Surrendered.

In central Poland, where some Russian units are within 36 miles of the 1939 Polish frontier between Germany and Russia, the Red Army has completely encircled Tarnopol, bitterly defended for weeks, and to be wiping out the garrison, Moscow said, after street. Other Russian forces already had entered the city in their drive toward the communications centre of Lwow.

German broadcasts asserted the Russians had thrown 100,000 men into a new drive along the Moghilev sector of White Russia, but the report had no Soviet confirmation.

CASSINO BATTLE CHANGES INTO ARTILLERY DUEL

Superior Mass Allied Guns Seeking to Knock Out Nazi Posts In City

GERMANS REGROUPING

By LYNN HEINZERLING
(AP War Correspondent)

Naples, March 27 — (AP) — The Allied assault on Cassino, temporarily stalled short of its objective, had changed today into an artillery duel in which a superior mass of Allied guns was seeking to knock out the remaining German positions remaining in the town's ruined streets.

An announcement said Allied artillery had begun a regrouping campaign which made both the Continental Hotel and Hotel Des Roses, which the Germans have converted into fortresses.

A large explosion occurred when artillery engaged a cluster of German mines in the hotel garden, indicating an ammunition dump was hit. "the only other ground activity was limited to patrol. Germans Regrouping.

Ladies dispatched from the Cassino front reported German forces regrouping in the Dural Palace-Osliseum area half a mile to the south of the town, possibly for a new thrust against Allied positions.

Among those strongholds, astride Highway 6 where it bends sharply westward along Monastery Hill, German mortars were said yesterday to be concentrating the bulk of their forces in the railroad station 1,000 yards to the east.

Yesterday's communique reported little change in the relative positions of the battling forces within the town, the Germans still holding most of the area to which they clung in the first days of the Allied advance after the heavy bombing of the enemy stronghold.

Rome Driven to Cover.

The announcement said the Germans in Rome sent up tanks rumbling into the open from the Castrense Military Barracks to put a smoke screen, but hot Allied artillery fire was said to have driven them again to cover.

Fighting still raged among the ruins of the Anzio railroad here last night.

The Fifth Army broadcast reported more than an hour later than usual. There was no explanation.

Churchill Confidently Predicts Victory, Praises Russia's Western Drive

London, March 27 —(CP)— Resurgent optimism, bolstered by the enthusiasm of the early war years, was expressed by most London newspapers yesterday after Prime Minister Churchill's address Sunday night in which he confidently predicted victory and praised the Russian westward advance as "the greatest cause of Hitler's undoing."

Generally speaking, there seemed to be a feeling that the average listeners who had been expecting another great call to valor on the eve of the mighty decisive events foreshadowed by Mr. Churchill's warning that "the hour greatest effort is approaching".

In his 40-minute broadcast address, the first for a year, the Prime Minister did not touch upon problems of diplomacy confronting the Allied Nations, as some observers had expected he might, but reviewed the war from all fronts in the past, strongly defended his administration, and in general terms outlined post-war economic plans for Britain.

Seeks Guardly of Invasion.

He spoke only guardedly of the forthcoming events, forecasting only that "the time will come when we shall feel quite sincerely that the best work they can do . . . is to remain silent," and warning against criticism and condemn them as "unpatriotic and disloyal because they are not, in the midst of this deadly struggle, ready to be responsible to produce foolproof solutions for the whole future world . . . .

Great Invasion Force.

The Daily Herald termed the broadcast "far from satisfying because "a great deal of the speech was devoted to pre-occupations against critics o the government."

It said: "there is public anxiety about reconstruction, both national and international, which the broadcast left unsatisfied."

The Daily Mail said the war "is still entering upon a good deal of familiar ground." It described the first part of the speech, in which Mr. Churchill made a full-blooded defence of his administration and set forth future plans, as the best but added "nevertheless the least part of it still is yet in the air."

Reconstruction and Education

The Times editorially approved Mr. Churchill's reference to health and on education, public health and national insurance, but it said of the statement that the government "this defence of the 'interim policy' of the past and the present was a fair land for the provision of housing and employment in the very general demand for larger plans essential to a program of permanent reconstruction."

Similarly The Manchester Guardian expressed agreement with the Prime Minister's war views but said that "the real test of the post-war planning should not be allowed to interfere with the conduct of the war, "what many people ask is what can be done now to make a comprehensive word, is due not so much to the ministers' concentration on war as to difference of opinion."

ALLIES THREATEN JAPANESE BASE AT MYITKYINA

Slash to Within Thirty-Two Miles of 'Railhead Position in Hard Fighting

HOLD ENEMY IN INDIA

New Delhi, March 27 (AP)— Allied troops engaged in their invasion of India have made some progress in the general direction of Kohima, 30 miles inside the border of Assam province, and in Imphal, southeast Asia communique reported today.

Across the Naga hills from Kohima lies the Bengal-Assam railway, main artery for Allied supply in the north.

The Japanese pressure in the Ukhrul area, 32 miles north of Imphal "is being contained," the communique said, adding that severe fighting has taken place. This was a reference to the attack of the three Japanese invasion columns which are striving to aid Admiral Lord Mountbatten's counter-invasion of Burma designed to meet the genral offensive aimed at cutting the Allies' Assam supply lines.

The communique said Japanese troops had penetrated further in the Tiddim-Imphal road, another invasion route, and several of them destroyed. In this area, too, there was heavy fighting as Allied forces, "inflicting very heavy casualties," took a hill feature and "cleared the Kennedy peak position on the road."

In the Mayu Valley, Chinese forces continued to advance against stiffening resistance, and fighting broke off when Shadsuup was captured in an "end run" around Japanese lines. Shadsuup is but two Allied thrusts against Myitkyina, main Japanese base in North Burma and terminus of the railroad from Ledo Road.

The other Allied spearhead driving southward Myitkyina from Sumprabum made further progress and occupied the village of Tingpai.

Allied fighter planes, fighter-bombers, dive-bombers and bombers were aided in support of the Allied group forces. Heavies concentrated on Japanese troop concentrations and other objectives on the Imphal-Tiddim road.

Huge Blow Dealt Reconstruction Work by the Nazis

Krupp Armament Works Located in Ruhr City; Hanover Also Smashed

NINE BOMBERS LOST

London, March 27 (CP) — A great armada of R.A.F. and RCAF planes roared into the industrial Rhineland Sunday night and dropped a shattering weight of explosives on Essen, site of the vast Krupp Armament Works.

While the Krupp centre was hammered, other RCAF squadrons formed a substantial part of a force which blasted rail targets at Courtrai, in Belgium.

The R.A.F., which operated "in very great strength" during the night, also bombed Hanover and other targets in Germany.

It was made immediately clear that the results of the attack on Essen were impossible, the Air Ministry announced, but it was added that R.A.F. and RCAF had dealt another tremendous blow at the city in an effort to wipe out the results of desperate reconstruction work the Nazis' enemies have been carrying on in Germany's industrial centre.

Nine bombers were lost in the night's operations, including one Canadian craft.

Over 1,000 Bombers Out

The term "very great strength" indicated 1,000 more bombers roared over the Reich and occupied territory in the non-stop aerial obliteration of Nazi targets.

The RCAF operated "in force" against the industrial Ruhr city of Essen, which received its last heavy battering from the R.A.F. During the night a total of two Allied thrusts against Myitkyina, main Japanese base in North Burma and terminus of the railroad from Ledo Road.

The other Allied spearhead driving southward Myitkyina from Sumprabum made further progress and occupied the village of Tingpai.

Allied fighter planes, fighter-bombers, dive-bombers and bombers were aided in support of the Allied group forces. Heavies concentrated on Japanese troop concentrations and other objectives on the Imphal-Tiddim road.

Bracken Visits The Maritimes

Halifax, March 27 — (CP)—John Bracken, Progressive Conservative National leader, said on his arrival here Sunday night that guessing at the Dominion election date was the most futile thing he can think of. Here on a three-day visit, he was silent on the question of when he would seek a seat in the House of Commons.

His only comment on the election was: "I no longer we go without an election, the closer it is."

He discussed post-war problems, saying enterprise and government must dovetail. Blitz plans in the meantime, he said, war to peace.

night operations.

Suffered Other Great Attacks

Berlin suffered the heaviest of Germany's heavy armament until last year's series of terrific assaults by the R.A.F. and RCAF, culminating in a 1,000-ton raid on the night of July 25.

After that final blow in the Battle of Berlin, Sir Archibald Sinclair, air secretary, announced that the German capital "will not be shattered."

At the same time he added bombers might have to return to the big munitions centre to check any attempts at partial reconstruction.

He cited the results of seven previous major raids on Essen as catastrophic.

Even in late night groundings were unable to observe the damage caused by the bombers.

The four-engined craft returned to Germany after an interval of only one night since their last great blow on the Ruhr, when 1,250-ton bombers of Berlin Friday night, carried out at a loss of 73 bombers, 12 of them Canadian.

The venture into occupied territory was the third night in a row that the RCAF had sent out large numbers of bombers. On Friday night Canadian planes helped to deliver a record bomb-load on shattered Berlin at a cost of 11 bombers and on Saturday night they flew with the R.A.F. to Nuremberg, Munich and Augsburg, three of Germany's most important targets.

The Berlin attack on Friday night was the heaviest single night attack by the R.A.F. and RCAF on Ausburg, a French railway junction on the Belgian border, and the R.A.F. on Lyon in Southeastern France. Mosquito attacked Berlin the same night. Canadian R.A.F. planes was lost Saturday night and all the Canadian planes returned.

American heavy and medium bombers attacked Berlin on Sunday, bombers estimated to total possibly 1,700, flying in two great formations, the targets near the coasts of France and The Netherlands. In one area fighters shot up airdrome within sight of Paris without opposition.

The four-engined aircraft loosed bombs through the Pas-de-Calais area and military installations in Northern Germany and Holland, the west. Mediums hit the Ijmuiden dock of Holland, a German E-boat test.

The American operations cost 8 bombers and one fighter.

German Armies Driven Back 935 Miles by Soviet Offensives

By EDDY GILMORE
Associated Press Staff Writer

Moscow, March 27 — (AP) — The German armies which Hitler has been hurled across the Prut river—which he proclaimed as his "eastern state frontier"—once were 935 miles inside the Soviet Union from the Prut, and 1,000 miles from Moscow, the Soviet capital.

It was on June 22, 1941, that Hitler launched the invasion which is going to be had "decided to give the fate of the German people, and the Reich, and of Europe again into the hands of our soldiers." That was an ironically prophetic statement.

For today, after nearly three years of the world's darkest fighting, the Russians have swept over the Ukraine, the Crimea and the Estonian Soviet republic, into the Prut valley, 60 miles from Bucharest, and now stand on the Prut—another part of the long jump-off line for the final drive.

From the Bug river in Poland, where Nazi spearheads thrust into the Volga river at Stalingrad, and the Don river at Rostov, to the province, southeast of Moscow, and 300 miles to Lake Ladoga, east of Leningrad.

From the Prut river in Rumania, they pushed 250 miles to a secret east of Klitsa, capital of Kalmuck, Nazi-held territory, and 150 miles to the suburbs of Orshoni-Mogilev.

The invaders at one time held about 1/12th of the Soviet Union. Now its people could bear the boom of the big guns and see the flashes of exploding shells. They drove it within four miles of the centre of Leningrad, 18 miles from the suburbs of Stalingrad.

Hitler directed the campaign against Moscow, and it now is known from captured documents that he planned to get as far as Smolensk and Roslavl, Reichmarshall Goering, one of his intimates, that he planned to get to Kiev and villages farther east.

It was in Russia that Hitler, the supreme commander, and his commanders, lost their reputations.

The roll includes Field Marshal Gen. Fedorich Von Paulus, captured at Stalingrad; Field Marshal Gen. Wilhelm List, Hitler's aide in losing the Ukraine; Field Marshal Gen. Erich Von Manstein, who lost a great tank reputation in the lower Caucus in failing to smash through to Iran and Iraq; and Field Marshal Gen. Fedor Von Brock, who failed to capture Moscow and the center of Leningrad.

First in command, the abortive German attack has cost them/casualties more than 13,000,000, Russian sources declared on Feb. 23, that the Germans had lost 8,000,000 troops, including at least 4,000,000 dead. Last November he said that 3,000,000 Nazis, Axis and Nazis had lost more than 4,000,000, of which 1,000,000 were slain.

Almost two months of Russian victories have ensued to swell these figures. Nazi casualties, while heavy, have not been announced for some time.

Pte. Geo. Dimmie Welcomed Home From Overseas

After spending four and a half years with the Hastings and Prince Edward regiment in England, Scotland, Sicily and Italy, Pte. George Dimmie returned to his home in Belleville on Friday night. He was welcomed by a host of his immediate family and a group of friends, who met him at the train and escorted him to the home of Mr. and Mrs. Percy Sanford, where a party was prepared for him. Pte. Dimmie was officially welcomed home by His Worship Mayor Rollins on Saturday afternoon, when an interview was held.

Pte. Dimmie related many interesting experiences he had while with his regiment in the various campaigns they took part in. The first encounter with the enemy was early in the war, when the Hastings and Prince Edward Regiment, was sent to Sicily. Pte. Dimmie related the time the regiment was advancing from the south to Paris, when he got separated from the Street and were taken across the channel to England. He was then been blown out and advance was impossible when reinforcements for pair work being done, but before this was started, dispatch riders were sent out to reconnoitre and returned with the information, that the enemy had withdrawn from the French capital. Several of these riders were killed at the time.

Chumsy with Belleville Boys.

Among the Belleville boys with the H. P. E. Regt. with which Pte. Dimmie chumed around are Pte. Gerald Woods and Dick Bell both of them are serving with the regiment. Another friend is Sgt. Cecil Tonlin, who is home on invalided home also and is at present recuperating from wounds and illness mentioned by Pte. Dimmie, who has remained with the regiment. Pte. Woods and Pte. Dimmie often shared their furloughs and visited the Hastings in Italy. In remarks of Pte. Dimmie these three were very much impressed with the hospitality of the English and Scottish people, as well as those in the Canadian troops first arrived in England.

Pte. Dimmie is starting a furlough which will last for the next thirty days, during which time he wishes to renew old acquaintances in the city and also to visit his harrowing experiences. He did not say much about his share or prospects of the Allies in Italy. "The mud", he said, "was the worst drawback." Pte. Dimmie is also visiting with the Pioneer Corps, "Overseas" of the Hastings and Prince Edward Regiment, Pte. Dimmie's brother, Gnr. William Dimmie, having to do with demolition and removal of enemy "booby-trap" mines. He has been in this line of job for anyone suffering with nervousness or weak nerves. Pte. Dimmie was the last type of person to be picked for this work, but the success of it depended upon a cool and steady mind at all times.

Speaks Highly of Officers

He spoke highly of the officers of the regiment and said they were thoughtful and intelligent men, who placed their men's welfare before all other factors, when occasion arose. Pte. Dimmie, together with the Hastings and Prince Edward Regiment left for duty at the outbreak of war. He joined the regiment as Gen. McNaughton's aide-de-camp and continued on that capacity. Later he remustered. Pte. Dimmie is a member of the Belleville sporting circles as an expert horseshoe pitcher and was also in time with the army often amused himself in this manner.

The party arranged for his reception home was promoted by his brother, Roy Dimmie. He apparently found that the standard of pleasure in England was not to compare with that of his home town. It is also wished that his brother, Gnr. William F. Dimmie, R.C.A., could have been with them on this occasion. He stated, that he had seen his brother, while in England just before leaving for the embarkation port and his return to Canada, and that it was the first time he had seen him in a year and a half. When Pte. Dimmie has completed his leave he will report to Kingston for disposition. Pte. Dimmie gave as his reason for his return, trouble with his wife which made him responsible for him to return.

Retreating Germans Wreck Key Areas of Italian Cities Demolition Is Systematic

The following is a portion of a speech made by Adlai E. Stevenson, special assistant to the Secretary of the Navy, before the Decalogue Society of Lawyers in Chicago recently. Mr. Stevenson, as an air witness, describes war's havoc in Italy.

We left Palermo for Messina in on a Navy command car with two armed bluejackets blanket rolls, cans of gasoline and boxes of K-rations. A captain in the Navy saw us off in the early morning. He noticed that the leather was neatly slashed out of the whole front seat and asked one of the sailors, a little briskly, how that had happened, explaining what we already knew, that there was hardly an Army car left in Sicily that was intact, but that such things never happened to Navy cars.

The sailor, quaking with apprehension, replied: "Captain, I can't explain it. I haven't been off this seat for the two months the car has been here." Thereupon the sailor quickly-thing disappear while you sit on them!

We drove along the rugged north coast across little valleys yellow with ripe lemons groves and green with artichokes, past castle crowned mountain tops, through numerous towns suffering from various degrees of damage.

The coast is scalloped with countless rivers coming down from the mountains and everywhere one or more spans of the old roman bridges had been blown out by the retreating Germans. The same was true of the steel bridges along the adjoining railway line. We had to ford all the rivers, creeping down the sides of the steep gorges and across wooden bridges improvised by the sappers.

The roadside was strewn in places with burned out German, American, British and Italian trucks, tanks, mobile guns and shells, and at every strategic spot concrete pill boxes frowned on us from the cliffs and hills. We caught occasional glimpses of landing boats and amphibious vehicles now smashed up on the little beaches by the river mouths where last summer our forces fought their way ashore in that series of amphibious flanking attacks that helped so much to roll the Germans back to the Straits of Messina.

The condition of the road was much better than on some heavily travelled roads in the vicinity of Palermo, but the going was slow because of the mountains and the fords and we didn't reach Messina until dark. Mines we found were damaged than Palermo, but, of course, there has been less time to clean it up. The civilian supply an hour to look through the ruins.

situation we found presented roughly the same picture as Palermo—shortage of food, disorganized transport and demoralized local administration.

Standing on the ruined quays in Messina harbor waiting our turn to cross the straits to the mainland on an American LST (landing craft), watched a hundred Italian soldiers come ashore, unarmed and in their native Sicily. They were the ragged est, weariest, most wretched white men I've seen. Some couldn't walk and had to be supported by others; some were very sick men.

As they stumbled down the ramp, some fell prostrate and unashamedly kissed the ground of Sicily, some cried, and few spoke. An officer formed them up and they straggled off across the square just beneath a standing wall of a once fine warehouse. They didn't look up, but I did and there in great stone letters on the wall was engraved these words: "With a dagger in your breast, a bomb in your hand and a sovereign disdain for danger in your heart—Il Duce." It was an incongruous spectacle—Caesar's hungry peasant legions staggering home silhouetted against the ruins of old Caesar's vanished dreams.

We crossed the straits to Reggio Calabria and motored for several days north through mountainous, beautiful and impoverished southern Italy, passing olive and vineyards climb the steep hillsides, terraced gardens, waiting for a place to sleep in the dirty villages and talking the way with the military government officers and Italians about agriculture, industry, food, transportation, and the inevitable consequences of war, invasion and political upheaval.

In one place where kindly nuns put us up for the night in a dormitory there had been no legal bread for eight or ten days and the nuns found for K rations which we indeed. We gave them a can of tomatoes, a delicacy which they had never tasted before. I was so sick of K rations by that time I would have given them the lot, but wiser counsel prevailed so we had something to eat for the rest of the journey.

We arrived at Paestium in the early afternoon and there we found the mighty Greek ruins still festooned with signal corps wires, running along the north to destroyed Battipaglia and Salerno many miles without those dramatic, critical, bloody days on the beaches and along the Sele River, where the German counter-attack gave us some bad hours.

We passed through Pompeii on the way into Naples and took off the hood of the jeep and scanned the skies for a while, but we saw no planes. Then we found the mighty Greek ruins still festooned with signal corps wires, running along the north to destroyed Battipaglia and Salerno many miles without those dramatic, critical, bloody days on the beaches and along the Sele River, where the German counter-attack gave us some bad hours.

Jet Plane Was Born of Lucky Chance

(By Fred H. Goodchild, in the Vancouver Province)

One day in 1937 an engine roared into life with a high-pitched scream in a dilapidated barn-like foundry in a tiny village in a desolate part of the English Midlands.

The handful of villagers who heard it smiled among themselves and said nothing. They had kept a trust. The jet-propulsion engine had been born and the secret had been preserved.

From that day developments progressed only five years until now Britain's new propellerless jet plane has passed its severest tests, and production and use in the war can be foreseen.

The invention can be credited in the first place to a fortuitous circumstance, a common occurrence in everyday life; its history has been marked by a chapter of accidents, and its successful development depended a great deal on the loyal silence of quite a number of people.

The inception of the story goes back nearly 30 years, to 1936 when two Royal Air Force cadets studying at Cranwell decided to share a room in order to cut expenses. One of them developed gastric trouble and the other, for that reason—had to close his R.A.F. career, if another young pilot had not nearly lost his life in a mid-air collision. If a bankers' firm had not had a scientist in their committee room, if the villagers had gossiped, then the inventors' dream of a jet-propelled plane would not have come true.

Frank Whittle, now a group captain, was only 19 when he had his idea for jet-propelled planes that would fly at incredible speeds in the stratosphere and deliver English newspapers to the United States on the same day of publication. When he shared a room with his fellow cadet, R. D. Williams, he revealed his idea. Soon after Williams had to leave the service because of illness and about the same time another young flier, F. C. B. Tinling crashed and was also invalided out.

Whittle toyed with his idea for a time and then shelved it. The drawings he made at that time were long forgotten, the idea just about given up.

In 1936 Williams and Tinling were together again, looking round for a new career, and the memory of Whittle's idea and decided to try to commercialize it. They went to Cambridge to see their ex-fellow cadet. The drawings of the engine were found hidden away in a desk and it was agreed to try to market the plan.

They thanked the proposition round the city without success until they approached a firm of bankers who had a scientist on their staff, Lazan Wyatt. He recognized the chances of success, the bank put up the capital and a company was formed with Sir Maurice Bonham-Carter joining Williams, Tinling and Whytle.

The Air Council was skeptical but interested and Whittle, Williams and Ieni Whittle to the company.

He set to work in a small abandoned foundry in the Midlands and in 1937 the engine had been successfully built.

Besides the discreet villagers who did not talk about the mystery in their midst, there was another little band of loyal and silent workers—the shareholders of the company.

Finally in 1940 the Air Ministry ordered a plane fitted with Whittle's engine and in 1941 the plane was flown for the first time. After the flight Tinling remarked: "When I saw Gerry Sayers [Sayers is about I was reminded of the last Schneider Trophy race at Calshot"—flimer then production plans have gone ahead by leaps and bounds.

WANT CHATTY LETTERS

Ottawa, March 27 (CP)—Men on Canadian warships, particularly the fighting fronts need "colorful, chatty letters about local doings," Foster Barclay, recently returning from duty overseas as a Canadian Press war correspondent, said in addressing Ottawa Women's Canadian Club Saturday.

American Indians Practised Conservation of Natural Resources

That the American Indians haveaion for themselves and their descendants, conservation on economic conditions, and they stuck to their resources. They knew in some detail the supply of each resource was: Deer, moose, beaver, fur-bearers, edible birds, fish, roots, trees, wild grasses. They knew the districts where each was to be found when wanted and, roughly, in what quantities."

It is to be hoped that these data are which the same as those sought today by economic conservation planning to preserve the balance of nature so as to avoid depletion of game resources and to assure conservation and conservation of water supply.

Religious considerations were important in the Indians' dealings with both plant and animal life. They considered that "through the plant and animal life, animal and plant life the will of the supreme being, the Great Spirit was carried out. Hunting practice permitted no wasteful or arbitrary destruction of life in any form. In taking animals for food or for skins, the survivors, as well as the resources, were constantly considered, and the life thus taken was atoned for by prayers of gratitude and apologies in sympathetic phrases for their death. They were thanked for the sacrifices they made to man and death-rites were performed for them with rituals of thanksgiving. Even plants when gathered for food or medicine were treated with great reverence and pulled up with discretion through consideration of their own welfare, not only of man's."

Increased Beer Demand Shown in Only 2 Provinces

(By The Canadian Press)

Removal of Federal restrictions on sale of beer to the provinces, dated with banner headlines when announced a fortnight ago by Prime Minister Mackenzie King, resulted in an increased beer price for consumers in only two provinces — Manitoba and Saskatchewan—a coast-to-coast survey by The Canadian Press showed today.

There has been no sign that the action will be boosted in other areas, except in Alberta.

Only in Manitoba is beer available in quantity to meet the full demand, reports from other cities indicated.

In Manitoba the Provincial Liquor Commission virtually took the lid off rationing when the Federal action was announced. From 24 pints a month the ration jumped to a case a month.

The individual ration has been boosted from two to three bottles a day in Saskatchewan and this is expected to go up to six bottles daily April 1.

The improved beer supply situation in the western provinces is in line with forecasts by brewing industry spokesmen immediately after Mr. King announced that the government had decided to abolish the order under which beer available in the provinces for sale within their boundries was limited to 90 per cent of the amount for the year ended March 31, 1943.

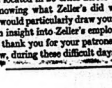
Brewery officials have said that shortages of malt, hops, other supplies and manpower make it impossible to make any large increase in the amount of bottled beer although draft beer supplies are plentiful.

In Ontario there has been no change in the individual ration of 12 quarts a month. But in Toronto and Ottawa it was reported queues were reduced at beer stores which stayed open longer than usual. In Ottawa, however, brewers' retail stores qualified the word that beer lines had almost disappeared with the statement several factors might have contributed—"including the fact it is getting towards the month-end and most of the customers have probably used up their ration for the month."

Some facts of interest to the WOMEN OF CANADA!

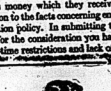
During the year just ended, Zeller's sold $10,271,400 worth of merchandise to their customers in the 27 stores located in 26 cities across Canada. We feel sure, therefore, that you will be interested in knowing what Zeller's did with this money which they received from their customers. We would particularly draw your attention to the facts concerning employees. They will give you an insight into Zeller's employee-relation policy. In submitting this statement, Zeller's wish to thank you for your patronage and for the consideration you have shown, and continue to show, during these difficult days of war-time restrictions and lack of merchandise.

$7,139,317 FOR MERCHANDISE



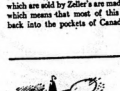
Out of the $10,271,400 which we received from our customers, $7,139,317 (or 69.5%) was used to buy merchandise to sell in our stores. It is worthy of mention that 90% of the goods which are sold by Zeller's are made in Canada, which means that most of this money goes back into the pockets of Canadian workers.

$1,314,739 STAFF WAGES



Last year, wages to our hundreds of employees amounted to $1,314,739. This was exclusive of bonuses, details of which are given below. We pay clothes to the members of our staff. all of whom have cheerfully accepted the extra burdens that wartime regulations have added and the work resulting from the loss of the experience and training of so many of their former associates now on active service with the armed forces.

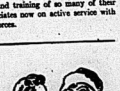
$535,000 GOVERNMENT TAXES



For the year just ended, Zeller's paid out the large amount in taxes to the Government, exclusive of the $85,000 which will be refunded after the war. This money is entirely used to help win the war. It is interesting to note that, while Zeller's business has increased slightly more than 4 times during the past ten years, taxes have increased 765 times during the same period.

$77,000 EMPLOYEES' BONUSES

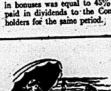
Under the Company's established policy, all employees, apart from executives and others holding written wage agreements, participate in a Christmas Bonus and a Profit-Sharing plan. Under this plan, over $77,000 was paid out last year. Some employees received as much as $174 in combined bonuses. Former male employees now on active service received a bonus of $95. In addition, $77,000 was paid out in bonuses was equal to 45% of the money paid in dividends to the Company's shareholders for the same period.



$716,000 RENT, LIGHT, ETC.

The above figure represents almost 7% of the money we received from our customers last year. It was used to pay for the occupational costs of operating our 27 stores, including rents, light, heat, water, property taxes, depreciation and insurance. This expense is an important item in maintaining the smart, comfortable, well-lighted stores that make shopping at Zeller's a pleasure.

$21,000 EMPLOYEES' VACATIONS



All employees with six months' service or more, are entitled to Summer vacations with pay, and all employees with two years service or more are entitled, in addition, to Winter vacations with pay. In both cases the length of the vacation is determined by the length of service, with a maximum vacation period of two weeks in each season. Last year, Zeller's paid out $21,000 to its employees for their vacation periods.

Idle Rooms and Excessive Rentals

Is there a person in Belleville who hasn't heard of the housing shortage? If there is it is because he, or she has not been forced to look for living accommodation for himself or herself. There is a great deal of smuggsness in existence here in the city in this regard, with far too many carrying the belief that a man's home is his castle, too. Pride of home, pride in its beauty, its conveniences and up-to-the minute equipment, is quite all right, but when it is carried to the point where fellow countrymen are made to suffer and suffer extensively, it is being exploited.

Every effort has been made by several organizations in the city in the past and at the present to endeavor to bring influence home to Belleville to realize that the housing situation is as much their problem as the care of crippled children, and aged people is their problem, but the results are rather discouraging. Belleville homes remain a closed corporation. It is no credit to a city in a time like this to read in the newspaper a line such as has appeared several times in the classified advertising page of The Ontario Intelligencer: "$10 Reward for suitable apartment in city by Air Force officer."

The housing situation in Belleville is particularly acute and something definite will have to be done if the pressure is to be relieved, and the pressure must be relieved. It is patriotic to rent rooms at this time. With restricted travel, very few people are going to have visitors from out of town and rooms, once reserved for such guests, are being left idle when they should be made available to people who have left their own homes to come to this district to work in a war industry, or have joined the service and are moved to this locality for training or to do a duty. These people aren't in Belleville because they want to be, but they are in Belleville which is the important fact, and as long as they are here doing the work they are doing the work others would have to do if they didn't, it is up to Belleville, through the householders, to make their stay as comfortable as possible.

Canada has never known the trials and tribulations of enforced billeting as the householders of England have been compelled to undergo. Canada is too far from the front lines, too far from enemy air attacks, beyond danger of invasion, and removed from any danger of a heavy concentration of troops to expect overcrowding to the degree where compulsory action must be taken by the Government. The only compulsion Canada knows or is likely to ever know, is one of patriotism and humanitarianism. Belleville is part of Canada, it is as much an important part of Canada as any other town, city or village is a part of a great and united nation, but Belleville has a tendency, as have other municipalities, to withdraw from the actualities of war-time conditions, not exactly casting aside the burdens and duties of war, but refusing to ignore them. Belleville cannot ignore them any more than Winnipeg, Toronto, Vancouver of Montreal. These conditions exist and they should be relieved if it is at all possible.

Disturbing reports have been heard about conditions in premises where numbers of people live, reports of excessive rentals being charged for inferior accommodations, restrictions enforced upon tenants that are not in line with individualism but adhered to because the tenants realize that to have a room, no matter what the conditions, is better than not having a room. When a landlord receives his rent from a tenant he is selling that tenant a certain commodity; it is an intangible, but never-the-less a commodity. For that amount he has sold part of his home on a temporary agreement which will last until either, or both parties are dissatisfied or conditions are eased to the degree where the tenant may return to where he came from.

If there was just a little more Christian spirit displayed between tenant and landlord, and landlord and tenant, there might be many surprises, there might be many life-lasting friendships established which, after the tenant has been permitted to return to his own dwelling, create an inter-city spirit which would benefit both communities and the individuals. If a little more effort was made to know the people who rent your rooms, and landlords were to discover that these tenants are human beings too, more homes would be opened and there would be no necessity to discuss these matters in public.

There is every reason why the city should act on the suggestion that rooming houses be licenced, but the Belleville civic authorities are reluctant to resort to such measures until there is no alternative. Reliable information is available which discloses that there are houses in the city where rents are charged far beyond reason. Profiteering cannot be legislated. It is black-market dealing to over-charge for something that is increased in value only through war-time scarcity, and excessive rentals is as much black-marketeering as selling gasoline and groceries without coupons, or hoarding until the article has become almost out of supply. Don't do it . . . be Canadians all the way, or don't cheer when it's over . . . you won't have the right.

Mata Hari Outmoded

(Ottawa Citizen)

From Sweden comes word that the Nazis are offering $57.90 a week female spies in Denmark, plus only $28.95 for room. This is a rude jolt to our treasured fancy of European espionage, where jeweled Mata Haris lure men and countries to their doom, leading death for failures but richly rewarded for success. It seems, in fact, a direct slap at Hitler's vaunted Nordic womanhood.

On second thought, however, it is even more of a tribute to the spirit of the British underground. It is likely that the Nazis realize that it takes more than a slinky black dress, ropes of pearls, veiled glances and insinuating wiles to entice the Danish patriot from his duty. What the job probably needs is strength, endurance and a taste for cold-bloodedness. And the Nazis seem to be paying accordingly.

Learn From British

(Detroit Free Press)

With all its faults, the English nobility has never lacked guts in serving its country on the battlefield or in the political arena. We might have better government in this country, too, if fewer scions of our "best families" were afraid of soiling their lily-white hands in "dirty politics."

Practise With British 'Subs'

In training, British destroyers drill by hunting British submarines, and drop hand grenades overboard to represent depth bombs. The "enemy" submarines indicate hits by sending up smoke-floats. Though the "U-boat has been bested, eternal vigilance is necessary.

JUST FOLKS

NEW CHARM

From numberless sources all loveliness springs,
From snow-covered mountains to butterfly wings;
From laughter and music and blossom and bee
Comes charm for us mortals to hear and to see.
And now here's new splendor of which I must tell:
Ellen Elizabeth can't pronounce "I".

Her "I's" are all "y's" at the start of a word,
Which makes it the loveliest speech ever heard.
Her ladies are "yadies." The little word, ilk,
In her rapid-fire utterance comes out as "ylk."
And so sweetly it sounds that I say it's as well
Ellen Elizabeth can't pronounce "I".

She writes me a "yetter" and over my book,
As I settle to read it, she begs for a "yook."
"I yove you!" she tells me. Has Heaven above
A richer delight than such innocent love?
Like magic, this holds us all fast in its spell:
Ellen Elizabeth can't pronounce "I".

About a quarter to this afternoon the vast body of ice held at the Grand Trunk Railway bridge began to move and it certainly was a great sight. When the ice reached the upper bridge it began to pile up against the piers and even reached the superstructure. The force was sufficient to move the bridge two and a half to three feet along the top of the piers. One pier was shifted from its base and some damage was done to the second pier. Many sightseers who were on the bridge at the time made a hasty retreat. The rolling on the south side of the bridge was slightly damaged.

40 YEARS AGO

MARCH 27, 1904

The continued thaw of the past few days assisted by the heavy rain of last night caused the ice in the river to break up. At an early hour this morning the ice between the lower bridge and Cooper's Dam moved down, but owing to the harbor being solid stopped a short distance below the bridge. A large body of ice broke up between the upper bridge and Lader's Mill and this moved to the vicinity of the upper bridge before daylight several feet. It was expected that this ice would remain there, but shortly after nine o'clock a jam came from further up the river and this started the immense body of ice on towards the bay. It was expected that there would be a disastrous flood, but the volume of water from the ice cut into the harbor for a considerable distance. On the way down the ice did some damage to buildings on the river banks. The walks and railings for some distance along Mill Street were carried away. The most serious damage done was to the breakwater of the water main which crosses the river at the lower bridge. The break was immediately discovered and it was fortunate for the city that supplementary pipes were over the top of the bridge. Many cellars on the east side of Front Street are flooded and also hotel stables and yards. Bridge Street, Church Street is covered with water and the lower floors of some of the houses is like Venice. On Coleman Street the water is over the sidewalk in many places. The footbridge gangway is impassable.

My Twenty Months In a T. B. Sanatorium

(By F. D. G. in Windsor Star)

If in the rescuing of souls, mercy of my patients, and restoration, it brings one small shred of hope to anyone—then I feel that I am well repaid.

I broke down at 46. Up to then I was a strong man, active throughout my early years, a lover of the possibilities of home and business. My business was dry goods, I was familiar with any man—newspaper advertising. Then came the crisis. It was in the spring of 1941. Soon I first realized that something was wrong. I began to feel tired after the least amount of exertion. This feeling continued, and even after a rest, I became an effort on my part to compel myself to take an active an interest in the daily routine as I had done in the past—it wasn't in me—and that in itself was worrying. I decided to see a doctor. I had had a cold for some months, but that condition I had dealt with by the regular everyday remedies. On interviewing him, an examination was made and upon, I returned home to await the result of the X-ray. This was in the July of 1941. I was lying in bed resting when the phone rang. It was the doctor. He informed me I had tuberculosis. To me, that was the finishing touch. I thought it was something abhorrent — something that literally should not be spoken over the phone. It was something that in my wildest imagination I could never have connected with myself. Tuberculosis? It just couldn't happen to me. I was as fit as a spar as the North Pole from the South.

The doctor came and told me that I must go to a sanatorium. I had heard many stories about sanatoria and nothing I had heard was to their advantage. I decided that a sanatorium always was to me as dreadful as the word tuberculosis. To me a sanatorium was a place where consumptives were secluded from their fellow man.

Finally I broke.

Can you imagine my feeling when confronted with a statement like that? Can you blame me for it? I was told that in order to get well I had to go away.

That night, July 23, 1941, I went to Dr. Bonifas' office accompanied by Mrs. Mac. Needless to say, I was scared to the point of being a nervous wreck. I felt like a wreck—a wreck—a 115-pound wreck.

I was met at the entrance by a kindly nurse, whose approach and pleasant manner did something right away to ease my fears. This nurse escorted me to my room, a pleasant looking room and it was situated on the door—Room 315. It was as if I had been there before, I felt so much at home.

I went to bed. I was still coughing and continued to do so during the night. Once the nurse was back with a small glass in her hand. She gave me something and I did like wise. It acted like magic. It was the first night in over two years in months. I went to sleep.

In the morning I awakened to my new surroundings. There was another bed in Room 315 and in it was a gentleman who was to be my roommate. He was a pleasant, cheerful and very friendly, I soon found out, and I was glad to take stock of the room I was in. It was a large looking room with windows on two sides overlooking the beautiful well-kept lawn, with its trees, shrubbery, flower beds and shrubs. Beyond the vista there was a wonderful view of the valley stretching for acres and acres with neatly planted rows of vegetables and I don't know what else. A mountain grows all its own produce. Complete independence.

All this to me was a complete denial of all the horrible things I had pictured and imagined a sanitorium would be. With this fear removed, I had only to be concerned with what was going to happen to me and my tuberculosis.

Breakfast was tastefully served and I enjoyed it. A weighing scale was wheeled into my room by a nurse who very carefully asked further brightness to that room. Her friendly smile and cheerful greeting dissipated my remaining fears. She weighed me and I found I had gained 4 lbs. as the scale register only 115 pounds—a 115 pound wreck left town. It was the weight of 140 pounds—a 140 pounds of energy plus. My history was taken and recorded. Then I was "fluoroscoped," sputum and many other tests were taken. Then I was given Instructions were to rest. Not to worry, but to just rest.

Two weeks passed, naturally I was still very much worried about my condition and what was going to happen to me.

With excellent meals, regularly served, always tasteful, and numerous visits from the doctors, kindly Sisters and nurses, together with the fresh air, I began to feel that I was going to get better.

I had gained weight.

I was then taken to the consulting office, informed that I had some of my trouble and advised the method of treatment I was to be given. Pneumothorax.

Room 315

I was returned to my room, the room 315, which by now I had accepted as my permanent residence. I was told that I could also make a resolution that I was going to adhere strictly to any order or suggestion made by the doctor for the carrying out of treatment. I promised and from that minute on (after my first two weeks) I decided that I was in the sanatorium would be my life and ways. And the sanatorium was my home.

Five more weeks passed, again the scales were wheeled in. The same pleasant and cheerful nurse who had weighed me first, weighed the scales after seven weeks of rest at 127½ pounds, a gain of 12½ pounds.

This was in itself a most encouraging fact and I felt more confident towards the future. A challenge to carry on. I was now in the sanatorium and win out.

Six months passed. During that time I had never left my room. My bed—my worries had vanished, I had become accustomed to them and then the good news—"You may sit up in your chair for 15 minutes each day." Then I was permitted to read—go with words to me—the straw I had grasped at six months previous was now a pillar of strength.

Another four months—my 10 minutes up—was a ritual, it was timed to the very minute. I had still that resolve to do as I was told. I took no chances.

This 15 minutes was increased to 15 minutes a day and I was permitted to walk as far as the window and back. This was timid also. I grew stronger and stronger as days went by, and as days and weeks and the months went by so did my sanatorium life become social. I was ready for discharge.

What this was made possible with the assistance of the doctors, and the nurses and for which I cannot be said in praising their kind and gentle ways, their sympathetic understanding and interest, and above all their abiding kindness.

Nothing Undone

The sanatorium leaves nothing undone to provide for the comfort and pleasure of its patients—their entertainment is provided—radio and musical entertainment. Church services are also arranged for each denomination.

And now, after 20 months of good care, kind treatment and friendly association with people of all walks of life, only my doctor tells me I am fit to take my place again in the outside world. I have to learn to leave my room, I had made many friends—real friends I had learned to regard with deep and growing affection—but I had to leave. Leaving meant saying to the day I had entered—I had seen the wonderful grounds from my window, I had seen summer, fall and winter come and go—but now on leaving it was to be spring. I had actually been outdoors for 20 long months—but it was now to be outdoors for all time. I had learned one important thing about life itself—that even at 46, the sanatorium had taught me much that I had failed to learn in my busy, active life, for there is understanding, sympathy, yes and even love in a sanatorium. That day was March 13, 1943.

There is an epilogue to this story, but unfortunately it is not yet finished to be solved. Rest is now more important than ever—confidence. And as much as one can get during the day and twelve months of the year. Rest and confidence I find myself in my bed every evening around 9 o'clock. I am now in the early daily work which I have been doing and feeling more confidence. I am with my weight at 170 pounds and feeling well I look forward to the future.

Canadian Scene A Century Ago

By J. L. G.

In pioneer times Canadian women treasured grain and rye straw for straw work. Young girls in the old days had to be skilled in the making of hats, baskets and mats for household use. Many artistic, producing handiwork as gay and colourful as the flowers blooming in the tiny clearings.

Before the grain was quite ripe the stalks were cut, the ears tied in bundles and hung in barns of cedar to join the ropes of straw, rather than the needle, and the work went on until all continually. Hats made of straw were bleached by exposing them to the sulphur fumes in covered containers.

Couple Unaware Death Silenced Their Companions

Belleire, O., March 27. (AP)—The knife-hacked bodies of a divorced and remarried couple, victims of a night club castly Sunday by another couple whose home they had silenced their companions, and Prosecutor Frank Michener said the woman's former husband would be charged with first degree murder in the slayings.

Michener identified the victims as Henry Spradling, 38, a coal miner, and Mrs. Teresa Myrio, 35, of Bellaire.

He said Donald Myrio, divorced from the dead woman two years ago, was taken into custody several hours after the killings.

Michener said Myrio signed a statement he stabbed the victims with a pocketknife during an argument after he approached the automobile in which Spradlings and Mrs. Myrio were sitting on the back seat.

Clyde Snyder, driver of the car, said he and Josephine Bigovich went out with Spradling and Mrs. Myrio last night and stopped about two a.m. at a night club in nearby Shadyside. Spradlings and Mrs. Myrio stayed in the car while he and Miss Bigovich entered the clug, Synder related.

Snyder said he and his companion returned to the car in about 15 minutes and found the four in the same ride to Mrs. Myrio's home, he imagined the couple asleep in the back seat.

When the car stopped at the dirt nurser's home, Snyder said he turned on the dome light and discovered both were dead.

Merchant Sailors To Play Great Role

Cardiff, Wales, March 27 (CP)—The United States Ambassador John G. Winant, paying tribute to merchant marine sailors of all the allied nations, declared Saturday they would play a vital part in the forthcoming "greatest water-borne invasion in history."

Theirs will be work necessary "to establish and maintain our bridgeheads and support our advancing columns," he said in a speech at the opening of a Merchant Navy Club, one of three similar affs from American labor for the use of sea workers.

Germans Shoot 32 Italian Hostages in Rome

On the Swiss-Italian Frontier, March 27 (AP)—Thirty-two Italian hostages in Rome and arrested thousands more in reprisal for the murder of 22 Nazi troopers during the celebration of the 25th anniversary of Fascism, March 23, a Swiss telegraphic agency dispatch from the Italian capital said today.

A son of Premier Marshal Pietro Badoglio was among those slain, a Chiasso dispatch to the Swiss newspaper La Suisse declared. Other border reports said Theon De Revel, a former Italian Finance minister, and Marshal Pietro Caviglia, two revered Senators were among those seized by the Nazis and Fascists.

The Nazis reportedly were slain as they marched down Via Rasella, a German communique, it was said blamed "Communists" for the attack and announced the Nazis were determined to end such actions by "Bolshevist terror" for every German killed.

The Nazi-controlled Rome radio said 100 Partisans were killed in a battle with Blackshirts on the first floor of Palazzo Barberini, where the patriots were attempting to carry the fight to Turin.

Other reports said a Fiorence militia-man was killed and several more youths to death for failing to report for call to the army and that a similar tribunal at Forli had imposed the death penalty on five persons "deserting Italy." There were reports of widespread clashes throughout Northern Italy.

A Berne dispatch to the Stockholm newspaper Stockholms Tidning said the Vatican had "energetically protested" to the German occupation authorities in Rome against the execution of 32 hostages.

The dispatch, reported to the United States Office of War Information, said the Vatican had warned that the shooting of hostages "complicates enormously the occupation forces' difficulties." The dispatch added that it was believed the protest was without influence.

Two of Four Nazi Fugitive Prisoners Are Recaptured

North Bay, Ont., March 27 (CP)—Two of four German prisoners escaped over the weekend from a prisoner-of-war camp at Monteith, 75 miles north of here, it was announced today. Two were recaptured and two are still at large.

The two RCMP police are still searching are Eric Weisser, 31, and Otto Huber, 42. They were not reported missing until after the line-up at the camp had been held.

The other two, whose escape was discovered yesterday, were arrested at Mathews, by Provincial Constable Tappenden, who found them on a train. They have been taken back to the camp.

TRANSPORTATION SWAMPED

London, March 27 (CP)—London's outdated transportation facilities were swamped yesterday when a freight crowd which has jammed the capital since the Coronation in 1937 gathered for the opening of Salute-the-Soldier Week. Thousands of out-of-towners were stranded as bus and train services proved inadequate and many spent the night trying to sleep on the floors of subway stations. Others were variously fainted after standing for hours in bus and subway queues.

The War Today

Luftwaffe Believed Conserving Planes for Coming Allied Invasion

By DeWITT MACKENZIE
Associated Press War Analyst

One of the most remarkable and enigmatical lulls in the conflict is the complete absence of any defense by German warplanes against the widespread assaults on western Europe by 1,700 British and American planes. Apparently we have attacked Nazi airdromes within sight of Paris without bringing a single Hitlerite fighter off the ground.

The answer is that the Germans are keeping all of the utmost importance to us; and one which shouldn't be jumped at. We should be most unwise, it seems to me, to rush to the conclusion Hitler no longer is capable of flinging a defensive air force into the air. We shall hear plenty from the Luftwaffe before the war is over. The true solution of our amazing lull is this:

1. The Luftwaffe has been vastly weakened by the Russian battle in the air and through Allied bombing. There has been such wholesale destruction of Nazi warplane factories undoing that Hitler no longer can replace the destroyed airplanes.

2. The terrific Red onslaught on the eastern front is calling for every warplane the Fuhrer can spare which probably explains why in preserving what planes he has in western Europe he is not throwing the book at the coming Allied invasion. He has been depending more and more recently on anti-aircraft fire to ward off the Allied attacks. Also he may be reorganizing sides and units.

It requires no imagination to understand the fine appeal for defensive air power as they face before the onrushing Red armies. The arrival of the Russians at the Prut River on the frontier of Rumania — after their epic drive of more than 800 miles from Stalingrad, and their continuing thrust into Poland, not only set the triumphal guns of Moscow booming but brought from Prime Minister Churchill the observation that the Russian feat "constitutes the greatest cause of Hitler's downfall."

First Session of Legislature May Be Quietest on Record

Less Fireworks Than Ever Before in Its Long History

Toronto, March 27. (CP) — The first session of Ontario's 21st Legislature has gone contrary to all prediction in producing perhaps less "fireworks" than ever before in its history.

The C.C.F. opposition of 34 has only two less members than Premier Drew's 38-man Progressive Conservative government, with 15 Liberals holding the balance of power in the 90-seat House. But with the session nearing its close only one division has occurred — a recorded vote called by Premier Drew on the Throne Speech on which the opposition offered no amendment.

Many were the pre-session predictions of a "rough sitting" when no party emerged from the provincial election of last August with a clear majority. Division bells, well-oiled in anticipation of endless debate, are growing dusty, unused in the legislature's martial-law hallways.

There have been challenges from E. B. Jolliffe, leader of the C.C.F. counter-challenges have come from Premier Drew, and once or twice Liberal Leader Nixon, former premier, has risen to defend actions of the Drew administration.

Once the Premier called for a House apology from the young Opposition Leader over charges he made in connection with expropriation of farm property at DeCew Falls for hydro development. Mr. Colliffe replied that he had given the facts, would withdraw nothing but called on the Premier for an apology for his counter-charges.

Harmony Reigns.

But like most other "pyrotinins" the issues in this session, the incident died with that day's sitting. Next day when members reassembled, a spirit of harmony reigned and business progressed at a fast pace.

The C.C.F. attitude, as outlined by Mr. Jolliffe in his budget debate speech, was that his party would support the government's "progressive" legislation "as far as it goes".

Liberal Leader Nixon said his party would support all legislation that was for the good of the province. Another Liberal speaker, R. G. MacBeth (Wellington North) told Premier Drew flatly that by introduction of legislation the House could or could not support, he held in his hand the key to an early election.

Legislation that could not be supported might cause defeat of the government on a House vote and a subsequent election the people did not want at this time. That, Mr. MacBeth said, would be the Premier's responsibility.

A. A. Wilmot, one of two Labor-Progressive members, criticized those who would set up "a political linen of the past 25 years" as the "standard of excellence" of the government's attitude toward opposition proposals.

Former Liberal Premier Mitchell Hepburn, of Elgin, now sitting as the legislature's lone Independent Liberal, has spoken not once. So far there has been no official mention in the House of what he will or will not support.

The session is expected to progress before Easter, probably April 6. And the pre-session predictors have done an about-face. They say now it appears that first session of Ontario's 21st Legislature, despite its lone opposition, may go down as one of the quietest on record.

Fire in Store, Bakery Causes Food Shortage

Nordegg, Alta., March 27 —(CP) —Some 2,000 people, miners and their families, were temporarily left short of bread and other food supplies by a fire which destroyed the Big Horn Trading Co. store and Bastill Bakery here Saturday night. Snow-blocked roads prevented supplies coming here by truck. Arrangements were made for a horse-cay to be loaded with food at Red Deer to be rushed here today.

Plans for Plebiscite In Southern Italy Have Been Suspended

Naples, March 27.—(AP)—Plans for a plebiscite in Southern Italy on the issue of King Victor Emmanuel's abdication and replacement of Premier Badoglio's government have been suspended by Allied military political parties as opposed to the present regime in control of funds and personnel with which to print and circulate petitions calling for the King's abdication and formation of a "truly Democratic" government, it was learned by party leaders as the reason for abandonment of the project.

A deeper significance, however, seen in the decision in Allied quarters, where the feeling was expressed that opposition to the Badoglio government had been dampened by Soviet Russia's recent action in according it diplomatic recognition.

The feeling persisted in spite of continued avowals of Italian Communist opposition to both the King and Badoglio.

Spring Arrives On Russian Front

Moscow, March 27.—(AP)— High winds and snowstorms were reported sweeping large sections of the Russian front today, but there was no intimation as to whether the weather had put the armies at a stalemate, where the Red Army stood on the Prut river border of Rumania.

The last word on the weather in Bessarabia was given in a dispatch yesterday saying that Spring had arrived and fruit trees were blooming.

Meanwhile, a frontline dispatch to the newspaper Pravda said the real beginning of Marshal Ivan S. Konev's offensive, which swept up to the Rumanian frontier, was the drive from the Dniper bend, where 10 Nazi divisions were trapped in a circle of death.

"The dreadful ghost of Korsun took its place alongside the Stalingrad graveyard," said the dispatch. "These ghosts infest the Germans with physical animal fear, crippling morale for the terror of encirclement."

16 ON BUS SLIGHTLY INJURED

Windsor, Ont., March 27—(CP) — Fourteen persons aboard a Sandwich, Windsor and Amherstburg bus were injured, none seriously, when the bus was in collision with a sightseeing car at a street intersection here early today. After the collision, the bus collided with another car and hit a service station. Seven passengers and the bus driver were taken to hospital, but only three of the passengers were required to remain.

Hailstones Large As Baseballs Strike Memphis

Memphis, Tenn., March 27 (AP) A groggy, panicky Memphis began recovering today from the effects of a hail bombardment which broke hundreds of windows, caused extensive property damage and crop damage and sent at least eight persons to hospital with injuries.

The fresh hailstorm, "sounding like a freight train," struck the city early Sunday. Some hailstones as large as baseballs thrashing through windows, roofs and automobile windshields. Weather Bureau officials said many of the stones measured seven inches to inches in circumference.

A six-year-old boy was not seriously injured, suffering a concussion when hit on the head by one of the large pellets. One man received a fractured ankle. Others suffered cuts and bruises.

Dies, Winchell Swap Acid Words

Washington, March 27 —(AP)— Speaking from separate booths in the same broadcasting studio, Chairman Martin Dies of the House of Representatives committee investigating un-American activities and Walter Winchell, columnist and commentator, swapped acid words on the air last night in the latest round of their feud.

Then—without benefit of script or microphones—they ran into each other in the studio and exchanged as their air building, and exchanged classic cracks.

Facing the Texas Democrat who has had his committee subpoena the transcripts of all the Winchell broadcasts of the last two years, Winchell asked why he had not been personally called before the Dies Committee.

"All in good time," Dies replied.

"Let's," lifted Winchell, "get together and talk this over like men about each other."

"I'd rather go some to get even," dies snapped as he shoulder-ed his way out through a door.

In their broadcasts, Winchell—a frequent critic of Dies Committee functionaries—referred to what he described as "a newspaperman's personal declaration of independence" and Dies renewed his charge that the commentator had recently "lined up others in a campaign to "smear" Congress. The Texan used the expression "green Hind."

Furniture Trade Conducts Survey

Toronto, March 27—(CP)—The furniture industry, believing that one of the difficulties which can most readily reconvert to civilian production, is conducting a nation-wide survey to assess the volume of workers it can employ in the immediate post-war period, it was announced today by the Canadian Committee on Home Furnishings.

The committee recently formed in Toronto, which includes its members about 350 manufacturers and retailers of furniture and allied products such as bedding.

Forecasting the building of several hundred thousand new homes after the war and a large number from householders who have not renewed home furnishings in that time, a spokesman for the committee said there was a prospective Canadian market for about $100,000,000 of its products annually.

This, he added, would entail a sharp increase in the number of men employed in the factories and retail outlets. The still incomplete survey shows, the committee said, that the industry is in better position than most to engage in civilian output and that its products will probably be available to the public earlier than products of industries which require a big retooling job.

London, Ont., March 27—(CP)— Thieves attempting to loot the Royal Bank branch at Dutton in Elgin County last night wrested a .38 calibre revolver from a village constable, Lloyd Good and tied him up in the bank, police here were informed today. No other details were available immediately.

Police were investigating the possibility the car was used in the attempted robbery.

SWIFT'S WEEKLY FOOD HINTS

Martha Logan, Swift's famed home economist, whose weekly, wartime cooking column is a regular feature of this page. Look for, these valuable hints each Monday

by Martha Logan

Cheese is Tops!

High in nutritional values . . . delicious and easy to digest . . . Swift's Brookfield cheese is a must on the kitchen shelf.

All the way from a tasty sauce, which gives a vegetable plate an extra lift, to a main meal dish such as a savoury Welsh Rarebit, cheese is a wonderful standby these harried days.

Which is probably why more and more housewives make it a practice to keep a loaf of delicious processed cheese, such as Swift's Brookfield, always on hand. It's a wonderful snack food, sliced on bread, toast or crackers. And, because it melts so easily and completely, it's ideal for cheese sauces and rarebits.

In fact, I'd say it really is an essential in the wartime kitchen.

Martha Logan

QUICK CHEESE SAUCE

8-ounce pkg. Swift's Brookfield Cheese
¼ cup milk
2 tsps. tomato ketchup
2 tsps. lemon juice

Cut cheese into small pieces and place in a small double boiler; add milk. Place over very hot (not boiling) water and stir until cheese is melted and smoothly blended with the milk. Remove from heat immediately and add ketchup and lemon juice. Pour sauce over vegetable, spaghetti or toast (for a quick supper), if desired, slip under the broiler until sauce is golden brown.

F. L. Coffield Names Principles Post-War Era

The regular monthly meeting of the Young People's Union, Bridge Street United Church was held recently in the Sunday School room. Devotional service was enjoyed by all, prior to the opening of the business. The president, Harold Mott, in the chair, business was discussed.

The spirit of the Lenten season was briefly but impressively brought to mind by a short meditation led by Taylor Franklin, accompanied by the reading of appropriate hymns. Mr. James Rankin accompanied the latter. Also discussed, a rendered a group of solos. Rev. Dr. Gundy was called upon to introduce the guest speaker of the evening, Flight Lieut. F. L. Coffield, padre at Trenton R.C.A.F. Station.

In his sincere and friendly manner, indicating that the youth people should express their opinions on the world's affairs, Padre Coffield outlined four principles which incorporated the fundamentals of harmony and fullest development in living. The first principle, individual peace, will be given an opportunity, irrespective of the conference table, by the right to himself in what he is best fitted, and encouraged to give his best contribution to society. Providing each individual with a fair opportunity for consideration, he must participate in fellowship with his fellowmen, which means unity, strength to the nation and inspiration to the individual. Basis of the fellowship must be activity and service. Padre Coffield closed with the combination of the above three principles.

A vote of thanks was given to the guest speaker by Don Williams. Arthur Clare conducted two quiz contests in which everyone readily took part. Refreshments were served and brought this very pleasant event to a close.

Legion Auxiliary Representative Visits Kingston

On Thursday of last week, Mrs. Frank Camkeen, zone representative of the Ladies' Auxiliary of the Canadian Legion, visited Kingston branch, it being the anniversary of their seventeenth birthday. A delicious supper was served, followed by a very interesting address given by Mrs. Camkeen. Mrs. Amy Gulliver, who accompanied Mrs. Camkeen to Kingston, was also asked to say a few words to the women. Three presentations were then made, one to Mrs. Camkeen; one to Mrs. McCullough, the secretary and one to the president, Mrs. Benstead. These were expressions of appreciation for the faithful service given to the auxiliary during the past year by these women. Games and bingo were then enjoyed. Mrs. Camkeen and Mrs. Gulliver visited one of their members, Mrs. Amy Morrison, who is a patient in the Kingston General Hospital and presented her with a bouquet of flowers from the Belleville Branch of the Legion.

MUSICAL PROGRAM AT FRIENDSHIP GROUP

The Friendship Group of Bridge Street United Church met on Sunday evening under the able leadership of Corporal Harold McNish. The meeting opened with a sing-song led by Mr. Melody Loveless. Mr. Norman Meldcon and Mrs. Lovelace formed the group with a violin and piano duet, "Simple Aveu," and as an encore Strauss' beautiful "Blue Danube." Corporal McNish then read a delightful little poem by Edgar A. Guest called "Regret." Mr. Bruce Sills then gave two pieces, "My Calvaria" and "Don't Sweetheart Me," on the bandsaw. This was a new and interesting presentation and was greatly enjoyed. Mrs. Meldcon and Mrs. Lovelace then played the lovely "Artist's Life." "When You and I Were Young, Maggie" and "My Heart Tells Me," by Mr. Sills concluded the musical part of the program. Refreshments were then served and a social time was enjoyed. Each Sunday evening the Friendship Group extends a cordial invitation to all young people, especially those in uniform and those away from home, to attend their meetings at the close of the regular evening service.

TO REMOVE SHINE FROM SKIRTS

Any girl can fix up a shiny nose in a twinkling—getting rid of that annoying gleam on her favorite skirt is another matter. But it can be done and easily, too. Begin by brushing the garment well, then sponge the shiny spots on the right side with a good cleaning fluid. Rub the spots gently, try rubbing gently with a cloth wrung out in warm water and extra-soapy suds. Finish the treatment by steam pressing on the wrong side.

Often the parts of a garment receiving hard wear lose their colour as well as develop a shine. When this happens, sponge with a cloth dampened in water to which you have added a few drops of ammonia or vinegar. Materials such as blue serge which pick up shine badly, can be made like new by a gentle rubbing with fine sandpaper.

DRESS COVERS FROM OLD SHIRTS

Excellent dust covers for evening gowns and other valued dresses can be made from men's old shirts. Start with a clean shirt. Freshly washed in extra-soapy suds. Then, simply cut out sleeves, sew up seams and button shirt over dress.

Small Nations in Post-War World Subject of Mrs. Davidson's Address

The fate of small nations in the post-war world was graphically dealt with by Mrs. John Davidson, Bayview Heights, and Toronto, in addressing the Women's Canadian Club in Bridge Street United Church Sunday School Rooms Friday night. A large interested audience heard an informative and interesting address on a subject that is at present being widely discussed in all parts of the world. Mrs. Davidson was introduced by Mrs. W. J. Bowen, president of the club, who said that Mrs. Davidson has specialized in her address on "Small Nations" and current events, and because of her interest and knowledge of small nations and awareness of plans for the future, it was with great interest that one looked to her story of the small nations in the post-war era.

Read Absorbed

In the Spring of 1942, began Mrs. Davidson, countries commenced to be taken by the Germans and the new masters started to control the world. Today, in the Spring of 1944, that record of withdrawals to the Germans has been reversed by what. But at the same time, only one-fifth of Europe has been recovered, and one new generation of Japan's conquests have been retrieved. Reference to the map of the Allied countries both in the east and in the west, will show something to be said. They must be reminded of the Allies' plans. Seventy-five million Japs have in their control and at the same time, Russia, China and the Germans have 320,000,000 people who are for the most part slave labourers. "We must not only have sympathy for the sad plight and standing of world events at the present," said the speaker, "but we must understand."

By means of a map, Mrs. Davidson, gave an outline of the countries which are under the heel of German tyranny; she pointed out the methods of the Germans and the absorption of much of Europe by Germany.

Nazi Program of Extermination.

Germany has taught the people that the world is divided into efficient and inefficient people and their aim and ambition is to rule the German war machine, which they consider the efficient race, by the life blood of the peoples they have taken. They take the best workers, the strongest and the most intelligent and the absorption of much of Europe by Germany.

Nazi Program of Extermination.

Germany has taught the people that the world is divided into efficient and inefficient people and their aim and ambition is to rule the German war machine, which they consider the efficient race, by the life blood of the peoples they have taken. They take the best workers, the strongest and the most intelligent and the Germans have exterminated, and reduce the peoples to the level of slaves. The people are then congregated in the concentration camps. The Germans are converting everything in terms of gold.

Their one idea is that if Hitler is to be dragged down, he will drag down the whole world with him. Countries are given out to Germans people telling them that Germany is educating the people of the conquered countries, sending them to Germany to learn their treasures with the one idea of rising from the ashes of twenty-five years ago to achieve then what they can not get now.

Fear Victory.

In France today, there are such conditions as starvation all the time as, "France is no more". This said Mrs. Davidson, is the fear of the French people. Consequently, for a great victory, great peace is needed. The mood for victory requires not only a great deal of activity but also lots of feeling, so we must dethrone ourselves from habits which are not for global wars. Mrs. Davidson then gave a brief story of Finland and of her struggle with Russia. She stressed the fact that Finland is supporting 4,000,000 people, that they are good workers, and are trying to increase their land by 10 per cent. Finland is not with the Nazis of old, the Finns consider them as friends. Finland has been and at the present time there are in Canada 3,000 Finns. Many of the Finns now have the desire to drop out of the war, and they impose certain terms on them because of it. Besides, that they are good workers, they still have a terrific censorship but they are not with the Nazis and Germans.

Supposing the Finns do not give up these terms, said Mrs. Davidson, the Russians can not be blamed. Russia is in a global conflict, little countries cannot stay out of it.

Speaking briefly on the country of Turkey, Mrs. Davidson stated that it was through the efforts of the Allies following the last war that Turkey came into being. When the Poles were given a plot and a country, Turkey was bound to see if they could get more. The Turkish people, their country extend from the Black to the Caspian Sea. When the Soviet Union penetrated the Polish forces, pushed Russians back and took the Polish border line, when the Russians struck at the Germans in 1941, the Poles went with the Russians.

In conclusion, Mrs. Davidson stated that "we make clear our principles upon which we will cooperate in the future following the war, and if a spirit of co-ordination is retained for the task of solving the situation, we will not be far from reaching our goal".

GOOD MANNERS

By MRS. CORNELIUS BEECKMAN

An Army Wedding

Dear Mrs. Beeckman:

My only child, a daughter, is to be married in April. I have not decided to advise me about the wedding plans, I am not well and I would certainly appreciate your help.

1. My daughter's fiance will have only one week's furlough and we are trying to arrange to have the wedding take place at the time when he is stationed, so they may have the entire week together. Is also because we are not in a financial position to have a large wedding. Do you think this a good plan?

2. What kind of invitations should we send? Both families have a great many friends, and naturally I realize that most of them could not attend the wedding, I couldn't invite some and not others, and I don't want to hurt anybody. Would it be proper to invite just the nearest relatives, and if so, what do I do about the friends?

3. If a bride does not wear white is it proper for her to have a maid of honor and a bridesmaid? She is a sister and a niece who are about the same age, and both very dear to us. Naturally we can't just choose one and cause hard feelings.

4. Please tell me how to go about planning to have the wedding breakfast at a hotel. Is it very expensive? Who pays for this breakfast?

5. Who buys the bride's bouquet and the flowers for her attendants?

A Very Worried Mother

1. Considering the problems that are in your mind, I am very positive that it is the best possible plan to have the wedding at the point where your daughter's fiance is stationed. It is the best plan if the post is far away and therefore much of his precious time will be consumed in travelling. But I should say it isn't the best plan if you could reach your home in a short time, you and she could be married. You would need the travelling expenses, your daughter could have an informal wedding in her own church, with the minimum of expense, all the relatives and friends could be invited verbally or by telephone, or by notes and it is not necessary to have a reception or any other ceremony in your home.

2. If the wedding is to be at the post, I suggest you invite only the closest relatives, perhaps only the members of the immediate families and, if you wish, you can send announcements to those not invited.

3. Usually at such an informal wedding, there has only been a attendant, but if it isn't possible for her to decide on one, she might have two attendants, to walk together down the aisle before the processional and, in the recessional to walk after her and the bridegroom.

4. If the wedding is to be at the post, you or your daughter should write to the officer and ask him to make the arrangements for the ceremony and also to consult with the hotel as to possible arrangements for the wedding breakfast, get some suggestions for the menu, get the price per person, and all other necessary details. This is the customary procedure, so have no embarrassment about it. But make it clear to him, of course, that you are to pay all expenses, for this is the responsibility of the bride's family.

5. Customarily the groom buys the bride's bouquet and the bride's mother supplies the flowers for the bride's attendants.

Advice to the Lovelorn

By BEATRICE FAIRFAX

A Home One Can Afford is Always Ideal for Young Couple

Here's a young couple positively irresistible. The girl is 18, her self husband, 22. They've been married 6 months, and she writes:

"We're about two of the happiest people in the world.

"The reason is, Chief Petty Officer in the Navy and has been on several cruises, and appears safe and sound, his wife always goes to meet whatever he is allotted. And as she is very skilful in her own line, dressmaking, she gives a job to do this, or her employer waits for her return.

These young people talked a good deal about their future when he was home on the last visit, and how nice it would be to own their own home. They've even seen the house of their dreams, which has completely captivated them. The man's salary is comfortable and the wife gets an allowance and together with what she earns from her job has enabled the thrifty little pair to save a handful of dollars since their marriage.

Slick, look, you and you young people, hypnotized by present-day high wages, have seen fit to take advantage of the lean years likely to follow these fat ones.

Thanks to the Navy, this husband has learned some excellent ageskills so these youngsters have every reason to be happy.

It's not surprising, taking these things into consideration, that the thoughts of this happy pair have turned to a home of their own, a nice little home, with enough of a garden to raise a few vegetables and some flowers. But their families think they should wait until the war is over before making such an investment.

If these people were of the type who squandered their money in night clubs, amusements, fancy dress and such things, the advice of their elders would be excellent. But as they're both sensible and thrifty and realize there's nothing like owning the roof over one's head, their families, it would seem, have little to fear.

Suppose the lean days should come, as a good many people think inevitable, after the short term boom which follows a war. There is the house, in which one can always rent a room for something, at least to pay the taxes. And there is that comfortable feeling that they did something with their money besides "blowing it in." And to look back on the years that one has been supremely happy during those first honeymoon years, is splendid insurance for old age.

The Marry-Go-Round

How Men Escape Proposing

How can you make a man propose? That's a perennial question, which comes up along with the crocuses and radishes, even in Leap Year, when women know that he can make a girl propose.

I don't know about these sex-reversal days; they may be more eager and responsive. But, in peace times the best way to convince the average man that he is going to marry you is to lead him to believe you PROVE it to him! Actions speak louder than words.

Don't go releasing men from lots of the home-front jobs these days, so they can propose to you in the painful job of proposing? A girl always knows when she's caught a man by the home-front jobs he does, so why not let him break his own news to him? Besides, this is Leap Year!

No girl will tell you what a man said when he proposed to her; because she can't remember that he said anything. He was inarticulate. When man was a savage, he expressed himself in terms only in grunts and dumb signs. Now he is civilized and goes as far as monosyllables, baby-talk and wisecracks. But it's still a feat to get him to tell a girl he loves her, in plain English.

Not only in novels that lovers say, "Will you marry me?" In real life, they are much more apt to grab you proposal is to make it herself.

in their arms and mumble something unintelligible. They still halt-do. They don't know what they are saying—and neither do you. But if you gurgle sweetly, "Oh, John!", you're probably engaged. Anyway, you're willing to be.

Of course, a girl yearns for a bonafide proposal and a little after this love-making, even in Leap Year. But if a man can be led to do it in a few minutes, escape the words, he feels like a driver who has jumped a red light without getting a ticket. He's made it!

The girl always has the upper-ing in the movies. That has been considered a "triple" since the fifteen years. It should like to know just how many proposals of marriage Gary Cooper, Tommy Dorsey and Fred MacMurray have received in the last decade. Probably "as the man" type always has to be thrown and roped. Every day is Leap Year for him.

But the fastest type of artful dodger is the man who just drops a hint, and then sits back and waits for the girl to pick it up with a selling-talk. That's his technique—and tryin to beat it!

After this war, thousands of girls will not only have to make their own living, but will have to do their own proposing. And I'll wager they do a much better job of it, than the men have done. The only way for a girl to get a beautiful, romantic

Do You Respect Another Person's Religious Faith?

Without doubt the most famous definition of a gentleman . . . and signs initials to your business letter the meaning of the word gentle person, man or woman . . . is one written by Cardinal Newman.

The last sentence of this famous definition is "A gentleman is a friend of religious toleration, and that, the middle of least week, it was reported yesterday in usually well-informed circles. Reliable philosophy has taught him to look on all forms of faith with an impartial eye, but also from the gentleness of feeling which is the attendant of civilization."

Great words for our 1944 contemplation.

The tongue, says the Bible, is an "unruly member," and never is it so cruel and offensive as when it is saying contemptuous and insulting and hurt things about another person's religious faith.

When you are intolerant of another's religion, you are a sorry spectacle of ignorance and inhumanity. You have no right to cross the threshold of another person's beliefs unless in spiritual sympathy and understanding.

How few of us realize that when we say . . . or even think . . . malicious things about another's religion, we are showing ourselves to be very poor representatives of our own. And that while we are demanding tolerance of our own religious faith, we are unwilling to be tolerant of another's faith.

If you must be intolerant, be intolerant of your own intolerance, not of another person's beliefs.

Use Your Maiden Name

Dear Mrs. Beeckman:

I have been a business woman for several years and in my position my name has become, to have a certain professional value. In two months I am going to be married and am going to continue in my position. I am in a quandary as to what form of name to use in business after I am married. I had thought of using my initials with the surname of my husband-to-be (M. A. Brown), or perhaps Mrs. Mary Brown or Mrs. Mary Allen Brown. What do you suggest?

Mary

In my judgment the very best taste is for you to continue to use your maiden name in business, Mary Allen. This is sensible and practical, since you have made that name professionally valuable and since it means no change as far as your business contacts are concerned. This also avoids the unattractive form of style "Mrs. Mary Brown" or "Mrs. Mary Allen" in their arms and mumble something unintelligible. They still halt-

The Record of 200 Behavior Fatals Discharged From the Army.

When we read of the large number of our armed forces being discharged because of mental or behavior disabilities, it only causes some alarm if the true facts are unknown. It is interesting then to learn the facts as presented by the psychiatrists of one training centre because the same conditions will be found in all training camps.

Major Seymour J. Rosenberg, M.C., and Captain Richard H. Lambert, M.C., in the American Journal of Psychiatry present certain facts drawn from a review of 300 consecutive case histories of soldiers discharged at Camp Lee, Virginia, because of nervous and behavior disabilities. The following features of these 200 cases were noted: the month in type, how long illness had lasted, length of service before admission to hospital, civilian work record, and family history. Also an answer was sought to the question . . . was interduction into the army the cause of mental breakdown?

It was found that of the 200 men, 98 had had mental or behavior symptoms for at least one year before the army entered the army, and more than half the 200 had prominent mental and behavior symptoms for over five years before entering the army. In only 22, that is 11 percent, did the onset of the illness occur "after" entering the army.

Almost one half of the 200 casualties became disabled within the first month of military service, 75 per cent within two months and 87 per cent within six months after they began army duty.

Many of these individuals did fairly well at home where their symptoms had been accepted by those with whom they had been associated to and protected by their families. Away from home, they had worked if and when they felt like it. These individuals had difficulty in adjusting themselves to military life's. Their educational and work records before entering the army were poor as were the family histories of many.

Among the findings of these investigators are two outstanding points.

First, military service in itself could not be said to be the cause of the disabilities in the majority of cases.

Second, epileptics, although they may be discharged, had performed their military duties satisfactorily.

HEALTH CHATS

DR. HERMAN N. BUNDESEN

The amount of sugar in the blood has a great bearing on a person's well-being. Just so much is necessary. More or less causes serious disturbances. If there is too much sugar in the blood, the individual usually is suffering from diabetes, due to a lack of secretion from the pancreas. But sometimes a condition occurs in which there is too little sugar in the blood. This is known as hypoglycemia, and is due to an oversecretion from the pancreas.

Persons with hypoglycemia suffer from nervousness, weakness, instability, rapid beating of the heart, pain in the chest, shortness of breath, dizziness, fright, and headaches, according to Docktor Tinsley R. Harrison and Robert M. Finks, of Winston Salem, North Carolina.

In many instances, persons with hypoglycemia have irregular beating of the heart and fainting attacks. At times there may be attacks of pain over the heart much like those which occur in angina pectoris.

The diagnosis of low blood sugar is usually made by a careful study of the patient's symptoms made over a period of time, and an examination of the amount of sugar in the blood. The person who has frequently recurring symptoms affecting the heart and circulation, particularly when these symptoms always appear at least two hours after meals, should be suspected of having hypoglycemia.

A test has been advised for helping to tell when hypoglycemia is present. This is carried out by giving the suspected person an injection of insulin, the secretion from the pancreas needed by the body to use sugar. If this injection causes the symptoms of hypoglycemia to be produced, it is likely that the person is suffering from too low blood sugar.

Another test may be made by treating the patient with the proper diet and noting whether his difficulty is overcome. The dietary treatment consists of giving foods rich in proteins, such as meat, milk, and eggs, and giving food in between meals. It has been found that when these patients are given plenty of protein foods, the liver will tend to rise following the meal over a period of four or five hours.

Help Keep Fit by Keeping THE KIDNEYS in Good Order

Nowadays most people realize that to keep well is usually simpler, safer, more pleasant and less costly than to try to "get well."

A healthy, well-regulated system resists many ailments to which a less sturdy constitution may fall victim. Because of this, more and more men and women are using Dodd's Kidney Pills at regular intervals. By so doing they feel that they are helping to keep their kidneys in good order, so that poisonous waste matter and excess acids may be cleansed from the system, and possible illness avoided.

It is a wise health safeguard to use Dodd's Kidney Pills from time to time. Dodd's Kidney Pills are not habit-forming, safe and easy to use.

Leafs Defeated in Rough Game By Montreal Canadiens Who Take 2 to 1 Edge in Series

Ray Getliffe Scores Winning Goal Midway Through Last Period

LEAFS' SHOOTING WEAK

By FRASER MacDOUGALL
Canadian Press Staff Writer

Montreal, March 31 (CP)—Coach Dick Irvin of Montreal Canadiens probably is thankful today that fast-skating Ray Getliffe yielded to pressure at the opening of the National Hockey League season and reversed his decision to retire after eight seasons of professional hockey.

The 30-year-old Galt, Ont., native who runs a shoe store at Stratford fired the goal Saturday night that gave Canadiens a 2-1 win over Toronto Maple Leafs and a 3-1 lead in the best-of-seven Stanley Cup semi-final series.

Getliffe's winning goal was tallied midway through the third period of a stirring game after Glen Harmon had scored for the Canadiens in the opening period and George Boothman fired one for Leafs in the second.

It was the second straight playoff win for the National Hockey League champions who defeated Toronto Thursday night in Montreal 6-4 after suffering a 3-1 setback in the first game of the series at Montreal last Tuesday. Fourth game is scheduled for Toronto ice tomorrow night and fifth in Montreal Thursday.

Getliffe Plays Well

Getliffe, who started his N. H. L. career with Montreal Maroons in 1935-36 and later went to Canadiens, played effective hockey all the way through Saturday's game and he had able assistance from such veteran Montreal players as Hector (Toe) Blake and Murph Chamberlain. Chamberlain was particularly effective at times when Canadiens were short-handed in the penalty-studded game.

Total penalties — all for minor infractions — numbered 16 with Canadiens drawing nine and Leafs seven. None of the goals was scored during penalties.

Paul Bissaillon continued his sensational play in the Toronto goal. Canadiens fired 40 shots at him, 18 in the first period, and he got in the way of half a dozen that looked like sure scores. Bill Durnan had 22 Toronto shots to handle.

First Goal Fluke

Harmon's first period goal was unassisted and of the fluky variety. His shot from outside the defence being deflected into the nets off forward Ted Kennedy's leg. Boothman's goal came on assists by Kennedy and Pratt while Getliffe had help from Phil Watson and Chamberlain in driving home his goal during a brief period scramble in front of the Toronto nets.

Paid attendance numbered 14,506 —seating capacity of Maple Leaf Gardens is just under 13,000. The receipts were $28,000. The Chief Executive of Athlone, Governor-General of Canada, and the Princess Alice were in attendance.

Toronto's Gus Bodnar, named rookie of the year in the N. H. L., was presented with the Calder Trophy at the beginning of the second period by the league's managing director, Mervin (Red) Dutton.

13 PENALTIES

Chicago, March 27—(CP)—Chicago Black Hawks took over the driver's seat in the National Hockey League play-off series with Detroit Red Wings Sunday night when they defeated the present Stanley Cup champions 2-0 before a capacity crowd of 17,182. The victory gave the Hawks a 3-1 lead in the best-of-seven semi-final series.

Unassisted goals by Joe Cooper in the first period and Clint Smith in the final frame settled the issue in a game marked by 13 penalties.

Nine of the penalties came in a furious first period in which both teams showed ample determination. Cooper was fleet to leave the ice and while he still was in the box, Doug Bentley and Joe Carveth broke to blows and were penalized for high-sticking. The Hawks, Bentley and Cliff Goupe, their defence and Mike Karakas closed a hard shot, which Karakas finally broke through on a solo effort.

Scores While Short-Handed

Hal Jackson of Red Wings, Bill Jennings and Johnny Gottselig joined the parade to the cooler and while both were out for the short one, Cooper swooped in and smacked the puck after Goupe had cleared it away from the goal. A hard drive into the net put the Black Hawks ahead 1-0. The pace slackened toward the end of the frame and Adam Brown and Cooper added to the penalty total.

The scoreless second period, Jack Adams of Detroit and Paul Thompson, of Chicago, final manager, displayed the same basket matching their first line against Buffington's second string.

Brown netted his tally when he broke in alone inside the Detroit blue line. He had picked up the puck after it had bounced off the boards and circled to the centre of the rink before firing home. There were no penalties in the last period.

The first shot-out in the current play-off series.

Detroit won the first game in the play-off series at Detroit last Tuesday night but Chicago retrieved their victory last Thursday. Fourth game in the series will be played in Chicago Tuesday night, the fifth game in Detroit Thursday.

OVER OPTIMISM BLAMED

London, March 27 — (CP-Reuters) — Over optimism, based on an over-estimate of the effects of the nightly bombing and artillery attack, coupled with unfavorable weather, were blamed yesterday by David Brown of Reuters News Agency for what he called the "deterioration of the Allied assault on Casino." Brown cabled from Allied headquarters in Italy.

Toronto, March 27 — (CP) — Eddie Shore foresees a great post-war future for professional hockey. He has advocated as the price of success a stiffer training and conditioning period for young players than any yet attempted. Perfect conditioning, the former Boston Bruins star defenceman says, will be demanded of every player not only for the team he will play but also by the customers who pay good money and expect the best performance possible from every man on the ice.

Eddie, now manager of Buffalo Bisons in the American League, told Bill (Wagon Pulls Evening Review) Cayron that the war has been an invaluable aid to the conditioning of players who entered the service. It made them more attentive to training rules and taught them something that is conspicuously absent from the regular routine of any up-and-coming hockey boy."

Eddie also advocated organization of skating clubs with capable instructors in all hockey arenas, because in his opinion there are altogether too few real skaters among aspiring hockey players of the present day.

And finally the one-time N. H. L. bulwark uttered criticism of a rule that every young player must spend a one or two year apprenticeship in the minors before jumping to big-time hockey. This would prevent too rapid forcing of a youngster and the consequent sudden fading, which occurs frequently.

Day the Gay Deceiver

Jimmy (Montreal Herald) Ferguson wonders if a smooth propaganda job by conductor Peg Day of Toronto wasn't partly responsible for Leafs' upset of Montreal Canadiens in the opening game of the current series. Before the game Hap dredged up the old herring by telling Fergie that "easy cup-play hockey" was his defensive play and close back-checking was a thing of the past. Then Leafs let the kitty out of the bag and confused Canadiens with the nicest stay-at-home job seen in many days.

Incidentally:

Last-century baseball league officials in Guelph are considering asking the umpires to work for free this summer. That's fine for everybody except those who probably won't be so anxious to take their pay in stone and bock, even if they are. Harry (Calgary Albertan) Scott says the C. A. S. will have no dig deep to get the Edmonton Victorias — New Westminster Canadians senior hockey pay. An all-time low for Allan Cup play was reached, with attendance dropping to 700 a game.

Baseball Roundup

New York, March 27 (AP)—He's just a little fellow, but rookie outfielder Augie Bergamo, of the Brooklyn baseball experimental, says he can hit.

The 160-pounder, who sparked Columbus to victory in the Little World Series last fall, poled out triples to right centre to help the National League champs beat the Canadian Programs Group team from Memphis 10-3 at Cairo, Ill. Augie also drove in a run in the ninth after he replaced Johnny Hopp in centre field.

Meanwhile the World Champion New York Yankees received word at Atlantic City that two more 1934 champions — pitcher Ernie Bonham and Frankie Crosetti—had passed their pre-induction physical examinations.

Whit Wyatt, star right-hander of the Brooklyn Dodgers, sent word to the Dodgers' Bear Mountain, N.Y., camp that he had been reclassified 1-A and probably would be called soon for examination.

Two more stars of the league camps:—

Lakewood, N.J.—Ace Adams, star relief pitcher, signed a Giant contract at what was described as a "substantial" increase in salary. He appeared in 70 games, a record, last season.

Cape Girardeau, Mo.—Pitcher Jack Kramer arrived in Browns camp still unsigned. He is expected to discuss terms with Vice President Bill Dewitt today.

OTTAWA SAILORS WIN

Montreal, March 27—(CP)— Ottawa Montreal Sailors scored on the first game of a home-and-home series points in the Eastern Canada Basketball Senior semi-final series Saturday night. The Sailors came back strongly after a 42-23 setback in the first half to edge out the Montreal squad and take a two-point margin with them in the second tilt which will be played in Ottawa next Saturday.

ONLY 60,000 SQUARE MILES LEFT

London, March 27—(CP) — The Red Army now has recovered all but about 60,000 square miles of pre-1939 Russian territory which Germany once held, including Estonia, Latvia, Lithuania, parts of Poland and Rumania which the Russians now claim as their own, however, the Soviet troops still have approximately 200,000 square miles of soil to recover.

16 MEN DIE IN BLAZE

BARONS, BISONS LIKELY TO MEET FOR LOOP TITLE

Cleveland and Buffalo Win From Hershey and Indianapolis

SMART CONTESTS

By The Canadian Press

It looks like Cleveland and Buffalo will meet in the final playoff series in the American Hockey League.

The Cleveland Barons, Western Division winners, and the Buffalo Bisons, eastern finalists' runner-up in the Eastern loop, took a commanding 3 to 1 lead Sunday night in their best-of-seven semi-final series against Hershey and Indianapolis, respectively.

The Hershey Bears and the Indianapolis Capes must win today's games or bow out. It takes four victories to win a championship.

At Cleveland a crowd of 11,308 saw the Barons forced to an overtime period before whipping Hershey 3-2. Bill Hudson and Johnny Harms tallied for the Barons in the second session after a scoreless opening period. Lou Trudel put Cleveland back into contention midway through the final stanza and Les Cunningham scored the tieing goal at 15:05.

The Barons won but the 10-minute overtime period on Pete Peckinsky's shot.

A crowd of 6,956 at Indianapolis watched the Caps try in vain to crack the Buffalo defence in the closing minutes.

The first period was scoreless in this game too, but the second produced more than a minute old Bill Thomson counted with a close-in shot. Eric Pinkerton scored the count eight minutes later.

The goals made one minute early in the third session—by Roger Leger and Lynn Patrick—knotted the score for Buffalo. The Bisons stood off a late rally by the Capes and the game ended in a beaten only once as Winky Smith tallied.

Cleveland plays at Cleveland Tuesday while Indianapolis plays at Buffalo Wednesday.

Sports Roundup

New York, March 27 — (AP) — To fill the void left during the Giants and Dodgers are working up another feud, Manager Leo Branch Rickey's statement that Brooklyn players will never get worn Major League uniforms could whip a similar team of Charlie Schultz at first . . . Horace Stoneham, claiming Buddy Kerr as his antidote to Schultz, has gone so far as to cancel a lineup and offers to play it against them Runs as a preliminary to one of the Red Cross games, April 13 . . . What's their hurry? By mid-season those guys probably will be regulars.

Monday Madness.

Jack Dugger, Ohio State basketball coach, is one of the few court stars (maybe the only one) who wears contact lenses . . . The shortage of exercise bays around racetracks is so acute that Earl Sande has been galloping some of his own horses and in Kentucky a kid who knows how to work a mag can pick up $25 or $30 a day.

Jiffers, More Figgers.

If the war doesn't interfere, Ernie Calvetty's $34-point college basketball scoring record may be in danger in the next few seasons . . . During the recent campaign Scott McGee of Detroit, N.D., high rang up 569 points in 21 games and Joe Hensley of Alexandria, Va., George Washington high hit 479 in 30 games.

CREATE NEW CORPS

Ottawa, March 27 — (CP)—Defence headquarters last night announced the creation of a corps of electrical and mechanical engineers within the Canadian Army, patterned after its counterpart in the British Army, the Royal Electrical and Mechanical engineers. The new corps is designed to concentrate in one body responsibility for the repair and maintenance of every piece of technical equipment used by the army.

CASUAL COMMENT

Temptation

A lank army girl and a handsome farm lad were walking along a road together. The farm lad was carrying a large pail on his back, reaching a chicken in the hand and a cane in the other, and leading a goat. They came to a dark lane.

Said the girl: "I'm afraid to walk here with you. You might try to kiss me."

Said the farm lad: "How could I with all those things to carry?"

"Well, you might stick the cane in the ground, tie the goat to it, and put the chicken under the pail."

The Belleville Collegiate senior girls' basketball team advanced to the finals in the senior Inter-scholastic O.B.S.A. cage championships at Toronto over the weekend, going out in the final game 16 to 14 to the Ridgeway High School by a scant 16 to 15 margin. Mary Taylor, Conch Morton's high-flying forward, was the best player on either team and had lady luck been kind but once on the breaks there was nothing to stop them from being crowned champions. The game held good for the B.C.I. junior boys in the previous night's games when Osborne edged out locals by one point. "Our juniors played their best game of the season and were definitely outlucked around the basket, the Cathedral boys both the senior and junior round. As for the B.C.I. seniors they simply faded out of the picture after racing through to an early lead.

As for basketball the city league girls' finals continue at the Y tonight when Reliance must win over Alemite or pass out of the picture for 1941. Next Friday Ed. Shortt's 'Belleville "Y" girls enter the provincial O.B.A. playdowns at Toronto also.

(McCabe game)

On Saturday night Ralph "Highpockets" McCabe boarded a southbound train out of Toronto for Lancaster, Pa., accompanied by Manager Eastman of the Toronto Maple Leafs ball club. McCabe dropped in to hold court on Saturday.

Last season Ralph won three and lost one with the Leafs before going to the Albany Senators of the Eastern League where he won three and lost four. In the Cuban league last winter McCabe won 3 and lost 3 before a knee injury saw him return home. Adolfo Luque, former Cincinnati Reds pitcher, was manager of the Cienfuegos club for which McCabe played in Cuba. Mike Gonsales, coach of the baseball finals, managed the Leafs in the loop.

Incidentally Ralph weighs 195 pounds today, 20 pounds more than he tipped the beam when the 1941 season was over. He stands six foot six inches and over. Ralph's great playmates, Bill Brydges and Girlmes were due to arrive in Lancaster yesterday. "I never felt better and this should be my big year with the Leafs," the man Girlmes with all of the angles about pitching and I'm lucky to be with a club that has such a good pitching coach," stated McCabe.

(Remember when—)

Winnipeg's Elmwood "Million-aires" defeated Ottawa Primrose 3-0 at Ottawa in the third and deciding game 13 years ago tonight to capture the Memorial Cup and the resulting junior hockey championship. Bill Cowley was a star with the Primrose while Bill Mckenzie was leading man in the Winnipeg victory.

(Handy gadget, what)

An automatic machine for setting up pins in a bowling alley is the latest creation. The bowler's delight, it goes to work as the first ball bumps a mat in the pit. A rack descends, lifts any still-standing pins out of the way of a "sweep" which brushes dead pins into the pit, and then it re-racks the live pins for the "spare". After the second ball the rack lifts out of the way as a strike, a conveyor carries all pins to an overhead hopper from which they slide into the rack an are re-spotted.

(Pukka Gin for Derby.)

C. B. Whitney's Pukka Gin was recently established as the future book favorite among Kentucky Derby nominees by Betting Commissioner James Carroll, who quoted him at 4 to 1 odds with the classic.

Flatter, owned by George D. Widener, ranked second at 8 to 1, followed by Count Fleet at 12 to 1.

Three fillies, Durazna, Miss Keeneland and Twilight Tear, lead the list of the 10 best racking favorites, all quoted at 15 to 1. The latter won last week at Hialeah Park. Jerahmeel, Olympic Zenith, Rodney Stone, Royal Prince and Lucky Draw.

Leafs come close.

Toronto Maple Leafs could have won the series from Montreal on Saturday night but didn't and Canadiens went ahead two games to one in their semi-final Stanley Cup playoff. Meanwhile, Chicago Black Hawks put the Detroit Red Wings behind the eight ball by shutting them out Sunday night to lead their series by the same count. Canadiens just had a little too much power in the third frame but Toronto missed many chances in every fourth count. The game was rough and may get even more so as the series progresses.

LESSON NO. 238

By SAM GORDON
The Jibbitzer

If you can dish it out, don't sulking. With a choice of bids, pick out the bid that has all it promises. Much better is it to have a little more than not quite enough for the bid you select.

An opening bid of one in a suit guarantees at least five tricks, four high cards, four sure tricks, and a biddable suit. See if you have such a bid with the south hand in this pair:

SOUTH	NORTH
♠K Q J 10 9	♠A
♥A K 10 5 4	♥
♣5 7	♣

♥Q
♦A K Q 4 3 2
♣K Q 4 3

An ace is a sure trick. A combination of king and queen in the same suit is one sure trick. Ace and king in the same suit combine to make two sure tricks. Ace, king, queen in the same suit combine to make two sure tricks, a total of three sure tricks.

A high card is any ace or king or queen. And a trick is any high card or short card, a short card in diamonds, two short cards in clubs; total seven tricks.

With two biddable suits of the same length, always bid the higher ranking suit first. So, the longer suit you mention here is spades. Do you have all you need for an opening bid of one spade?

You have one sure trick more than you need; exactly enough high cards; and two extra tricks. There should be no doubt in your mind about that now.

You might have a feeling that your hand is too strong for an opening bid of one. But if you are not sure, stick to that bid or one. Don't gamble with a bid you are not sure of.

Not very long from now, I will tell you the exact needs for opening bids of more than one. When you know what and why higher bids show what they do, you will never be in doubt again.

But don't go around messing with higher bids until you know them. The easiest way to get your good cards into trouble is to use bids with which you are not familiar.

Many hands look better than a bid of one. When in doubt, play safe.

"Klondike Kate"

Klondike Kate that fabulous character of the Yukon and dubious gold rush days, will be seen again in all her pristine glory when Cornelia Peterson of that name opens next at the McCarthy theatre.

Advance reports announce this to be the most exciting, romantic and colorful story to come from the brawling 90's in many a day. Certainly the real life story of this queen of the fortune hunters, would put any modern glamour gal to complete shame.

The story of the movie "Klondike Kate" cuts back from the chance meeting of a young reporter on assignment with an elderly lady sitting next to him at the opening of the Alaskan Railway, to the Klondike in the lush days of 1897; she tells him her absorbing tale.

Kathleen (Joy Lian Savage) comes to the Klondike to claim the property left by her father in the lawless, gay and bawdy town of Totem Pole. At the same time a theatrical troupe under the management of Molly (Glenda Farrell) arrives in town. Included in "Sometime" Smith's (Sheldon Leonard) empire. But Dandelion (Tom Neal) proprietor of the Great Northern Palace Hotel and Dance Hall, grabs them off with an offer of more money.

From here on things happen fast and furiously. Kate learns that her property in the hotel which she runs. She takes the case to court but given no satisfaction she discovers that her lawyer, Jeff's lawyer are the presiding judge, are one and the same person. Next she goes to work as a singer and is a big hit. Also Dandelion and Smith" double-crosses Jeff with a deck of marked cards, Kate stops the men who drive trucks delivering nitroglycerine to our war plants.

It tells about them in a highly dramatic manner, filled to overflowing with life or death in the balance, their fearless coping with emergencies which only the liquid dynamite can best—all revealed in the unfolding of the story of "High Explosive."

"Holy Matrimony"
(Riloesm Comedy)

Fun and laughter abound in "Holy Matrimony," the hilarious new 20th Century-Fox picture which opened Sunday midnight at the Capital Theatre. Starring the whiskered Monty Woolley and adorable Gracie Fields, the picture is aimed at your funny-bone and it scores a direct hit.

Together in a rose-covered cottage, the gay blade with the roguish tongue and lovable, laughable lady of laughter and song picture grand entertainment combination. Monty and Gracie latch what they woo throughout every foot of the film—and that will reveal a fine interpretation of marriage — "Holy Matrimony" becomes howling merriment.

The supporting cast assembled by Producer Johnson, who also wrote the excellent screen play, is complete. Included are Laird Cregar, Una O'Connor, Alan Mowbray, Melville Cooper and Franklin Pangborn.

John Stahl directed the picture with a keen eye for laughs. The happiest idea to hit Hollywood in a long time, is a wild and Woolley "Fields' day of fun!

The Canadian Universal News completes the big double attraction.

C.A.H.A. WIPES OUT THREE WINS OF JUNIOR TEAM

Trail Smoke Eaters Now Two Games Down With Regina

PLAYER INELIGIBLE

Regina, March 27—(CP)— It was blue Monday in Trail Smoke Eaters Camp here today as they accepted disallowance by the Canadian Amateur Hockey Association of their three victories in the Western Canada Junior semi-final series and prepared to resume Tuesday with Regina Commandos now holding a two-game lead in the best-of-five revised affair.

The C. A. H. A. ruled out 7-6, 4-3 and 8-5 victories, even with our knowledge, had used defenceman Paul Mahara of Winnipeg, who is over the 20-year-old junior age limit.

Commandos Saturday night believed they had been eliminated in the Memorial Cup play-offs and that Trail had made hockey history by becoming the first British Columbia champions to reach the Western Canada finals.

Some time after Trail won the fifth and deciding game 8-5, Commandos filed a protest with Frank Sargent of Fort Arthur, President of the C. A. H. A., and asked an official check be made of Mahara's age.

Late last night Mahara, in a statement to Coach Gerry Thomson of Trail, admitted he was born in Winnipeg in 1921, now is 23 years of age, and that he altered his birth records. The statement said Mahara had told Trail officials he was eligible to play Junior hockey and that nobody in Trail knew his true age.

"We assume responsibility for the boy's errors and stand ready to accept any punishment the C. A. H. A. may hand us," Thomson said during the investigation. "We will go home at once if ordered — we have no alibi. It's a terrible letdown to the boys after winning a thrilling series."

During the original series Mahara scored seven of Trail's 18 goals and assisted in another.

Pirates Likely To Lose Three Hurlers in Draft

Muncie, Ind., March 27 —(AP)— Ten players with 4-F Draft status pleasure Pittsburgh at spring training this season, but the Pirates' hopes of finishing in the first division of the National League depend chiefly on how long they keep their eight draft eligibles.

The Bucs face the prospect of losing three rookie pitching prizes who accounted for 50 victories last season—Art Cuccurullo of Albany, Preacher Roe of Columbus and Nick Strincevich of Toronto.

Roe would be missed especially, in winning 15 games for Columbus he led the American Association in strikeouts, with 136, and also in shutouts, with six.

Other valuable draft eligibles are veteran Al Lyons and Hank Camelli of Albany, the team's only regular catchers, and third baseman Bob Elliott, of Hollywood. The latter at plate last year with a neat .315, is met a spired reception, with the majority of the critics finding much fault with it, including an overabundance of talk, while others called it well-written, well-played and pleasantly entertaining.

Jill agreed with Miss Pitcoff, a refugee from the Nazis, is a gifted actress and assured a great future she will be seen again, in a stronger vehicle.

A Mis Coming: Word from Boston where it is having its pre-Broadway engagement is that that stage version of Rosemary Taylor's popular book "Chicken Every Sunday" should score nicely when it reaches here.. The Epstein (Julius J. M. and Philip G.) duo dramatized the book which is an account of Miss Taylor's mother and the odd household house she ran in Tucson, Arizona.

Eva Le Gallienne, star of Chekhov's "The Cherry Orchard," will undergo "a long-delayed surgical operation" next month and the successful revival of the Russian play, scheduled to close April 1, will continue for a limited engagement beyond that date with Margaret Webster, the play's co-producer and co-director, replacing Miss Le Gallienne in the role of Madame Andreyevna. Miss Webster will be co-starred with Joseph Schildkraut for the extension of the run.

In the Ontario Juvenile Basketball Tourney at Toronto, the Queen City Lions triumphed over the Ajax 52-33 in the final after eliminating Kingston Collegiate 54-16 in the semi-finals. Says Pegler To Gallico: 'Remember?'

By Westbrook Pegler in Minneapolis Star-Journal

KANSAS CITY.

DOWN in the street there is a picture in a saloon window and when you think it is but that dizzy Paul Gallico, the author and ex-sports-smartie, is says he was returning here last week, and I wonder what he told them.

He should have told them about the time he went over to their little resort in the Ozarks where Schmeling was training for Stribling, and we thought we had some fun playing golf on the lake with about 30 beasties barking at us from around that annihilated leaky-roof hotel, and coffins yawning on the grass. It turned out to be a regional convention of morticians, and an electric pipe organ kept playing hymns day and night.

He should have told them about the time at Delaney's training camp when Jilley told Jay confidentially to let on Delaney to lick anybody in camp playing golf, because Delaney had been taking secret lessons and could drive a ball off the crystal of a watch. So they took him way off to one of the back tees to prove it and it turned out Jilley and Delaney forgot that watches changing clothes after the lessons and Jay didn't want to use his, but Jilley said well if he was going to bet on the guy he should-n't be afraid to show a little confidence. So Izzy slowly handed over his watch to Gunkwinkle and then they teed the ball and Delaney took a crack with his driver and scattered springs, gears and axles all over the landscape.

He should have told them about that day in Garmisch-Partenkirchen when Der Pushier came down for the ski jumps over on the mountain, and we came out of the sanitarium where we were rooming and there was a file of those giant blackguards of Hitler's own elite corps lining both sides of the road slow to show, facing in, and some thinks said we would have to walk a mile back or get around them because nobody could pass. Gallico said, "For that cockeyed paper-hanger I am not walking any two miles in this snow. I go before me." He barged right through between a couple of the guards and ate after him and they all started to bellow and I thought to tell them I died game.

But Gallico, who speaks beautiful German, just gave the captain a silly grin and said, "Encores, please, ich been Amerikanischer tourist-ish," and the captain threw up his hands and told his men to skip it and let the American sheepshead swine-dogs through but hurry up about it; and everybody else had to walk way around.

So he should have told them how he took ski-ing lessons on an indoor Alp covered with artificial snow in New York, and when he got to Garmisch he went messing around on real Alp and slipped and took off and went sailing down the hill straighted out around thars and everybody thinks well, that's the end of that crazy big sap and they laughed and he came back with purple dots if he didn't come through standing up.

Army Wedding in Field Of Daffodils

Orting, Wash., March 27—(AP)—Pte. Clara Owens of the Women's Army Corps had expressed the belief there should be "lots of flowers" at a wedding, then ended there was a special chance of it at a military ceremony. But she reckoned without army ingenuity when she became the pride of Staff Sgt. William C. Mahick; Jr., as that's was set up in a field and the ceremony performed in the middle of a five-acre tract of daffodils.

INJURED MEN SAY SUNDAY LUCKY DAY

Grand Rapids, Mich., March 27—(AP)—John Rickard, 44, and Edward Keck, 37, required hospital treatment today but still believe Sunday was their lucky day. The truck in which they were hauling a half-ton cement block went out of control and struck two trees. The truck's cab was demolished, the windshield—just before their load crashed through the cab of the truck like an egg-shell.

THE LITTLE DOG BARKED

by ANNE ROWE

CHAPTER IT.

It didn't come. I could hear nothing but a slowly mounting wail. It seemed like a knell, and was on the point of lying down again, convinced I'd only imagined the fellow must be coming home late—that is, late for Fern Cove. But I hesitated dial of my travelling clock said eight minutes past eleven, when it came again.

A scuffling noise and a suppressed groan.—In Linda's room.

I turned on my bedside lamp and was out of bed, across the room and through the bathroom hall in one movement, pounding on Linda's door.

"Linda! Linda! Calling: "Linda! Linda! What's going on?" and pulling the door open at the same time.

Linda's room was pitch dark. It took seconds before I could make out the outlines of the furniture, in the faint light filtering in from my room. And something else—something like a tall man, without a face—bending over the switch with a force that made the pool my head back against the wall and made stars explode all around me.

Next there were hurried steps. A door slammed. Another. And then all noise ceased and only the loud, vibrating stillness of the hollow summer night remained.

"Linda—are you all right, Linda?" I heard someone ask from a great distance—myself.....

A moan answered.

I crawled to the door, groping for the light switch, found it.....

The next moment the room was flooded with radiance, showing Linda in a heap on the floor. In her nightgown. Her eyes staring. Her hands nursing her throat.

He tried to—to strangle me," she said brokenly.

"Who?"

"I'm not—sure. Bill—I think."

My eyes were blurred, and the back of my head ached where it had struck the wall.

"I'll call the Inspector," I said, tottering to the telephone and lifting the instrument from its cradle with shaking fingers.

"The Inspector Pettengill's cottage," I told the night clerk. And when a sleepy "hello" came over the wire a moment later: "Inspector Pettengill? Please come over right away. There's been another attempt on Linda's life."

Linda and I stayed where we were, motionless, after I'd hung up. Staring at each other, too stunned and shaken to make a move.

We didn't even stir when excited whispers came from outside, the hall door, and Inspector Pettengill's voice said soothingly: "Now, now! Don't get all het up. They ain't been no murder-fan's I know. Your sister-in-law had no call to get torn out of bed, or listen in to what Mrs. Turner said to me on the phone."

Then he was in the room, closely trailed by the Kilborns. Jude in a befeathered pink wrapper, her head bristling with hair curlers under a lace boudoir cap, chiffon scarf. Frank's flabby bulk tightly encased in a monogrammed red silk robe.

I think we had honestly forgotten our undressed state—I know I had—until Jude reminded us of it with a squeal that must have rung through the whole house, I'm sure to this day, she wouldn't have been the neighborhood if she had found our dead bodies on the floor, as she was seeing us sit there in our night-ies.

"Land sakes alive, they're most undressed!" Jude screamed, standing in the door in her husband's face and spinning the Inspector around with a quick shove. Then she picked up Linda's robe from the foot of her bed, helped her into it—and into a chair. Rushing to my room and returning with clothing for me, she chattered all the time rapidly.

About the possible damage to the inn: "If this ever come out!" And, what really had happened: "How did the murderer get in?" And how he —got in? "The night clerk says no one come through the lobby 'cept the regular guests. And they're all strangers to outsiders."

The Inspector let her ramble on unchecked until her self-imposed task was done. He had been scanning us calmly. Once we were belted into our dressing gown and had slippers on our feet, he escorted Jude out peremptorily. Told the cook to call someone in the hall, in answer to an indistinct inquiry: "Aynh. Everyone shall up and around. Sergeant Hatch'll wend 'em out."

"You got near strangled, didn't you?" the Inspector asked, the moment the three of us had the room to ourselves. "You hurt bad?"

Linda stretched her neck and swallowed tentatively. "No. It hurts, but not terribly. He—he didn't get a good grip. I fought too hard. But Mrs. Turner, she is it turn he threw her clear across the room—"

The Inspector wheeled. "You hurt too? I thought you was just upset. What's—Mrs. Turner?"

"Oh, I bumped my head."

"I see. One got strangled, one thrown, like the dog was," the Inspector thought out loud, pulling up a chair and sitting down opposite us, his hands on his knees. "Now tell me what happened, from the beginning. You start, Miss Linda."

"I couldn't sleep. I was lying awake—listening—when I heard a noise at the door." Linda complied with the Inspector's order obediently, but in a monotone.

"You locked your door?" he interrupted sharply.

"Oh, yes, I had. That's why the noise startled me," she explained. "It was a sort of—scratching. Something pushing the key out and doing something to get the lock open. The key's thrown on the floor. But when I heard it, I thought it was Mrs. Turner coming in to—to talk to me. And after that was all so still. There was no answer. But I knew someone was in the room. I could see a shadow coming toward the bed and I—I guess I became scared.

"I got out of bed and—I don't exactly know what I did then. Groped for my robe, I think, and tried to get out of the room and into Mrs. Turner's. But he caught me. Here, in the middle of the room. And put a hand across my mouth when I started to scream. Then we fought —I fought—against his strangling me." Linda stopped to remember, horror. Her hands exploring her bruised throat. "And then everything started to whirl and I couldn't breathe and—suddenly he let go of me and—I fell down." She glanced at me wonderingly. "I thought I heard your voice as I fell, calling my name."

"I'll say you heard my voice," I agreed, taking up the story from there, and recounting all it'd heard and seen as briefly and clearly as I could. Ending: "It must have been the noise of the lock being forced that startled me out of my sleep."

The Inspector listened to us patiently, throwing in an occasional "I see."

"And you really haven't got an inkling of who it was?" he asked when we had finished.

"Not the faintest," I assured him. "He—had no face."

"What d'you mean, no face?"

"Just that. He was all dark. Dark gloves, dark cloth over his face. I only know he was tall. And I think it was the man who ran away from the inn, that first night."

"Eh. He wore the same sort of cap. With a visor. The edge of it scratched me," Linda asserted slowly.

She looked altogether unhappy. But that didn't seem to impress the Inspector.

"He had a cap with a visor, and you was so near to him it scratched you. But you have no idea of who he was?" Pettengill asked skeptically. "Look, Miss Linda, you're a nice girl and I'd like to believe you. But how can I, when you lie to me?"

"I'm not—lying to you." Linda didn't glance at him as she said it. "You mean: not in words. You've been lying to me the whole time by what you didn't say—Miss Loring," she accused her sternly.

She gave a start, and her face became scarlet. "Oh—you don't know!" she asked, wide-eyed.

"Know what to you. And so does Mrs. Turner here," he told her. "Now why couldn't you had sense and tell her at least? You knew old Mack got murdered, protecting—her darling daughter. And you knew that telephone booth was almost a—a kill you, Miss Loring!"

Linda sat silent for a while, plainly trying to decide whether it was best to lie, or not to talk.

"For the money I wouldn't even care," she said at last bitterly. "I felt awful when Mrs. Turner said—that night and his family were here and I didn't dream they'd go that far to get rid of me. Not until I heard—those steps on the first night."

"Eh, they' you mean your aunt, Mrs. Parris?" the Inspector asked.

Linda demurred. "I—I can't tell you. She wouldn't like it. Last year Uncle Ty wrote her, without telling me. And I found her crying and read it, behind his back. Now I know what she called me in—in what she dared call me!"

"Ayah," the Inspector said calmly. Wasn't a time lying to call one. But then she's a mean, greedy woman, I take it."

Linda's face lit up. "Oh! Then you aren't on their side!"

"I ain't on any side. I'm out to catch a murderer, Miss Linda. If you can't help me, I'll get along without you. But I'd like to know why you was near choked you to death tonight!"

Linda's face fell. "Still—I think—" she still in my ears. But I gave no sign of it when she shook her head and said: "I don't have no idea, Inspector."

"Shielding young Parris? Beginning to—like him." The Inspector was almost too devout!

Linda stared at him, her mouth half open.

"Look, he's a nice, soft-spoken young fellow. But—plenty murderers are," Pettengill pursued. "So if you think they's the least chance it was him, you better tell me."

I don't know—perhaps Linda would have broken down, but something diverted the Inspector at this crucial moment. A knock at the door.

Sergeant Hatch said, from outside: "I got callers for you, Inspector. From over in the Snack Stuch."

And ushered in a dumbfounded and indignant trio: George Vickery, Wells Colby, Bill Parris, Orne Paulson and—Sanders Marshall.

An instant later a flood of remonstrances poured over the Inspector, which he cut off with a firm: "That's enough! Sit down, the lot of you! There's been another attack on Miss Linda. That's why Sergeant Hatch fetched you here. Mrs. Turner here, or Miss Linda may tell you the whole story while I go speak with my men outside. I won't be long."

The telling fell to me—Linda shook her head in refusal—but I didn't get very far with it. There were too many interruptions.

Only Sondra remained silent. She looked different. I couldn't understand, at first, why. Until I realized she wasn't wearing her custom ary white, but black. A black corduroy slack suit, buttoned to the chin. Her hair dressed differently too. It hung as a black hood to her shoulders, framing her pale-white face that resembled a mask in which only her big grey eyes were alive. Not with dismay about the new attempt on Linda only. There was something else in them. Something furtive and wary and frightened.

I was relieved when the Inspector was back, announcing: "Waited to find out was they a clue to how the strangler got in. But they's so many doors and windows to this here inn, he could take his choice. Ayah, I said strangler." He turned to Sondra who had made a suffocated sound. "Then Mrs. Turner and Miss Linda tell you?"

"I've tried. But I'm afraid I didn't get it over to them. They were too busy telling me how insulted they were having been taken away from their midnight snack by the police," I explained.

"Too bad. Should brought their sandwiches along." The Inspector looked with sympathy, as if he really attributed the general chaos to an interrupted supper. "We-ell, you can go back soon. This won't take long."

He turned to the three actors. "Just tell me where you been and what you done after you brought Miss Linda home, Sherry. I'll stand. It's eleven-thirty-five now. Say, from ten o'clock on. Or—were you still out driving them?"

Three actors' voices explained almost in unison that they had been back long before ten, on Linda's demand. While I figured the time backward, from eleven-thirty-five to eleven-eight. Only twenty-seven minutes!

Little Benny's Note Book

Pop was looking at the headlines on his way to the sporting page, and ma said, Really, William, I mean really, you cant tell when or where you'll meet a 5th columnist these days.

I hear some of them are rather attractive people, in a superficial way, pop said, and ma said, Not the one I'm alluding to, I assure you my dear. I'm alluding to Benita Cornhouse and there's nothing attractive about her, either mentally, morally or finically. She couldn't be more unpopular if she tried, with her vulgar display of expensive clothes and her phoney Parisian smile, and in fact that's the very reason in the first place she wasn't invited to join the Gils, ma said.

The Gils standing for the Girls Lifts to Servicemen, and going by ladies including ma, and pop said, Say, the girls are all for it, and reading here this afternoon, didn't they?

Yes, said Benita Cornhouse barged in on it, that's what I've been leading up to, ma said. She claimed to be the most surprised woman alive when she saw the Gils in session and pretended she was just dropping by, so she stopped in. It all sound very fishy, because she didn't have anything to say. In fact practically her entire conversation consisted in sneering loudly and cursing the moment she left. We all saw through her little plot with the same flash of intuition. It was a deliberate effort on her part to have us all present, ma said, and pop said, Yee gods, are you serious?

Yes I am, and so was Bertha Cornhouse, you don't know her, ma said. My first move was to throw open all the windows and the aspertia around, and everybody agreed to gargle with asslt water as soon as they got home, so her sneeky plot was nipped in an early bud is just as well, however you can't be too careful when you belong to a patriotic organization, ma said.

And she went to gargle again while she thought of it.

3,000,000 Lbs. Poultry Destined For U.K. and U.S.

Ottawa, March 27 — (CP)—Agriculture Minister Gardiner said today the Canadian poultry industry has been "hardened" by confirmed agreements which will result in the shipment of 2,000,000 pounds of poultry at $1,250,000 to the United Kingdom and the United States.

W. A. Brown, of the special products Board, said in Toronto Saturday that agreements have been reached with the United Kingdom and the United States under which each would take 1,000,000 pounds of Canadian poultry.

Today, Mr. Brown said arrangements now have assured that the total to be supplied to the United Kingdom will be 2,000,000 pounds.

Mr. Brown said the agreements were cheering to both poultry producers as a good business in poultry shipments to the United Kingdom was being built up which was unchecked by the war. The only important change was the ending of Atlantic after the war developed last Christmas when there were 1,000 and 2,000 pounds of Canadian chickens and turkeys were received "with pleasure" by British buyers.

Arrangements for shipments to the United States were discussed only after British requirements had been decided. Under agreements between the two countries, the United Kingdom has first opportunity to take Canadian food surpluses.

NEW YORK EXCHANGE

New York, March 27—(AP)—Aircraft and rails attracted scattered buyers in today's stock market while all transports, gold stocks and specialties continued to stumble. Warning of Prime Minister Churchill that hour of the crisis was approaching tended to dry up buying interest and to spur selling. Dealings were sluggish from the start and trends well mixed near the finish.

At peaks for 1944 with gains of fractions to around a point were Delaware & Hudson, Distillers Corp., Pure, Tufford, Seagrams, Martin and Twentieth Century-Fox. Rails as for the week were the time were Santa Fe, Great Northern, Bethlehem, Chrysler, Du Pont, Chemical, Eastman Kodak and General Electric.

Among the exceptions were Seagrams which strengthened 1-4, Canadian Pacific which was easier and Dome and McIntyre were off 1-8 and 1-2 respectively in the mines.

Maj. Triquet, V.C., On Way Home To Montreal

By SYDNEY GRUSON
(Canadian Press War Writer)

London, March 27 (CP) — Major Paul Triquet, fully recovered from a wound received while on a training exercise in Italy, is on his way home to Montreal.

Stopping off in London en route, Major Triquet visited Canadian military headquarters and told how he had learned on March 6 that he had been awarded the Victoria Cross for his bravery in the Ortona campaign.

He was still staying at a hospital in the time and was returning from church with a Nursing Sister when he received a party of British war correspondents who came to congratulate him and extended their congratulations.

Major Triquet in hospital he was handed the crimson ribbon by a staff colonel, representing Major-General Howard Graham, Military Attache, Gen. Chris Vokes, divisional commander, and Lieut.-Gen. Sir Brian Horrocks, corps commander, his actual decoration, no ceremony on that occasion. And his mail from home since he received the award has not yet caught up with him.

Looking fit and trim in his battle dress, the tall, quiet major, who insists on sharing the distinction of his V.C. with the men who fought with him at the time, said that after a trip home he wants to get back into the fight.

Mustangs Used As Fighter-Bombers In Blow at Crete

London, March 27 — (CP) — U. S. Ninth Air Force fighter-bombers — the world's fastest planes — were used in fighter-bomber attacks in a swift blow at the raid centre of Crete in France Sunday, it was announced today.

The attack was the first official disclosure of Mustangs operating as fighter-bombers in the European theatre, although Allied air units in the Mediterranean have had them for some time.

The fact these fighters with a speed of around 425 miles per hour, previously used chiefly as longrange escorts, have been transformed into fighter-bombers by replacing reserve fuel tanks under the wings with bombs, indicates they probably will play an important part in improvement of tactics from Britain.

One bomb in low-level bombing and strafing in addition to regular fighter chores.

Fumes of Onions To Aid in Curing Infected Wounds

By HOWARD W. BLAKESLEE
(Associated Press Science Editor)
New York, March (AP)—The pungent aroma of fresh onions and garlic is such a powerful germ-killer, the Russians are using onions as an aid in curing infected wounds.

The story is told in the American Review of Soviet medicine by B. Yudkin, A. Kovalenok, I. V. Toropkin and A. G. Filatova.

They treated human mouths and found that, after three to eight minutes of chewing fresh onion or garlic, and sometimes after one minute only, the mouths were found free of germs. Onion juice alone, they don't know what the chemical is that makes the trouble.

The killing effects disappear after about 15 minutes, but during that time it lasts, is tremendous. It kills not only the invisible germs, but the visible bacteria, even the yeast and cheesil animals, like Paramecia.

The killing, or healing, aromas are not confined to onions and garlic. The Russians report them in lesser degree in horseradish, radishes, peppers, and such fruits as lemons, grapes and tangerines.

Vapors Used.

The wounds treated with onion were all amputations, of arms or legs. The onion juice was not applied in or on the wound. A cotton-lined cup was held in the stump, and carrying the vapors to it for 10 minutes in each treatment. The improvement was fast enough that the Russians report they believe the plant fumes have a place in treatment.

RUSSIANS TAKE STRANGLEHOLD ON CZERNOWITZ

Germans Caught In Death Pocket By Red Victories

Russian Artillery Pours Death Into Ranks of Fleeing Forces of Germans

HUN LOSSES HEAVY

By HENRY C. CASSIDY
(Associated Press Staff Writer.)

Moscow, March 28 (AP)—Russian troops inside Tarnopol yesterday to be strangling the communications of Czernowitz (Germans) from positions in that provincial capital's outskirts, while Red artillery along 30 miles of the line of battle poured salvo after salvo into enemy ranks.

There was no positive indication that the Russians had crossed the Pruth, which divides Bessarabia and Rumania proper. Nor was there any report of surrender by forces from German and Rumanian guns, indicating the foe was in flight toward Iasi (Jassy), headquarters of Marshal Von Mannstein's operating armies west of the south. The Russians were 10 miles from Iasi on the Pruth-Siuhyava.

Street fighting was reported in Nikolaev, Black Sea port on the Bug Estuary, 315 miles to the east of Iasi. Nikolaev was reported ripe for imminent capture.

Death Pocket Is Smaller

Forty miles northeast of Czernowitz, the capture of Kamenets Polosk and the town of Bezovitsy was swiftly fashioning a death pocket around Germans in a 1,400 square mile area to the northwest. Marshal Konstantin Rokossovsky's and Marshal Georgi Zhukov's armies have closed from the north by the Pripet Marshlan and from the south, by the second Ukrainian army.

Izvetia said the ominous thunder of Russian artillery ahead of Generalfeld Ie Iasi said that "the German command cannot halt our troops."

Red Star said in a dispatch from the Pruth that Marshal Ivan Konev's Ukrainian army tanks and Tommy-gunners are driving Germans and Rumanians to death in the narrow stream.

Czernowitz has 110,000 population and was the third largest city of pre-war Rumania.

Capture of Sadagura, just across the Upper Pruth from Czernowitz, climaxed a 25-mile drive into Bukovina from the north by troops of Marshal Gregory K. Zhukov's 1st Ukrainian Army, in which an entire regiment was destroyed, a troop was annihilated, a Russian communique announced.

Skalyany Stormed by Reds.

Skulyany was stormed by troops of Marshal Ivan S. Konev's 2nd Ukrainian Army, the bulletin said. The town operations placed the armies along the north bank of the Upper Pruth River and it appeared tanks of the Reds were ready for a crossing of the river into Rumania was imminent.

Zhukov's invasion of Bucovina was proceeding by a new combination of the Dniester, and front dispatches said this front apparently was still the apparentlyl had effectively split the German defence line east of the Carpathian Mountains and defence based on the Rucharest-Czernowitz-Lvov railroad which is the principal Red army vanguards to within 28 miles, the Germans-Rumanian frontier, thus increasing Russian pressure on that Axis salient.

In the drive on Czernowitz, Zhukov's forces fanned westward to capture Kotopets, to make east of the big junction of Stanislawow and Dorodenki just across the Dniester in Stanislawiy Province, the communique said. This advance caused the Russians close to the foothills of the Carpathians and threatened to cut off the left flank of the enemy's Pruth river line.

Marenets-Podolsk, 40 miles northeast of Czernowitz was another important Dniester river stronghold that fell to Zhukov's veterans, while the town of Bunzlyay, 30 miles to the southwest was stormed by Konev's Pruth-hill ering troops.

Capture of these two positions, north and south of the Dniester river, apparently has jammed large Soviet columns of trapping large German forces in a 1,400 square mile pocket southeast of Proskurov in the Kamenets-Podolsk area.)

The Soviet war bulletin said Red army troops were inflicting terrific casualties on German reinforcements in the Kamenets-Podolsk fighting.

The capture of Kamenets-Podolsk, Marshal Stalin recalled in 5,000 Nazis being killed and 100 enemy tanks being destroyed, the bulletin declared. The German garrison in the city fought to the last man, it was added, and was annihilated to the last man.

Other 1st Ukrainian Army troops were launching attacks on the German defenders of encircled Tarnopol on the trunk line 70 miles east of Czernowitz, it was announced.

On the easternmost end of the long front, Russia's 3rd Ukrainian Army under Gen. Rodion Y. Malinovsky was reported fighting in the outskirts of Nikolaev, great Black Sea port at the mouth of the Bug river.

ASTOR FAVORS DISARMAMENT, OTHER CONTROLS

Opposes Splitting of Germany Into Small Nations

Toronto, March 28 — (CP) — Publisher of the London Times, Lt.-Col. John Jacob Astor, in an interview here yesterday opposed the splitting of Germany into small nations.

He said this might again arouse German nationalities and lead to still another war.

He gave as a proposal for the prevention of future German aggression the dismemberment of the Reich and Allied control of German heavy industry, chemicals industry and transportation and regulation of German imports to exclude raw materials while are necessary for the materials of war.

Col. Astor, who is here to address the 35th anniversary dinner Wednesday night of the Canadian section of the Empire Press Union, advocated establishment of International conciliation boards which would work by international agreement in place of national action.

Prime Minister Declines Comment On Cassino Front

London, March 28 — (CP)—Prime Minister Churchill declined in the House of Commons today to make a statement "at present" on the Cassino and other Italian warfronts.

Edgar Granville, Independent, asked:

"Do you consider it satisfactory that despite your telegram (a request to Allied commanders to hasten to tighten censorship in the Mediterranean) criticism reports continue to come from war correspondents in Italy and at the same time the authoritative statement is made by the government in the House of Commons on the progress of operations?"

"Perhaps," Mr. Churchill continued, "there may not be sufficient progress of operations for any statement to be made at the present moment. I certainly have not concealed my dissatisfaction that pre-

Experiences of 84 Days in Wilds Of Sub-Arctic 'Just a Dream'

Headquarters, Alaskan Wing, Air Transport Command, U. S. A. A. F., March 11, and with his arrival it was officially revealed a United States bomber carrying five men had been lost in their pre-Christmas flight.

Crane became a "little worried" after six or seven days overdue and a "little more worried" when he had nothing but water for the first 10 days and then only rain and fog. He had nothing but canned stocked with food he wasn't able to eat. "It was physically impossible," he said.

He stayed at the cabin three days and, loaded with provisions, started on his way towards civilization. He eventually met Albert Arnold, a trapper, who guided him to Woodchopper, Crane's only mining camp. He waited for arrival of the mail plane which took him to Fairbanks.

Lieut. Crane suddenly reappeared at Ladd Field, Fairbanks, Alaska,

22 PERSONS DEAD, SCORE INJURED IN HOTEL FIRE

San Francisco Fire Chief Asserts Blaze Must Have Been of Incendiary Origin

VICTIMS JUMP

San Francisco, March 28 — (AP) —Twenty-two persons died in an inferno set by a fire-bug today and scores may die from burns and injuries.

Fire Marshal Frank Kelly said the fire, which flashed through the 155-room Jeanderson Hotel in the industrial district south of Market Street, undoubtedly was started by an incendiarist — the last of six incendiary fires of last night and early today.

Twenty men and two women were the bodies burned that several hours after the fire only one of the victims was identified. She was Mrs. Mamie Pulaski, 43, wife of a navy man. She died of a fractured skull.

About 30 others were injured.

180 Roomers In Hotel

There were about 180 roomers in the three-story structure. They leaped into lighwells and perished in the flames; they piled into area ways and suffocated and burned; they jumped from windows and were injured gravely.

Fire Marshal Kelly said the entire area of the fire was on the street during the night. There were five incendiary fires in the city last Sunday night, he said, and six last night, including the New Jeanderson Hotel tragedy.

The operator of the hotel, Jeanderson, could not be found immediately, and firemen expressed fear that he, too, might have been killed.

Policemen at a station half a block from the hotel responded at the first alarm, only to find the entire structure seemed already engulfed.

Lieut. E. J. Glover, in charge of the district, said he thought he ran to the scene and with other officers attempted to open the door which led from the street to the second floor.

"We were driven down at us and drove us back", said Glover, "and then went around and turned to giving First Aid and rescue work to the many who leaped from windows".

Some Landed in Life Nets.

Some persons who jumped from windows landed in life nets spread by firemen, but many others made their way to safety on the roof-top of an adjoining structure after firemen led them down ladders.

Some were overcome when she jumped from a second-story window just as the first fire trucks arrived.

The fire broke out so suddenly and swept through the hotel too quickly to have been of ordinary origin, Fire Chief Dalton said.

Firemen with the aid of many sailor volunteers fought the flames with a maximum blaze under control in about 45 minutes and immediately began searching through the debris.

1943 Income Tax Payments Extended to August 31st

Ottawa, March 28—(CP)—Unsaid balances incomes tax which fall due April 30 may be postponed until Aug. 31 without payment of interest, Revenue Minister Gibson announced Monday in the Commons.

Income tax returns must be filed by April 30, the Minister said.

Col. Gibson said the Government's decision to extend the income tax payment date had been reached "owing to the unusual combination of circumstances, which is not likely to occur again."

"It remains open for any individual to make payment of the unpaid balance of his tax, due on April 30, at any time between now and Aug. 31 without any interest being added," he explained. "After Aug. 31, interest at 5 per cent, as provided by law, will become payable.

The income tax returns, as the law presently requires, must be filed on April 30. The reason for requiring these returns to be filed on the present due date is to enable the Income Tax Division to proceed with the assessing of returns, and to avoid delay in making refunds, and the issuing of assessment notices and certificates."

Gordon Graydon, Progressive Conservative House Leader, said Col. Gibson, instead of mentioning "exceptional circumstances," should have said the extension to Aug. 31 was made as a result of "pressure which came from many quarters, including this side of the House."

4-ENGINE DC 4 DOUGLAS BUILT IN MONTREAL

Transport "Plane Most Likely to Succeed" Says Hon. C. D. Howe

JET ENGINE TESTS

Ottawa, March 27 — (CP) — Manufacture of the four-engine DC4 Douglas transport aircraft — termed by Munitions Minister Howe as "plane most likely to succeed" — has been started in Montreal, Mr. Howe revealed yesterday while Munitions Department estimates were under review in the House of Commons.

The Minister threw new light on previously announced plans for the erection of a factory at Malton, disclosing these other principal facts:

1. Part of the work of developing jet propulsion aircraft engines has been transferred to Canada and production of two sets of jet propulsion planes are being made here while a Canadian-built twin-engined fighter jah jet propulsion plants.

2. The work of developing a trans-Atlantic type of plane for Canadian production, using both Canadian and British engines, is well advanced.

3. In addition to the "Horseman," now in production, the Canadian DC 4, Canada will probably need a small and medium type transport and designs for these are being studied.

Propulsion Engine Tests

Canada, said Mr. Howe, would be in a good position to start production of jet propulsion engines on even terms with any other country. Up to now, he said, no production of airplane engines had been attempted and the work of the prospect of existing types becoming obsolescent.

Various types of jet propulsion engines are being tested under cold weather conditions in Canada, Mr. Howe said. For two years Canada has had a section working on the development of this engine.

Canada has a "research team" in the United Kingdom which had worked with engineers and scientists developing jet engines. They now were with plants making the engines.

Because Canada had not undertaken the manufacture of Canadian engines before, she could undertake the building of the new type with more prospect of success.

Prospects of Success

On the main would have any particular advantage in the building of jet propulsion engines, Mr. Howe said, Canada undertaken to undertaking engine-building with some prospect of success.

In the post-war period Canadian aircraft engineers will be interested in the construction of the Norseman single-motor transport which, it said, already has proved its best of its type in existence and always had been made in Canada.

From studies of other transport types, two or three probably would be chosen and could be put into production quickly when the war was over, the Minister of Munitions in the design of a trans-Atlantic type of plane for post-war production, using both Canadian and British designs.

Rabaul, Once-Proud Bastion on Island, Now Completely Isolated Now

START LARGE FIRES

Allied Headquarters, Southwest Pacific, March 28—(AP)—Rabaul, Japan's once-proud bastion on New Britain which now is isolated by Allied land forces around the Bismarck Sea, is being steadily level-led by Allied bombs in a new assault on the enemy's barracks, docks, shops, barracks and other buildings.

More than 70 tons of explosives were dumped on the enemy during these targets Friday and Saturday and 145 structures of all types were destroyed and damaged, an Allied communique said today. Fighters escorted the concentrated raids, primarily on Rabaul's five big airfields.

Medium bombers, dive bombers and torpedo planes carried out the raids, hitting also fuel and ammunition storages, which dropped 178 tons of bombs in the northeast New Guinea area. Fighters strafed Rabaul Japanese defences in support of ground troops mopping up the Admiralty Islands, invaded Feb. 29.

In a raid on Wewak area of northeast New Guinea, airdromes and supply dumps were hit with 1,000-ton cargo ship offshore and seven fires were started or damaged, it said.

Attape, on the coast 90 miles northwest of Wewak was hit by 34 tons of bombs. One attack plane was lost.

American fighter planes downed 11 Japanese planes in their first announced participation in the mounting air offensive against the enemy's Ponape Island base in the eastern Carolines. It was announced by Fleet Admiral Chester W. Nimitz, Pacific Ocean Commander. The raids were made Saturday and Sunday and fighters accompanied medium bombers.

Bombing Is Visual Against All Targets And Great Damage Reported

NAZIS HIT ENGLAND

London, March 28—(CP)—Hard-hitting Mosquito bombers spread new destruction Monday night through the Ruhr Valley, where an R. A. F.-R. C. A. F. heavy bomber fleet had dealt a shattering blow to the German armament industry 24 hours earlier by raining 2,240 tons of bombs upon Essen.

It was the Mosquito's 20th night foray this month. In a campaign against previously battered industrial centres which, Berlin says, is to discourage reconstruction operations.

The Air Ministry said all planes had returned from the overnight raid, the specific objectives of which were not disclosed.

Simultaneously at the aerial backbone of the Atlantic Wall, a fleet of from 750 to 1,000 U. S. heavy bombers spread destruction in the German airdromes in France yesterday and today, flying their fourth and fifth in a series of sweeping raids that extended almost to the Spanish frontier. They shot down four enemy fighters.

Accompanying fighters, perhaps as many as 1,000, were credited officially with destroying 28 Nazi planes, most of them on the ground, to make the German total loss for the day, six of the American bombers and 10 fighters failed to return, said a communique today. The communique said five fighters probably reported missing had been found safe.

Objectives Named.

The objectives of the bombers included chasters, 40 miles southwest of Paris; Le Rochelle, St. Jean d'Angely, Tours, Romorantin, Cassel, Montdeux and Mont de Marsan, all in the bay of Biscay area, as well as Nancy.

"The bombing was visual against all targets, at least two of which being used primarily as long-range bomber bases, and great results, we were reported," said a U. S. communique.

Thunder at raiders struck back sharply at England and Wales last night, with 11 raiders destroyed in the first hours of the attack. Bombs also fell in both north and eastern England. London itself was not bombed, but one section of the city was under alert. At least eight of the raiders were reported destroyed.

The heaviest barrage in two years was thrown up by anti-aircraft guns in and town over which the German planes crossed and a spokesman said: "Practically the whole of Bristol was the principal target."

Casualties Reported.

It was of the heaviest aerial attacks launched on British targets exclusive of London in the last two years. Casualties were reported considerable damage was caused.

5 GIRLS TESTIFY THEY DANCED WITH WAR PRISONERS

Are Witnesses at the Court Martial Proceedings Against Cpl. Lee

DRINKING OF BEER

Buckingham, Que., March 28 — (CP) — Five Buckingham girls testified before an open court martial here last night that they had drunk beer and danced with German prisoners of war in a hotel at nearby Thurso, March 15.

The girls were among witnesses heard during court martial proceedings against Cpl. William Lee of Montreal, a member of the Veterans' Guard of Canada, who earlier pleaded not guilty to six charges arising from incidents which are said to have occurred here and at Thurso in connection with the conduct of German prisoners of war in his charge.

Trial of Pte. Nelson Skinner of Granby, Que., another member of the V.G.C. who faces similar charges, will open today.

Lucie Chenier, 16, of Buckingham, said she had met the German prisoners when a dance had driven to Thurso with them and four other girls the evening of March 15. She said she returned to Buckingham by train with the prisoners back to Thurso in a taxi with Mary Rose Dejeunesse.

Miss Chenier said Lee was at that time with a party of eight prisoners in a Thurso hotel, and that he and the others had been drinking beer.

The German admitted, she continued, that three of them had had double extractions of teeth that day and would not stand if they went back to the bush camp where they are employed by a paving materials concern. The party had remained at the hotel overnight.

Miss Chenier said she had danced with one of the prisoners, and that "he could dance well, too."

Later she went to a second floor room with two of the girls, the other two being in other rooms.

She testified that Cpl. Lee "wasn't drunk, but almost", he talked silly and didn't walk straight."

Another was shot down by Wing Cmdr. Keith Hampshire, an Australian, who was credited with total of 21 kills after more than 100 hours of uneventful night patrolling.

One raider crashed on the edge of Shoeburyness, Essex, and another of the crew was captured. Search for three others was continued today.

F/S. 'CURLY' CLIFFORD UNABLE TO CONTINUE AIR TRAINING

"The many friends of Pit./Sg./Observer Clifford, in the air service and civilian, will be sorry to hear that he has been forced to abandon his air-crew training. During his time at No. 5 E.T.S., Rivers, Belleville, he has taken the technical and theoretical knowledge and examinations in his stride. Following his posting from Belleville to Windsor, where he commenced his Elementary Flying Training, Pit./Sgt. Clifford displayed exceptional ability, but due to a physical incapacitation caused by aerobatic flying which brought on an air sickness condition, he was "grounded out" of air crew. Immediate plans are yet unrevealed to Pit./Sgt. Clifford and he does not know what will be his location among the many R. C. A. F. Stations in the country.

OPEN SPACES IN RIVER STEADILY GROWING

Continuous action of the elements is gradually hastening the destruction of the ice in the Bay of Quinte and in the Moira River with the result that open spaces are constantly increasing in size. Above the bridge in the Belleville section dam, the ice has practically all disappeared, but at the bottom with that adhering to the banks being all that is left of winter's grip. Below the lower bridge the open water channel is gradually widening and now comprises approximately one half the river width.

The open channel in the Bay of Quinte, now extending for a considerable distance west of the Bay bridge to a point approximately even with east end of the government dock. The open channel has extended its way eastward quite rapidly during the past few days, with the whole ice field gradually assuming a honeycombed appearance on the surface.

Southwest Pacific Strategy Discussed by E. H. Banks At Joint Meeting Kiwanis Clubs

E. H. BANKS

Press Representative of Canadian Pacific Railways, who spoke at the joint meeting of Belleville and Cobourg Kiwanis Clubs.

Press Representative of C.P.R. Tells Members Road Will be Hard, Long

MUSICAL PROGRAM

The fighting forces of the Allied Nations in the South-western Pacific must step by step recapture British Malaya—the Straits Settlements, Singapore, Penang, the Dindings and Malacca—in the same way that the Japanese conquered it, E. H. Banks, press representative, of the Canadian Pacific Railway told a joint meeting of the Belleville and Cobourg Kiwanis Clubs at the Hotel Quinte, Monday evening.

Speaking from 11 years' experience in the Mid-East, Mr. Banks indicated, that an attack on Singapore from the land would be harder than ever now that the Japanese have had time to increase and to bolster port's fortifications. "Simultaneously with the capture of Malaya by land, the Allied fleet should move into the South China Sea, an action which will mark the beginning of the end for the Japanese", he said.

Mr. Banks opened his address by referring to the Pacific Coast Allied plans for attack in the South East. Such theory, he declared, however were of two thoughts, the one which was favored by the late and the appointment of Lord Mountbaten to carry it out, calling for the establishing of a base in Burma, a base for carrying aid to China, the re-taking of Singapore and then the recapture of French Indo-China, Borneo, Java and Singapore. Mr. Banks said, that he concurred with the plan, which he knew and loved, although he thought, that the odds were slightly in favor of the Japanese as defenders. "However difficult the recapture of Malaya will prove", said Mr. Banks, "and make no mistake it will be extremely difficult, effort must be carried out in its entirety if China in the very near future is to be aided substantially in her great struggle".

500-Mile Front.

Mr. Banks informed his audience that British, French and Dutch troops are attacking the Japanese in Burma over a front of more than 500 miles with troops being dropped behind the Japanese lines by air to help build airfields so that troop reinforcements can be brought in by transport planes. He said that the attacks can be made from these new air fields on the rear of the main communications between North and Central China.

The other school of thought would be to by-pass Northern Burma being better to isolate it, than to risk terrific losses in capturing it. This could be done, thinks Mr. Banks, by combined air, land and sea operations. "Amphibious", said Mr. Banks, "could be the word, the Allies would make the push while the air port at Akyab would be enlarged. There is no doubt than an Allied victory in the present battle for Burma will go a long way toward altering whole picture of the war on the Pacific, for the retaking of Burma will mean, not only the re-opening of the Burma Road and the joining up to it of the new road which is being built from the India border, and the acquisition of the Burma oil fields from which Japanese cities can be easily supplied."

Dictated by Geography.

"This is just a sketch of the ities", Mr. Banks informed his listeners, "but all the time this war going on the Japanese would be strongly entrenched in the mountains of Burma and would be between the Chinese armies and the Allies. Any campaign in Burma is largely dictated by the geography of the country. Burma, whose total area, including the Shan States, approximates 261,000 square miles, has a population of nearly 17,000,000. The terrain is covered by parallel river valleys and separated by ranges of mountains covered generally with dense forests. The main communications, except for military roads constructed by the Japanese, have been and are by water".

Mr. Banks stated that he does not believe that India is now in any way seriously threatened by the present Japanese raiding thrust into the State of Manipur with the objective of India's capital, Imphal as the objective.

Facts of Indian Army.

Some interesting facts about the Indian Army were given by Mr. Banks. Its pre-war strength was under 200,000 men and it is now over almost 2,000,000, all of whom are volunteers, with recruits coming in at the rate of 70,000 a month. More than 300,000 members of the Indian Army have been sent overseas. Just as in the case of the Canadian Army, the number for mechanization was realized late and so India's military problem was to expand her forces and at the same time to revolutionize their training.

"It has been widely stated that the caution with which Britain has handicapped by very expensive bitter column", was the cry of Burmese. "This is not true," Mr. Banks said. "Burmese are a very intelligent people, they are practically all Buddhists, and one of the tenets of that religion is not to take life. They showed no inclination, therefore, to join actively in the defence of the country. They were lukewarm. In spite of a great propaganda, campaign on the part of the Japanese, the mass of the people were not pro-Japan in any way. There were, of course, exceptions and these men were high up in the government of the country," Mr. Banks finalized that one must be at least fair in making comparisons, that the criticism of the British control of the Far East, that the people of the country where the British flag flew did not enjoy freedom the Japanese. He labelled this criticism as "To say the least of it, misleading".

20 P.C. of World's Output.

"When the Japs captured British Malaya, they obtained possession of 50 per cent of the world's output of rubber, of the same percentage of the world's tin production, and 67 per cent of the world's output of rubber of the world's tin production, and 67 per cent of the world's output of rubber of the world's production. "The remaining 13 per cent comes from Ceylon, Southern India and Java.

Mr. Banks expressed the opinion that Malaya would be recaptured step by step, as the Japanese did, for as soon as the Allied fighting would, without a doubt, be harder than ever, now that the Japanese have had time to build and add fifth further to the portly fortifications. Added to this the Japanese will do much toward regaining British prestige in the East.

"It was an astounding error on the part of the Japanese that they did not capture Madagascar when they had the chance," said Mr. Banks. "Had they done so, Australia would have been in a terrible position, for the Japanese would have been in an ideal spot to attack her convoys as they rounded the Cape on their 14,000-mile route to Australia. To my mind, the Allies went a long way towards making Australia safe by the capture of Madagascar.

Failed to Take Ceylon.

"The successes of the enemy have been heralded far and wide, but what of their failures?" asked Mr. Banks as he concluded his address. They failed to take Ceylon, India, Syria, Irak, Iran, Australia, Egypt, Malta, Gibraltar, and, last but not least, they failed to all free countries of the world. They failed to stop the flow of munitions from Great Britain, thanks to the enormous courage and the endurance of the Royal Air Force and its uncanny and continuous shuttle service. Even in the days which will forever be remembered with gratitude by our forefathers and her descendants for her winning of the Battle of Britain, saved the world.

President of Belleville Kiwanis, Jack Wright, presided over the opening of the meeting and welcomed the visiting members of Cobourg club who made the trip by the day for the meeting, then turned the chairmanship over to Eddie Logan who presided over the balance of the program. J. J. Trudeau introduced the Cobourg guests and their visiting speaker was introduced by Cliff Harnage of the club appreciation expressed by Archie Harris.

Official welcome on the Cobourg members was expressed by Gordon Barclay who intimated that such inter-visiting is the best preparation for the furtherance of the fellowship and practice for which Kiwanis is noted. Response to the welcome was expressed by Ed. Cox on behalf of the Cobourg club. President of the Cobourg club, Bill McGuire, also spoke briefly.

In the person of Albert Hiscock of the Cobourg club Kiwanis band members were privileged to hear an outstanding pipe fine musician. Miss Barbara Diment delighted with a vocal number "Easter Parade," and with a special dance number. Harold Carruthers acted as song leader and Phil Hudgeon as pianist.

FO.F.C. Annand, D.F.C., Tells Rotary Club He Was 'Ditched' Twice Over Bay of Biscay

Wireless Air Gunner Made 21 Operational Flights Over Europe

TALK INTERESTING

Preliminary election of directors who will assume office in the Belleville Rotary Club on July 1st, 1940, conducted by members as the regular weekly luncheon meeting of the club, took place. Members voted for five directors and as is customary, those who received the highest ten votes will be placed before the meeting next week for final selection. The elected directors will then meet to choose their president and various other officers.

Plans for Rotary Children's Day to be held on Easter Monday when the children of members or their friends will be the special guests at the luncheon, A special children's program is being arranged by Mr. Mitchell.

Guest speaker for the luncheon was Flying Officer F. C. Annand, D.F.C., from No. 5 Initial Training School, Rivers, a veteran of 21 operational flights over enemy territory as a wireless air gunner with the R.A.F., and a former resident of Canada who is taking training as a pilot.

Twice "Ditched".

One of the first wireless air gunners to be trained under the Commonwealth Air Training Plan, F/O Annand has been in the Air Force since 1936 and has seen active operations with Bombing Command from the outbreak of war. He was twice "ditched" in the Bay of Biscay during a term of duty with the Coastal Command, the speaker related a varied career ranging from navigating tramp steamers in China to supplying guerilla fighters in the Balkans with munitions. Before the chute. He experienced the first days of the London blitz but stated "he'd rather be over London than the sea". He is a member of the Goldsmiths' Company.

He considered he was not get "ditched" in the Bay of Biscay were the result of engine failure in the Whitleys that his squadron were then flying. On both occasions the crews were rescued by vessels of the Navy. The speaker differentiated between the R.A.F. and the United States Air Force. American bombing was on the daylight precision bombing and as a result sacrificed bomb load for heavier armament. The R.A.F. then did nearly twice the job just the same," he said.

Preference was expressed for the R.A.F. rather than for the R.C.A.F. because the R.A.F. then was practically every part of the Empire are met, while only Canadians are in the R.C.A.F.

A former president of Rotary, Wright Allison (Stella), briefly introduced the guest speaker with the appreciation being expressed by Jack Ireland.

'Blinker' System Used to Warn Night Motorists

New traffic regulations went into effect at the two main Front Street intersections Monday night, when night blinker flasher combination lights were the only traffic regulators at the intersection of Bridge and Front Streets, as well as at the Victoria St., intersection.

However, the newly inaugurated night traffic regulations system was not entirely successful as the newly-installed flasher lights at the Bridge-Front crossing only operated for one hour, traffic and police had to return to the regular system of traffic regulations.

The new main street traffic regulations call for an amber or orange colored blinker or flasher light at the above two intersections from eight o'clock in the evening until the time in the morning, when on Saturday night, when the standard traffic lights will function until ten o'clock in the evening. Each morning the traffic will switch the night caution light off and return to the red, orange and green standard traffic lights for the day traffic. This new system was authorized by city council some weeks ago and went into effect for the first time last night.

At the intersection of Bridge and Front Streets, where the new traffic regulations were first the blinker lights only functioned to caution east-west bound traffic, no traffic signals being observed for north-south bound traffic whatsoever. The new system somewhat bewildered pedestrians as they approached the street crossing and observing vehicular traffic proceeding without coming to a full stop seemed somewhat confused. However, pedestrians will soon become accustomed with this new system, that has been adopted in many large cities. Simply To Caution.

The new traffic regulations, under the blinker or flasher system of one orange light, simply is to caution operators of motor vehicles to proceed with caution through the intersection. It was instituted to speed up traffic from eight o'clock in the evening until six the next morning only. However, on Saturday nights the conventional three traffic light system will continue until ten p.m.

Police authorities pointed out, however, that under the new system the Ontario Motor Vehicle Act provides that under such conditions the vehicle at the right has the right of way, as have the pedestrians. One motorist accidents and trouble lies entirely in the hands of the drivers with caution lights always being lit and visible, warned Chief Probert.

Says 2 Detectives Drank Brandy With Lonergan

By JAMES H. PORTERFIELD
(Associated Press Staff Writer.)

New York, March 27 (AP)—Two detectives who brought Wayne Lonergan back to New York from Toronto after his wealthy wife was slain here last October drank brandy with him on a train during part of the trip, one of the officers testified today.

The detective, William Prendergast, was one of several police officials placed on the stand by Defence Attorney Edward Brodrick in an effort to prove a defense contention that Lonergan was under duress when he allegedly made a statement that he killed the 22-year-old heiress.

Prendergast said Lonergan had three half-pint bottles of brandy in his bag, and that there was only about three-fourths full. The party consumed one full bottle, while travelling from Toronto and Port Erie, the detective said.

The partly-filled bottle subsequently was turned over to police, Prendergast said, along with personal effects in the bag, including a yellow rubber girdle. The other bottle was turned over to the District Attorney's office.

Witness Says Lonergan Not Threatened.

Prendergast insisted that at no time on the trip was Lonergan threatened as to what might happen if he failed to make a statement upon reaching New York. He said the only time the prisoner was handcuffed was while he slept in a hotel at Buffalo, N.Y., during a stopover.

As the trial entered its second week, Brodrick placed two Toronto detectives on the stand in a renewed fight to block admission of the unreported confession.

Brodrick, who contends the confession was obtained under duress, sought to show through the testimony of detective Sgt. Arthur Harris and detective Gordon Fenguson that Lonergan was denied food and subjected to long questioning without sleep.

Harris, who arrested the 26-year-old defendant the day after Mrs. Lonergan's bludgeoned body was found in her fashionable apartment last Oct. 24, said Lonergan slept all night in a Toronto police station Oct. 29.

Visited by Relatives.

Before being returned to New York City, the detective said, Lonergan was visited by his sister Mrs. June Cumming, and an uncle and aunt, and talked with them for about 20 minutes.

"Did you tell him the reason he was leaving Canada to return to was leaving Canada to return to New York City was so he could attend the funeral of his wife?" asked Broderick.

Enters Plea Of Not Guilty To Six Charges

Buckingham, Que., March 27 (CP) —Cpl. William Lee, of Montreal, member of the Veterans' Guard of Canada, pleaded not guilty today before an open court martial to six charges, arising from incidents alleged to have occurred here and nearby Thurso in connection with the conduct of German prisoners of war in this district.

The court then was adjourned until this afternoon.

Trial of Pte. Nelson Skinner, of Granby, Que., another member of the Veterans' Guard who faces similar charges, was adjourned until tomorrow morning.

The court martial was convened following reports that German war prisoners were permitted to drink beer in the Union Hotel, one of two hotels, drink beer, and pick up town girls.

Cpl. Lee was charged with neglecting to obey standing orders issued on March 15 at Thurso, as the most on Monday of my grandfather, Nathan Cox of my grandmother, Mary Jones lived at the corner of Bridge and John Streets and my brother Harry married Nettie Jones; they are both dead and lie in Belleville cemetery. English Triplets Born in Full View Of Movie Cameras

Sheffield, England, March 27 (CP) — England's newest triplets made their appearance in the world yesterday—in full view of grinding movie cameras.

First gasps of the two little girls and a boy were recorded by the cameras, but the mother, Mrs. Constance Hibbert, a miner's wife, wasn't in the performance. She declined an offer to appear in the film, even though offered a mask that would make her anonymous.

The film, prepared for instructional purposes in medical circles, was authorized by the minister after her doctor had told her last January that she would give birth to triplets. The babies, weighing 4, 5½ and 3½ pounds respectively, arrived at 20-minute intervals at the exact time predicted by the doctor. The boy was the heaviest. All are "doing well."

GERMANS BOMB HOSPITAL

Algiers, March 28. (CP Reuters) —German artillery pumped more than 30 shells into an American tent hospital on the Anzio Beachhead last night before dawn Sunday killing five soldiers and wounding 11, it was announced yesterday. All were sheltered in a tent which received a direct hit. The casualties brought to 33 killed and 74 wounded the number of American hospital patients struck by German bombing or shelling since the landing on the Beachhead was made.

OAK LEAF FOR MENTION IN DESPATCHES

Members of the three armed services who have been mentioned in despatches will soon be wearing the small bronze oak leaf pictured here. In the last war, those who were "mentioned" wore a palm leaf superimposed on service ribbons. In this war, since silver maple leaves are already issued to denote service overseas, the oak leaf is worn beside the service ribbon. The ribbon shown here is that of the Canadian Voluntary Service Medal. — (R.C.A.F. Photo).

Chas. F. Holden, Former Belleville Printer, Recalls His Early Days In Letter to Acquaintance in City

The old and familiar saying, "Dear to my heart are the scenes of my childhood," applies in truth to Mr. Charles Frank Holden, an old Belleville boy, who now lives at 366 Willys Parkway, Toledo, 12, Ohio. He is a retired printer and in a letter to Mr. George D. Wilder, also a retired printer in this city, Mr. Holden recalls the years he spent in Belleville and many of the persons whom he knew. His letter is interesting and many of the older residents of Belleville will enjoy reading portions of his letter which follow:

"I was born in Merrickville on April 3, 1861, and the earliest home I can recall was with my grandfather, Merrick Sawyer, who conducted a drug store on Front Street and lived on William Street, south of Bridge Street, on the east side and adjoining the property of the late Billa Flint, later St. Agnes School. No Policy Decided On Development of Municipal Airports

Ottawa, March 27 (CP) — The government has not yet determined a policy for post-war development of municipal airports, Munitions Minister Howe said today at a meeting of the Commons Railway Committee.

Airport development with government assistance during the war had been directed to meet war needs, the minister said.

The committee at its first meeting today elected Dr. J. P. Howden (L.-St. Boniface) chairman and heard the Trans-Canada Air Lines report read by the president, H. J. Symington.

Under questioning by A. M. Nicholson (CCF-MacKenzie) Mr. Symington said T.C.A. had, so far as was possible, carried out government policy on the extension of routes. Only delays had been in instances caused by difficulty in getting ground equipment.

Mr. Nicholson said he was concerned by applications of Canadian Pacific Air Lines for routes which, if licenses were granted, would leave only a few small gaps in a service competitive with T.C.A. He said he was anxious to know if T.C.A. was carrying out government policy in maintaining T.C.A. as the only mainline service.

"Isn't that a matter of government policy that is going to be discussed in the House?" Mr. Howe replied.

Mr. Symington said a new direct Winnipeg-Edmonton route to be flown as soon as ground facilities were available would also provide the shortest route to Alaska. It was expected this service would be in operation by summer.

Mr. Hansen asked for a report from Mr. Symington on the Empire Air Conference which he attended with Mr. Howe in London. Mr. Howe said Mr. Symington went as a government representative and not as T.C.A. president. The conference would come under discussion when civil aviation was discussed in the House.

There were no representatives of private enterprise at the conference?" Mr. Hansen asked.

"No, not from anywhere," Mr. Howe said.

IN these decisive months all Canada's effort is concentrated on one great objective—the attack that is to destroy the Nazi menace and all that it represents. Years of work have gone into its preparation. The best of our young men are staking their lives on its success.

We in Canada must support and strengthen this attack with all our effort. This one purpose must command our work, our minds and our hearts.

We must not permit any scramble for private gain or individual selfish ends, to distract us from our main task. If we concentrate on seeking, individually or jointly, higher prices, higher pay or higher profits, we shall be diverting our attention from the main task at this critical time. We shall also endanger the stability of prices which we in Canada have achieved after great difficulties—a stability that is essential to efficiency and fairness in war, and to peacetime prosperity afterward.

Our young men are fighting for a Canada and a world in which all men can have faith, hope and security. Each of them wants to come back to a job—or a farm—with a future. We at home must keep secure for them a strong and stable foundation on which alone a post-war period of promise and achievement can be built.

This advertisement is one of a series being issued by the Government of Canada to emphasize the importance of preventing further increases in the cost of living now and deflation later.

Mr. Churchill's Speech

The world which has listened to many broadcasts by Prime Minister Churchill on Sunday afternoon an address to the Empire and the Allied world which differed from previous addresses of his because the war has moved so much farther on towards the goal, the overwhelming of the enemy in a victorious triumph for the Allies. Times have changed since the last address of about a year ago and especially since the early days of the war in the spring of 1940 when his addresses were a call to high courage and steadfastness against the enemy. There has been a vast improvement, so steady that it has been the admiration of the United Nations everywhere the Allies are seen carrying the offensive against the Germans. The days of the gravest danger have passed and the British Empire and the rest of the United Nations stand ready for the supreme and final blows which will rock Hitlerism to its foundations and complete the overthrow of the enemy. Today the world is discussing post-war plans and sees the prospect of the triumph over the aggressor.

The broadcast was notable for the guarded reference to the invasion of overrun Europe. "I must warn you that in describe the next phase there will be many false alarms, feints and dress rehearsals . . . When the signal is given the whole circle of avenging nations will hurl themselves on the foe."

Another important point was the reference to the course of the war in the Pacific where successes of the Allies may progress more swiftly than has been expected because of the evidence of Japanese weakening under the shattering blows which have rained upon them. He gave the assurance again to the United States that Britain will be in the war until not only Germany but also Japan is defeated for Britain has "suffered from Japanese injuries even greater than those which have aroused the armed wrath of the American people."

He pictured the magnificent achievements of the Russian armies and the close approach to the Balkans by the Russian forces which have been the main cause of Hitler's approaching fall in those regions "with panic and frenzy" already prevailing in the Nazi satellite states.

The enemy could not find one word or thought to cheer the German aggressors for the address was built on the sound foundation of coming Allied victory.

Progress has been made in discussion of post-war plans but there will be no step taken in regard to post-war plans that will interfere with plans for victory, he said.

The speech came at a memorable time with the Russians crossing the line where Hitler began his aggression against Russia in 1941 and with the approach of the Red armies to the fringe of the Balkan states, and the preparation for the onslaught of the Allied Powers from the west against Germany.

Montgomery's Message

General Sir Bernard Montgomery the other day in London closed an inspirational address following his inspection of forces in Britain, with the words of Holy Writ, "Let God arise and let His enemies be scattered." It is in the spirit of the writer of those words that the British general used them and in the spirit of the British and Allied peoples as the war moves on towards its climax and final stage. He gave the assurance that "the promised land is not far off." While he could not say when the war will end, whether this year or next year, there is the confidence in victory and in the overthrow of the enemies of all that is right and just.

The words have a finality and carry an assurance of a great leader who has proven himself as one of the great masters in leadership and who is beloved by his men and by the people.

In the dress of General Montgomery there is the spirit of quiet faith of the ultimate triumph of the forces of right. To the British and other Allied peoples General Montgomery is one of the champions in the world's great crusade of justice and freedom against the monstrosity of Nazism and Hitlerism.

With General Montgomery the Allied world can look forward to the coming great endeavor with absolute hope in the righteousness of the United Nations' cause. His great army has the backing of the devoted home front which has provided unfailing support in the past and will continue to the end to give that support which will strengthen the arms of the brave men who will hurl against the enemy the mightiest resources of the world in human courage and material equipment.

The cause is a righteous one and the enemy must fail. That is the faith of General Montgomery and the Allies.

Sugaring

(Charles Malam, in the christian science Monitor)

This spout just fits the auger hole,
The way the maple fits the knoll,
The way the hillside fits the sky,
Tapping sugar maples, I
Get curious notions, on the still
High ridge that is my sugar hill.
The spout goes in to tap the tree;
The tree goes down by roots to be
A spout for all the hill, to bring
The inner sweetness that is spring;
The hill with roots of loam and slate
Is made for the maple to grow; the gale
Fits sungity to the earth, and so
May tap the world the way I go,
May reach the planet's inner flow,
May bring me China, before I know!

Jersey Cows in Arctic Circle

(By R.E.S. in the Simcoe Reformer)

Gradually we are coming to understand the Arctic better: dimly we are beginning to see its possibilities. Today the world is discussing post-war plans and sees the prospect of the triumph over the aggressor.

There has been a vast improvement, so steady that it has been the admiration of the United Nations everywhere the Allies are seen carrying the offensive against the Germans. The days of the gravest danger have passed and the British Empire and the rest of the United Nations stand ready for the supreme and final blows which will rock Hitlerism to its foundations and complete the overthrow of the enemy. Today the world is discussing post-war plans and sees the prospect of the triumph over the aggressor.

The broadcast was notable for the guarded reference to the invasion of overrun Europe. "I must warn you that in describe the next phase there will be many false alarms, feints and dress rehearsals . . . When the signal is given the whole circle of avenging nations will hurl themselves on the foe."

Another important point was the reference to the course of the war in the Pacific where successes of the Allies may progress more swiftly than has been expected because of the evidence of Japanese weakening under the shattering blows which have rained upon them. He gave the assurance again to the United States that Britain will be in the war until not only Germany but also Japan is defeated for Britain has "suffered from Japanese injuries even greater than those which have aroused the armed wrath of the American people."

He pictured the magnificent achievements of the Russian armies and the close approach to the Balkans by the Russian forces which have been the main cause of Hitler's approaching fall in those regions "with panic and frenzy" already prevailing in the Nazi satellite states.

The enemy could not find one word or thought to cheer the German aggressors for the address was built on the sound foundation of coming Allied victory.

Progress has been made in discussion of post-war plans but there will be no step taken in regard to post-war plans that will interfere with plans for victory, he said.

The speech came at a memorable time with the Russians crossing the line where Hitler began his aggression against Russia in 1941 and with the approach of the Red armies to the fringe of the Balkan states, and the preparation for the onslaught of the Allied Powers from the west against Germany.

Both motorists and pedestrians this year have reason to be grateful over the condition of the coming of spring. There has been no accumulation of ice on the roads and owing to lack of snow for the greater part of the winter no accumulation of dust and dirt was impossible. So the roadways have been more than usually clean consequently there has been no condition of splashing such as has been experienced in other years.

McCARTHYS GET V-MAIL

Said Mrs. McCarthy to Mrs. McGee:
"We've just got a letter from over the sea;
Twas sent by the radio, via New York.
It looks like a letter announcing the stork
Or a wedding, or lecture at Rafferty Hall,
The print is so fine and the paper so small.

"It's V-Mail they call it. Said I to my Pat:
'I haven't got eyes to read writin' like that.
I should think Jerry knows, and would keep it in mind,
Without glasses to read with I'm totally blind.
What's wrong with the boy that he's no more to tell,
With the war in full swing, than he's happy and well?"

"Come over and help me this letter to read,
But a glass that will magnify surely you'll need.
I've squinted, I've squirmed, and I've turned it about;
I've held it at arm's length and can't make it out.
It's printing on pin heads, by Gorry,' said Pat,
'But this V-Mail is better than nothing, at that!'"

LOOKING BACKWARDS

GLEANINGS FROM OUR FILES OF BY-GONE YEARS

20 YEARS AGO

MARCH 28, 1924

Captain Joseph W. Pagan died at his home on Dundas Street last evening. He was born sixty-three years ago in Ireland and lived here since he was a child. He sailed the Bay of Quinte and Lake Ontario for many years and at the time of his death he owned the two-masted schooner, "Grand M. Flier". He encountered many storms on Lake Ontario and had narrow escapes from disaster. He was highly esteemed and popular with many friends.

Mr. J. J. Wilder of Montreal was here to attend the funeral yesterday of his brother, the late W. J. Wilder, who died on Friday last, in his 74th year. Three of the late Mr. Wilder's sons were also here to attend the funeral, namely John F. Wilder of Rochester, N.Y., Mr. Ross Wilder and Harry Wilder, both of Detroit, Mich.

Mrs. J. C. Doran of Patterson, N.Y., is visiting her brother, Mr. William Harden, Sinclair Street.

Police Officer Thompson is again on duty after being laid up with a sprained ankle which he sustained while in the discharge of his duties.

Col. W. N. Ponton, K.C., and Mr. W. N. Hoyning, K.C., M.P., have been elected representatives of the Hastings Law Association to attend the meeting of the Ontario Judges' Association which is to be held in Ottawa on the 31st inst. Mr. W. G. Mikel, K.C., and Col. Ponton, K.C., will represent the Ontario Bar Association.

The first muster parade of the 15th Regiment for this season was held in the Armouries last night and was in every way most encouraging. There were seventy-nine men no parade being the largest number in years at the first muster. Lieut. Col. Marsh was in command.

Mr. Hugh Blair, barrister, who was for many years a resident of this city, is renewing acquaintances here. He is now living in Kansas.

Work will it do to attach hose to the hydrants and flush out the mains? It might make them better and it certainly could not make them any worse.

Mr. W. R. Cumming of Toronto, formerly a druggist here, is registered at the Quinte.

Airmen Recuperate In Luxurious Home

By KATHLEEN REX

(Canadian Press Staff Writer)

Vancouver, March 26—(CP)—Wearing comfortable grey flannels and blue jackets, 28 airmen lounge and rest in one of Vancouver's largest and finest homes, the former Mason Goodlad residence.

A crackling fire casts a rosy glow over the easy chairs, thick carpets and well-filled bookcases in the library where some of the men pass their time reading. Others stroll through the spacious gardens, work in the greenhouse or play a few holes of golf at the nearby club.

These men are the first patients of the R.C.A.F. convalescent hospital, first establishment of its kind in the West. When they come to live here, the boys not only shed their uniforms but they also doff their rank. Here there is none of the ordinary routine of convalescent hall, and all his comforts of a luxurious home.

These airmen are recovering from the grashes and illnesses that brought them out of action. But overseas casualties have not yet reached the hospital, the present patients are those who have been in accidents while on service in Canada or Alaska.

The home will accommodate 40 men and is staffed by 18 doctors, nurses, cooks, physical training instructors and others. The men themselves have started a greenhouse and tend the gardens and grounds. There is a dark room for photography fans, a workshop for carpenters and racks of new bicycles. Men and Mrs. R. H. Waldo will soon be out on the grounds of the home.

Canadian Scene

A Century Ago

By J. L. G.

Before the man-and-bucket brigade was made antiquated by the fire-engine, Canada's fine cities and towns were ravaged by conflagrations that were difficult to check. Church bells gave the alarm, but the suddenness of the outbreak, the utter and widespread ruin that ensued before intervention was possible, rendered the bells the knell of the beholders...Records tell us that in December, 1824, the business section of Montreal, the assembly of York was burned with its contents. At that time, Kingston was the town at that time it is remarkable that the fireproof buildings and valuables of the main building and south wing were saved.

York was destined to have its name changed to "Toronto" a few years later, in 1834.

Meanwhile, out West, the Chinook winds were panting through the Rocky Mountains, gradually taking up much of the moisture in a winter's snowfall. Then came long weeks of sun and warm winds, before great herds of cattle could be driven or pony to the scene of action. If a wanderer strayed, he was liable to put out a fire single handed making use of any water he could find to prevent secondary fires by sputtering the human. Only the problem of man solved the problem of extinguishing fire in a mountain top, the Rockies, and the Laurentian of the Slope. Close to each tank was a fire-service, forced water upwards to the next tank.

To Heck With' Neutrality

(New York Post)

Neutrality, neutrality, what is neutrality? We ourselves gave up the idea of neutrality in a war because we thought it immoral. Even when we started to lend-lease to the British we felt that we had to defend it. It is only a step from neutrality to isolationism, even the United States recognizes that. We leased Eire two ships at a time when shipping was the very life's blood. The object we hoped to attain was not neutrality—we wanted Eire on our side—but we didn't say that. But now that it is vital we have leased all Axis diplomats to clothe our military movements in diplomatic immunity. Eire's claim as a neutral she will not be told by Churchill. But Churchill has finally told Eire that neutrality for her is impossible. He has finally defined our rights in that clear light earlier, the Irish government would not have dared to say that she was a neutral and had her rights.

Special Oklahoma Election Watched

New York, March 28 (AP)—Democratic politicians whichedged the progress of a special Oklahoma Congressional election tonight said in the hope the outcome might give them some clue to the future course of the silent one in politics — President Roosevelt and Governor Thomas E. Dewey of New York.

These two, who have given no public indication they would be candidates, were chief beneficiaries of the meeting of Democratic primaries in New York today. A fourth term state of mind in Democratic delegates was being selected, with a large group representing six at-large votes to be picked at a state convention later.

Dewey was assured of the support of most of 85 district Republican delegates, and will have to be content if most of the eight to be elected at the party's state convention are Dewey supporters. Wendell Willkie climaxed his Wisconsin campaign for the presidential nomination with the assertion that the United States "is passing down in international."

Observing that Mr. Roosevelt and Governor Dewey have early in the year had laid down broad general principles of foreign collaboration, Willkie said: "At each successive step we have violated the very principles we have announced as principles for which we fight."

As instances, he listed the "Polish boundary question, the Vichy policy, the Yugoslav policy, the policy toward Italian fascists."

Columnist Says Income Tax Is Unfair to Married Men

One of those days a new Federal budget will be brought down. There still is time, however—if the matter has not been attended to already—to comb a glaring inequality out of income tax. It is the inequality that hides behind the meagre exemptions for wife and children, says H. L. MacPherson, columnist, in the Windsor Star.

As the tax stands at present it is discriminatory. Under it, single persons are the teachers' pets. This will be disputed, but it can be proved. Second on the list of favorites are the married men without dependents, who do not fare so well as the single men, but get a better break than the heads of families. The latter are the goats.

In the taxation field the income unpaid is a good tax. At least, it is one that can be applied with a high degree of fairness. It commands respect because it is graded according to ability to pay. Theoretically, that basic principle still is adhered to in Ottawa, but in practice it will be found that the Department of Finance has wandered away from it.

Cases Are Cited

Take, for example, the difference between the taxes paid by a single man earning $2,500 a year and a married man, no dependents, who has the same income. According to the tables on T1-Special, the single man pays $634, the married man $394, a difference of $240. Forced savings are not being considered in this instance because they are equal.

Of that $235, the sum of $150 is the allowance for the wife. That allowance can be considered as the higher normal tax the single man contributes. But the $235 is not the sum total of the difference in the ability to pay as between the two men. Account has to be taken of the additional cost of about $4.50 a week, a patently ridiculous conclusion.

Single Man's Clothes

The single man, of course, can raise the point that if some other person wants to be married, that is his hard luck. And from this he can argue that he should not have to pay more than his share of the family burden. But the $235 is not the difference in the ability to pay as between the two men. Account has to be taken of the additional cost of about $4.50 a week, a patently ridiculous conclusion.

The single man, of course, can raise the point that if some other person wants to be married, that is his hard luck. And from this he can argue that he should not have to pay more than his share of the family burden. But the $235 is not the difference in the ability to pay as between the two men. Account has to be taken of the additional cost of about $4.50 a week, a patently ridiculous conclusion.

The discrimination is most apparent, however, in the tax exemptions for children, which figure out to $108 each. Does the Department of Finance honestly believe that a child under the age of eighteen can be maintained on a paltry $108 a year, roughly thirty cents a day? Nearly everybody will eat up thirty cents' worth of food at a sitting, and look for more hair an hour later.

The married man who has two dependents, therefore, with a salary of $2,500 a year, is called on to pay $316 in Excess. That is just $108 less than the single man, and $183 less than the childless couple. There is a seeming discrimination in the three varying forced savings account for it. If T1-Special can be taken literally.

The simple fact, however, is that the difference between the ability to pay of the single man and the father of two is only $468, according to the reckoning. But the latter has three more persons to house, feed, and clothe. It would be a neat trick if he could do it on $468 a year, but he can't. His ability to pay is measured by much more than that. Yet he has to come across tat as if that $468 balanced everything.

The injustice of it is plain enough. The exemptions are meagre. The man with a family is called upon to make a greater sacrifice in his standard of living than the childless benefict, and a far greater sacrifice than the single man only by income tax calculations can a measure of fairness be restored to the income tax set-up. Even if the allowances for wives and children were doubled, the married man still would fare worst of all.

Should the exemptions be enlarged, some revenue naturally would be lost. There are lots of places it can be made up, however. The single man now, whatever he thinks about it, is not paying his share of the shot, and neither is the married man without dependents. Many of the men in the upper salary brackets in the trenches may can spare it; more easily than the low-salaried family head.

Take the case of a 24-year single man had paid his $624 in taxes and has accumulated $1,000 cash for himself. But after the father of two on that wage level has come across with $672 in taxes and forced savings he has only $2,068 left to himself, and that is the sum the family is not giving recognition to any kind of forced savings.

As the number of children increase, of course, the burden on the family grows greater and greater; the discrimination more pronounced. Take the case of the man who has an income of $50,000 and pays $20,000 in taxes. He has left $30,000, leaving him a neat balance of $15,175.00 for himself.

Tax Is Graduated

This sum, certainly, is ample to keep the family in food from day to the next. It may be doubted, however, that the tax to pay is sufficiently exploited. Certainly it is not being tapped as the low-salaried family must be tapped from one. It is wrong from the standpoint of the greatest generosity of sacrifice in that, but it's what we have.

The current income tax set-up plainly needs revision. The exemptions for wife and children are arbitrary and inconsiderate. The tax cannot be graduated without some relief we kinks that will make it bear down more heavily on some than on others. Find the kinks, the kinks are apparent, and can be straightened out. There should be no excuse for their perpetuation.

Paying forced savings is the equivalent of patriotism in these days of national crisis. The people have been generous in response to the call for forced savings. But a certain proportion of their money go into the Government's till. It is the general realization of the needs of the situation that probably averted protests against the tax. But they have been heard. But there is a rising tide of resentment now that cannot be ignored.

The War Today—
Balkan Powder-Keg Fuse Lighted, Nazi Defence in S. Poland Hopeless

By DEWITT MACKENZIE
Associated Press War Analyst

Herr Hitler will have to be quick on his feet to sidestep the fresh crises which are rushing at him in the Soviet and Balkan theatres.

The collapse of the army under Prussian Field Marshall Von Mannstein in the Russian Ukraine—in itself a great and bloody catastrophe—has developed two other extremely dangerous situations for the Fuehrer to handle. They are:—

1. The vote in Rumania, has been laid open to the onrushing Muscovites, and that means a new front for the Hitlerites to defend in the strategic Danubian basin. The fuse of the Balkan powder-keg has been lighted.

2. The defence of the present Nazi line in Southern Poland—one of the west-bound lanes which lead to Hitler's inner fortress and Berlin —has been rendered all but hopeless. His whole scheme for holding Poland and the Baltic states is thus in fresh jeopardy.

To Launch Drive Into Rumania.

Marshal Koveni's Russian army had no sooner slashed through Bessarabia to the Prut river, which is Rumania's frontier, than the Red artillery got loose with an intense barrage, signalling the intention to launch an offensive into Rumania proper. The beginning of that push, which is likely to drive another nail into Hitler's coffin, may even be under way as this is written.

In this connection the Soviet army newspaper Red Star made a comment which appears on the face of it to be of such significance that, I especially call your attention to it. Said Red Star:—

"For the Red Army there are no boundaries; her boundaries are victory, Berlin, and a straight-jacket for the mad German Valkyrie."

It's a Fable.

Intentionally or otherwise, this is an answer to the fable that when the Soviet forces have expelled the enemy from Russian territory, Moscow will make peace with Berlin and let the rest of the Allies fight it out with Hitler.

Up on the Southern Polish front the Russians have captured the important railway junction of Kamenetz-Podolsk—one of Hitler's strongholds. A little to the northwest another even more important key junction, Tarnopol, is surrounded and fierce fighting is proceeding.

Walls Will Be Rocking.

Some time ago this column suggested that readers keep an eye on Tarnopol and the advice still holds good. When Tarnopol falls, the walls of Jerico will indeed be rocking.

Quite as sensational is the Berlin statement that the Russians are massing troops east of Kovel—170 miles southeast of Warsaw—for a big offensive aimed directly at the Polish capital. Further, the Nazis say there's fighting inside Kovel—a remarkable statement in view of the fact Moscow doesn't even claim to have reached Kovel. One wonders whether the Hitlerites are preparing to evacuate the city and pull their line back, and take this method of breaking the news.

PREMIER DREW, E. B. JOLLIFFE WIND UP DEBATE

Second Division in Legislature Results in Victory for Government

NEW LABOR BILL

Toronto, March 28 — (CP)—Premier Drew and E. B. Jolliffe, C.C.F. opposition leader, will wind up the budget debate in the Ontario Legislature today with possibly a C.C.F. amendment to bring the third division of the session.

No word came from C.C.F. members as to whether an amendment is planned but opposition speakers have been critical of a number of budget points. Welfare and the government's attitude on the education-cost question have been particular opposition targets.

The debate was scheduled to end yesterday but the House became involved with bills. A C.C.F. attempt to block the government measure to set up provincially-administered health services produced the second division of the session.

The vote, first officially called by Mr. Jolliffe since he took over as opposition leader, was closest in years, the bill getting third reading by a seven-vote majority, 40-33. The Legislature's two Labor-Progressive members — J. B. Salsberg (Toronto St. Andrews) and S. (Toronto Bellwoods) voted with the C.C.F.

Only 10 of the Liberal members were present and they voted with the government, as did Adelaide Hepburn, former Liberal Premier who now sits as an Independent Liberal.

"Tee Conservative' Claimed

Mr. Salsberg criticized the budget as being too "conservative" and not "progressive" enough. "It did not take cognisance of the civil-servant salary question which he termed a 'horrible evil.' He said there were a number of civil servants in the Legislative buildings who had been working an hour extra every day for the past 18 months without extra pay.

Mr. Leavens denied charges made by A. H. Acres (PC—Carleton) that the C. C. F. had received $500,000 from the United Mine Workers of America during the last provincial election campaign. He said the amount spent by the C.C.F. to elect 34 members in the Legislature was only $20,230.01 and he challenged the Progressive Conservatives and Liberals to make statements on how much they spent and where their money came from. The C.C.F. funds came from the dime, quarter and 50-cent donations of supporters of the party, he said.

21 PERSONS DEAD

They brought out many bodies from the area around a tailoring near the centre of the building. The bodies were so badly charred that immediate identification was impossible. Eighteen of the known dead were men and three women.

Many Arabs Were Also Rescued.

Most of the tenants who escaped said they were still awake when they heard the alarm of "Fire" called through the halls.

All of the tenants agreed the flames apparently started in the rear of the second floor but said it spread so rapidly few were able to get to the narrow stairs leading out of the front of the building.

Two sailors, Seaman First Class Jean M. Speed and Seaman First Class Charles Wagner, told police they saw a man climb down to safety escape on an alleyway, leap into a car, and drive away.

The fire chief said several other small hotels and rooming houses in the San Francisco Bay area had been set ablaze by arsonists here recently.

Fire Marshal Frank Kelly said the landlady in a rooming house near the New Amsterdam Hotel had reported discovering a burning box of papers in a closet Monday, but was able to extinguish the flames promptly.

Last week across the Bay of Oakland, he said, arsonists followed a similar pattern in setting a series of fires in 11 small hotels. Several hours before the hotel fire police had broadcast a "pick up" warning on a man who had been seen in the vicinity of the earlier fires.

Munitions Minister Gives House Glimpse of Canada's Post-War Industrial Prospects

Mr. Howe Says Canadian Planes Will Fly Airways and Canadian Ships Fly the Seas

GREATER "CALL-UPS"

By FRANK FLAHERTY
Canadian Press Staff Writer

Ottawa, March 28—(CP)—Glimpses of Canada's post-war industrial prospects were given the Commons yesterday as seen by the man who heads the wartime industrial set-up, Munitions Minister Howe.

Without predicting the extent or form of future industrial operations he held out assurance that Canadian-made planes will fly the airways, and that Canadian-made ships will fly the seas.

He also announced the government will appoint a royal commission to study the whole coal situation with a view to evolving a National Fuel Policy, in the light of changed conditions created by the war.

In the midst of consideration of munitions and supply estimates, Labor Minister Mitchell rose to say that there will be "greater and greater" call-ups of men in the age groups liable to military service as the tempo of the war in Europe increases.

Answering Clarence Gillis (CCF—Cape Breton North), who said the attitude of sending men into the services, when they were laid off in the maritimes' plants was "callous," Mr. Mitchell said that the grand strategy of the war made it inevitable that industries would be closed down and others started.

The fact there was a selective service machine, that could transfer workers from one point to another was an indication "we are a long way ahead of the stage we reached in the last war."

Greater Call-Ups Promised.

"Let me say that I am responsible for the call-up of men for military service," he continued. "And let me say further, very frankly, that with the increase in the tempo in the war in Europe there will be greater and greater call-ups of men in the age groups liable for military service."

A staff of industrial engineers and men from the Labor Department were going through the Whole Industrial Structure of Canada in the last 12 months with a view to combing out industries to meet defence department needs.

(Mr. Mitchell told The Canadian Press after leaving his seat in the Commons that he did not wish to expand on his call-up statement. He said the men called up would not necessarily be those laid off in war industries.

Nothing Static.

Cffs said essential industries where key employees are granted deferments are being reclassified "all the time." "There is nothing static about essential industries. One industry might be essential one day and not the next."

No consideration had been given to cancellation of postponements, to the extension of call-up ages or to the lowering of medical categories.)

With a slim attendance just at the adjournment hour last night C. C. F. members forced a vote by appealing a speakers' ruling and lost.

The operation of the ships has resulted in the return to the treasury of $10,000,000 in profits from Park Steamship Company, the government-owned agency which arranges for their operation by commercial steamship companies.

Cost of Boats to Be Written Down.

"We expect that at the end of the war the cost of the boats will be written down very considerably and possibly some will be fully paid for," he said.

Departmental experts, he said, thought it unwise for Canada to go into the building of passenger or express freight ships as such ships in the past had usually required subsidies.

In both aircraft and ship construction, Mr. Howe said Canadian costs compared favorably with those of other countries.

At Prime Minister Mackenzie King's suggestion and in view of the fact that the Easter recess starts at the end of this week the House will sit Wednesday afternoon and take Friday night off.

Further supplementary estimates, totalling $2,754,162, and bringing the total non-war appropriations for the present fiscal year to $650,668,581 were tabled. The House will be asked to pass these before adjourning for Easter and also interim supply and war appropriation bills to enable the government to meet its running expenses for the first two months of the new fiscal year, starting April 1.

Swift through the Night

THROUGH the silent spaces of the night it comes to you . . . First a murmuring hum— then the deep, full-throated roar of a thousand horses passing overhead—and swiftly the throbbing drone fades out beyond the dark horizon.

It may be a T.C.A. or C.P.A. plane winging its essential load of mail and passengers to where they're needed quickly. Perhaps that motor drumming through the dusky air is victory bound, with a cargo of fighting men.

It's one of the marvels of our age—this compact engine unit with the power of a thousand or more horses. Without it —and the modern lubricants that keep it flying—neither speed and comfort and safety would be impossible.

Next time you hear that confident throb 'way overhead, remember that almost every airplane flying Canada's Skyways is lubricated completely or partially by aviation oils made in Imperial Oil refineries.

Night and day, from coast to coast, Imperial helps "keep 'em flying".

Women Scientists Aloft With R.A.F.

London, March 28 (CP)—Women scientists, the wife-sixth of the large body of scientists which is the research group attached to bomber-fighter and coastal commands of the R.A.F., as well as to the Admiralty, and the War Office.

Their work includes tests, observations and research problems connected with tanks, guns, aircraft, parachutes and the anti-gas-location.

If the problems they are tackling are "man's work" in the professional sense, then they are "women's work" in the sense of complicated bomber and coastal command aircraft, and the delicate operation of radio installations for the detection of U-boats as well as to make ballistic tests.

Women physicists are on duty fighting air raids over London to observe the workings of sck-sck defence as well as the properties of new explosives dropped on the city. They also conduct examinations of both damaged British and enemy planes.

"So he said, 'Well, you ought to be taken from this room and shot.' I asked 'Why?' and he replied: 'You missed him, didn't you?' "

Muscle Strain and Appendicitis

Mother often fears appendicitis when Johnny complains of pain in his right side, when the pain may really be due only to strain received in football scrimmage, or some other violent form of exercise.

The usual symptoms of appendicitis consist of pain in the lower right corner of the abdomen, with tenderness over the appendix and spasm or stiffness of muscles. There also is a slight fever and an increase in the number of white cells in the blood. In most cases, sickness to the stomach, vomiting, constipation, diarrhea or other symptoms may often be present.

Strain of the rectus muscle, according to Drs. Walter C. Reeves and Norman F. Richard of the United States Army Medical Corps, frequently occurs suddenly during vigorous exercise, especially jumping or climbing. The pain is caused due to the formation of a blood clot in the lower part of the rectus muscle is usually noted. The affected person is usually unable to bend his head forward onto the chest because of the pain it produces in the strained muscle.

In treating this strain, it is suggested that the patient be put to bed and given some pain-relieving drug; also that heat be applied to the muscle by means of hot water bottles, electric pads or hot, wet cloths.

As a general rule, the pain disappears within a week. Within two weeks the patient is able to return to his normal duties. The strain in the muscle may remain for three weeks or longer.

When the condition affects the rectus muscle on the left side, it usually is not confused with appendicitis; but—then it affects the one on the right side, the symptoms may be so similar to those of appendicitis that great care must be taken not to confuse one with the other. Of course, it is important that the correct condition be recognized, in order to avoid an unnecessary operation. However when appendicitis is suspected and the symptoms do not indicate that the strain that disorder is present, there should be no delay in having an operation carried out, since delay may be dangerous.

STARCH GIVES NEW LIFE TO GARMENTS

To keep blouses, skirts and dresses, too, fresh-looking always, don't forget Grandma's trick of starching them. When properly used, starch gives new life to the tiredest garment. Mix equal parts starch and cold water, pour into a pan of boiling water, stirring constantly. Cook two or three minutes; mixture turns transparent. A cloth placed over your hand when dipping made starch will prevent skin forming on top. Before starching, be sure all garments are clean and thoroughly washed first in good soapy-rich suds. If you want shiny gloss on collars, add a lump of butter the size of a marble to starch and cold water, before pouring the mixture into a pan of boiling water. And linens will have a nice sheen if you add a pinch of salt to starch mixture. This also prevents starch from sticking to the iron. For best results with delicate fabrics such as muslin, lace, etc., mix starch with milk instead of water or simply melt a little sugar in boiling water and add it to the rinse water. And here's a hint to war workers—a heavy starch finish on linen slacks or overalls not only keeps them clean longer, but makes them safer when working around machines.

The Marry-Go-Round

Love's Cash Value

You never know how much a woman values a man's love until she starts to run him for all-out. Mother does the. Then is begins to go up like a thermometer after the 4th of July.

The injured lady will always tell her court how her husband latter her around, or was unfaithful or took a woman's powder and then state that she considers the loss of his love and affection to be a hundred thousand dollars a year, more or less.

But I ask you if that sort of husband's love is worth all that cash, what is a kind, faithful, devoted husband's love worth? Don't answer! It makes me dizzy! At that rate, most of us who possess affectionate non-slidding husbands should be listed-in Bradstreet's.

As a matter of fact, nobody—man or woman—values real love highly enough, while he or she has it. Honest, genuine, devoted love is the kind that nobody seems to consider worth two white pennies—until it is lost, strayed or stolen. Then love is like sunshine, rain and most precious thing in the world.

Many a man's shining and unselfish love has been used by a light and frivolous woman as a means of extracting sables and diamonds. Many comes so easily that she undervalues it. It takes the kind of man who keeps her worried and wondering to make a stupid woman see the value of love first.

And just as often, the steadfast, radiant devotion of a splendid woman has been used by a thoughtless, selfish man as a sop to his vanity—and then carelessly strewn over or trodden all over like a worthless rose petal. Such a man will go beserk and commit all sorts of folly, the "love" of such a man who never loved anything but himself and his good looks.

And a girl will sob her heart out for the "love" of a cheating playboy, who never loved anybody on earth, except himself. It just does not pay to cheat. Why is it always the erring husband on whose love the girl in the end—finds—that?

Strange how little we value the love that causes us no grief, but the love that we are sure of. And how we overrate the "love" that keeps us in a misery of doubt and uncertainty. Because love is one thing on earth that love should bring us is happiness and peace-of-heart.

Love is like your top-hair or a good tooth. Either you've got it—and it's priceless—or you haven't got it and it has no cash value—to you or any man.

Listen Sister: Be a Madame Curie and if you are lucky enough to find real love—or radium—cherish it as you would the Hope Diamond. Don't trade it for a string of glass beads!

Advice to the Lovelorn

By BEATRICE FAIRFAX

In Destroying Her Son's Marriage, What Will This Mother Accomplish?

Dear Miss Fairax:

Is there such a thing as a mother loving an unworthy son so much she's willing to destroy his marriage to have her way? My mother and I were devoted. She didn't want me to marry anybody, and for that reason didn't like my wife.

Now that I'm in the service, she continually writes me that my wife is stalling other fellows. I expect a 19-year-old girl never to go out to any place of entertainment. I understand that my wife doesn't go out unless with a crowd of women. She loves me, whom I know. But these letters are causing trouble.

What is it—just maternal jealousy, or, what is harder to believe, is my mother just a mischief-maker?

S. P. G.

Maternal jealousy has wrecked a good many marriages. When the result that the young man has frequently found himself between a crying pan into the fire. Jealousy may often prompt a woman to interfere with her son's first choice. His second choice may be more worthy, with the result that the bond between mother and son is broken and there is no love lost in the domestic circle.

Tell you mother not to write you any more letters about your wife's shortcomings and that you believe in her absolutely.

She Doesn't Want People to Think They're In Love

Dear Miss Fairfax:

I've been engaged since Christmas, to a girl I've gone with for three years. We get along fine most of the time, but when the rest are around I'm confused with apprehension that she doesn't want anyone to think she cares for no one in-law?

MUSTARD POULTICES

GREAT HELP IN NURSING LITTLE KIDDIES

ORIGINALLY of Lancashire, England, Mrs. W. A. Potter, now of Swift Current, Saskatchewan, says that in her estimation the mustard is no household remedy that takes the place of mustard. She has used mustard in many ways to help combat various ailments among her own six children and always with good results.

Chest and Bronchial Colds

"I have used mustard frequently," said Mrs. Potter, "to help relieve chest and bronchial colds in the case of adults, both men and women. These troubles can be very aggravating but I have always found that relief comes much more quickly if mustard poultices and foot baths are used. I can say quite definitely that the use of mustard helps to make all such troubles much less formidable." Mrs. Potter concluded by saying, "I would never 'think of being without a can of mustard in my home."

Always Buy Pure Mustard

No better proof of the fine medicinal properties of mustard exist than the fact that thousands of people like Mrs. Potter use it year after year with excellent results. Keep mustard in your home—always ready for first chills, complete baths and mustard poultices or plasters for relieve chills, colds, or when you feel depressed by Grippe or some other winter illness. Use it to help relieve pains of Neuralgia, Rheumatism, Arthritis, Neuritis, over-tired muscles, etc. Call a doctor promptly if symptoms are serious.

ALLIED ARTILLERY BREAKS UP NAZI CASSINO ATTACK

Continue to Hammer Two Hotel "Key Points" of German Defences

AIRMEN RAID BRIDGES

By RICHARD G. MASSOCK
Associated Press War Correspondent

Naples, March 28 — (AP) — Allied artillery broke up a German attack north of Cassino and continued to hammer the two hotel "key points" areas of the German defences with long the rubbed town, headquarters announced today.

The Nazi attack was broken up on the road from Terrelle, which lies about four miles northwest of Cassino. The Germans replied to the shelling of the Hotel Continental and Des Geneys with a heavy bombardment of Allied positions south of the town.

Meanwhile, it was disclosed that three small German attacks of platoon strength on the left side of the beachhead south of Rome were beaten off Sunday afternoon. All the Germans remained on the defensive in that sector. Six different patrol clashes were reported in the beachhead, mainly in the Cisterna and Carroceto areas.

Gunfire diminished in the lower Garigliano sector of the main 5th Army front, but patrols clashed at several points. The Germans shelled the Cregnano area of the 8th Army front, but that sector also was relatively quiet except for patrol clashes near Tollo and Arielle, north of Orsogna.

In the air, heavy bombers struck at rail bridges at Viterbo and Orvieto and Terni, Stefe Bagni yesterday while fighter-bombers attacked airfields at Siena and Grosseto and lashed at shipping off the Italian west coast and the Dalmatian shore.

Allied planes flew some 1,400 sorties, with fighters swarming on patrol over the Rome area, the communique said. About 65 German planes were reported active.

Two of the enemy craft were destroyed for a loss of three Allied planes.

Allied artillery, bearing the brunt of the battle on the 5th Army front for the second straight day, consistently battered" the Continental and Des Roses hotels, a military spokesman said. Bursting shells also started a fire in a German dump south of Cassino.

Attack Rail Tracks

Strong formations of fight bombers and dive-bombers attacked railway yards, warehouses and factories at Bette Bagni, on the northeastern outskirts of Rome. Medium escortists of Spitfires bombed a railroad bridge at Fogliano, hitting a 40-car train. Other mediums struck again at a railroad bridge at Pand on the east coast 25 miles northwest of Ancona.

Medium formations also bombed railway bridges at Marsciano, 15 miles north of Rome, Perugia, 11 miles farther north, and Grosetto, 90 miles northwest of the capital, hit at a railroad bridge 35 miles southwest of Ancona, and scored a direct hit on a power house near San Valentino, southwest of Pescara.

Setting Back Date for Payments On '43 Income Tax Relief to Many And Help in Victory Loan Campaign

Victory Loan committeemen in the area viewed with favor today the oversight action of the Federal Government in setting back to August 31st the date for payment of the amounts owing on 1943 incomes. According to previous regulations income tax returns had to be made by April 30th and fears that this would interfere seriously with the Sixth Victory Loan campaign were widespread across the country.

"It will indeed be very helpful to the Sixth Victory Loan and will assist us immensely in attaining the county objective," stated J. J. Trudeau, chairman of the Hastings County Victory Loan Committee, today when asked of his opinion by the Ontario Intelligencer. "Committees of people on the street also seem to be favorable to the action as many indicated they could not it was stated.

see their way clear to make the income tax return and purchase Victory Bonds at the same time." Local income tax officials had no comment to make on the change in the date of payment of owing tax on 1943 incomes but agreed that the change would help materially in a direct bearing on Victory Bond sales. However, publicity was also a relief for many persons," stated the district income tax inspector, Mr. Gilmore, "and it will undoubtedly have the desired effect on bond sales."

Although the date for payment of accounts owing on 1943 incomes has been set back to August 31st, local income tax officials reminded that income tax returns must be filed by the former date—April 30th. If returns are not filed by that date tax payers will be penalized,

Committee Named To Meet Members Of Fire Department

Despite the fact that the Council was not adjourned until nearly seven o'clock, the session was one of the shortest of the year due to much of the time being taken up with hearing of the auditor's report in committee before the regular session of Council. Mr. McFadden, the auditor, presented his annual report and discussion was held on several points in committee and it was agreed will likely come to the council in the near future. In Council Mr. McFadden's report was received and adopted.

Ald. Woodley, insistent, that the members of the Fire department be given an increase in salary, the Fire Chief and Deputy Chief to be given $50 a year and the remainder $100 per month effective 1st January, brought a recommendation that a committee be named to meet with the members of the department and report back at a special meeting of the council.

Ald. Woodley, insistent, that the members of the Fire department be given an increase in salary, the Fire Chief and Deputy Chief to be given $50 a year and the remainder $52, again brought a recommendation that a committee be named to meet with the members of the department and report back at a special meeting of the council.

Ald. Chamberlain withdrew his amendment.

Continues Discussion

Ald. Harvey continued the discussion, stating that the Council had not received any requests from any other department for an increase in salary and that the council at the present time was dealing specifically with the fire department.

Ald. Armstrong—"We are only putting the key in the lock if we grant this increase and I am sure the committee will take up with the firemen all angles of the case".

Ald. Clapp:—"The Public Works Department employees has received an increase of $128.40 since the war started and the firemen $200. I think the proper way to do this thing is to readjust the salaries as the former limits and give a full cost of living bonus, approximately $19.50 a month. That's only democracy". This ended the discussion and the committee which follows:

It was recommended that the Mayor be instructed to request the Public Utilities Commission to investigate the possibility of having power restrictions regarding street lighting lifted, if in their opinion it is advisable, and that they request the Power Controller to allow full street lighting in the city of Belleville. The city will purchase 1,000 watt lights at a price of 75 cents each and that the City Solicitor prepare the necessary agreement. A committee of Aldermen Armstrong, Chamberlain, Trudeau and Clapp was appointed to investigate the purchase of a new concrete mixer. The City Engineer was requested to procure names of those requesting lots for garden purposes and this lots be supplied to citizens at his discretion and that the engineer be requested to submit his recommendations to the council.

Named as Delegates

Alds. Trudeau and Woodley were named as delegates to attend the West War Area Planning Conference to be held in Toronto on April 14 and 15. The author was directed to apply to the Department of Municipal Affairs and if they deem it necessary to apply to the Ontario Municipal Board on behalf of the City of Belleville for permission to use the surplus now held in the Sinking Fund for the purchasing of additional land, up in an amount not to exceed $10,000, Roy Tracey's claim for $100 damages to roof of field near the Old Rubber Plant at the same rental as last year, was referred to Board of Inquiries Ald. Hyde wished to know what progress had been made from Salvage and Ald. Clapp stated that letters and telegrams were received from M. F. Duff, the treasurer, he would communicate them and distribute them to the various charitable organizations, who were to receive donations. Ald. Harvey stated if it had been considered to have a fire station in the vicinity of the area on Front Street to take care of the double building. Ald. Armstrong stated it had been considered.

There were three by-laws passed for the transfer of deeds. There were no motions or notices and the council adjourned.

EMPIRE PRESS UNION TO MEET

35th Anniversary Dinner Will be Addressed by Lt.-Col. J. J. Astor of London Times

Toronto, March 28 —(CP)— The 35th anniversary of formation of the Empire Press Union, one of the Canadian section will be marked here Wednesday night at a dinner to be addressed by Lt.-Col. J. J. Astor, publisher of the London Times and president of the E. P. U. council.

Principal at the dinner will be three charter members of the Canadian section, J. A. Ford, formerly with Daily Star; P. D. Ross, Ottawa Journal; and M. E. Nichols, Vancouver Province.

The Empire Press Union was founded in 1909 in London, at the first Imperial Press Conference, following a visit to Canada that formed the same year with the late Lord Atholstan, then owner of the Montreal Star, as its chairman. The present chairman in Canada is Senator W. Rupert Davies of the Kingston, Ont., Whig-Standard, Commanding Link.

Aim of the E. P. U. is to form a connecting link between the press in various parts of the Empire. There are sections in Australia, New Zealand, South Africa and India as well as Canada.

One of the Union's principal accomplishments was the establishment of an Empire Press cable rate of two cents a word—"Press penny-rate" to the newspaper business. But while the rate is in effect there have been difficulties in obtaining full benefit from it because of wartime congestion of transmission channels. Now the E. P. U. is urging upon the United Kingdom government the need for speedy provision of adequate facilities "to rectify the state of affairs which is... is deplorable."

Telex-Empire News Problems

Besides dealing with problems of intra-empire news transmission, the E. P. U. council is interested in such matters as wartime censorship, the obtaining of privileges in the United Kingdom for Empire correspondents (particularly war correspondents), news broadcasting, copyright, and the interchange of news among Empire countries.

Early in the war it did good work in ironing kinks out of the press and censorship bureau of the British Ministry of Information. It has arranged press conferences for Empire correspondents with British Cabinet ministers and visits to British war plants.

Crew of Bomber Bail Out Near Springbrook

The crew of a large R.C.A.F. bomber from Malton are believed safely bailed out of their plane when the pilot last was heard from about 1.45 o'clock early Monday morning. The crew "hit the silk" at Stirling and Springbrook near Springbrook, while the pilot remained with the plane in an effort to make a forced landing on Stoco Lake. However, visibility was so poor he was forced to gain elevation and later himself bailed out as the plane crashed into a complete wreck on the east boundary of Huntington Township, nine miles east of Tweed.

Chief J. C. Hayes of Tweed responded to a call, where the pilot landed and escorted him to Tweed, from where he was returned by motor to Malton. The other four occupants, who landed near Springbrook, were taken to the Trenton air base and later by motor to their home base.

The pilot informed Chief Hayes he lost his bearings in Monday morning's heavy snow storm, which night manoeuvres out of Malton. His radio failed to function and his efforts to locate the R.C.A.F. radio beam at Stirling also failed in the blinding snow storm. His efforts to locate the Trenton air field was also fruitless before he gave the order to "hit the silk."

When the large bomber was located nine miles east of Tweed it was a complete wreck, but fortunately had not struck or damaged any property buildings. The pilot stated visibility was till during the height of the storm.

Yates, M.C., V.D., of Belleville.

Each of the officers had had direct association with the H. and P.E., with Col. Yates being the present commanding officer of the regiment's overseas battalion.

Associated with the regiment at the outbreak of the war Brigadier Graham went overseas in 1939 with the rank of major and was promoted to rank of lieut.-col. and P.E. He commanded his unit when it went to France in 1940 and later took part in both the Sicilian and Italian campaigns, winning the D.S.O. as a colonel. He was then promoted to colonel on the 1st Brigade in Italy and for his action on the Italian front was given a bar to the D.S.O., won in Sicily. He has now returned to Canada to assume the post of deputy chief of General Staff.

From the point of service, possibly the oldest officer to attend the gathering was Col. Smith, who joined the 21st Battalion overseas in 1915 following the First Great War and succeeded Col. Ponton as commanding officer of the H. and P.E. Col. Ponton later resigned his command to Lieut.-Col. Yates, taking command of the 8th Infantry Brigade. Col. Yates has twice been in command of the regiment.

At the conclusion of Col. Yates' first period as commanding officer of the regiment, he was succeeded by the late Col. A. Adams of Picton, who was in turn succeeded by Col. Donnan who has also served two terms as commanding officer of the H. and P.E. Col. Donnan's term of office was interrupted by the 1st contingent in 1939 under the command of Lieut.-Col. Thurston Young, who was invalided home early in 1940.

New Avro York Good Transport

London, March 28 (CP)—The 30-ton Avro York, Britain's largest and most modern transport aircraft is regarded in aviation circles as the utility model of a rolling, comfortable, post-war passenger-transport plane capable of covering long distances with 50 to 60 passengers.

Commercial counterpart of the famous Lancaster four-engine bomber, the York is doing a war job mainly as a freight carrier. Improved post-war models are expected to have a pressure cabin for high-altitude flying.

The York already has made its first return flight across the Atlantic, on the return trip from Canada last November it maintained an average of 265 miles an hour and completed the crossing in 10 hours, winning the D.S.O.

Like the Lancaster, the York has a wing span of 102 feet but its length, 78 feet, is greater. A high wing machine with three tails, it can carry in its maximum freight load of 10 tons, light tanks, four guns, a complete Hurricane or Spitfire dismantled. Its flying range is more than 3,000 miles and its top speed more than 300 miles an hour.

War Industries Ladies Cage Title Won by Alemite Girls In Two Games Over Reliance Win Second Game of Series Monday Night by 36-10 Count

SUCCESSFUL YEAR

Alemite lassies won the championship of the Belleville War Industries Ladies' Basketball League in straight games after winning last week Coach Frank Martin's Alemite lassies were on to prove their cage superiority and capture a second, in the best-in-three series, by overwhelmingly defeating Reliance 36 to 10 in the second and final game at the Y.M.C.A. Monday night.

An overflow gallery saw the "Dust-enders" dominate play last night in the roughest tussle of the season when officials meted out 16 penalties, nine imposed on Reliance and seven to Alemite although many more could have been inflicted without prejudice. Alemite led by the wide margin of 21 to 6 at the halfway mark.

After scoring the opening basket it was Dot Ronsky, Marion Sainsbury and Betty Gilbert who rapidly headed the 1944 champions on an initial period attack by ringing up three baskets each, while Arlie Gilbert was the only Reliance player to sink a single ringer in this period for the losers. Arlie getting two baskets and two foul shots accounted for the six points registered by the vanquished.

In the second half the winners' scoring threat shifted to Ruth Oliphant, who raced through for three baskets, while the veteran Marion Sainsbury showed the advantage of years of championship play by registering a brace, giving Marion Salisbury ten points in all enough to head all scorers of the night. Ronsky was next with nine while Betty Gilbert rang up seven. Arlie Gilbert notched six of Reliance's ten points, while Alemite kept Kay Coathup, Reliance ace scoring threat, completely from the score sheet last night with some strong defensive measures.

With close ranged checking on the part of both squads the teams were naturally guilty of some poor marksmanship throughout. Alemite out-scored the losers 15 to 4 in the last half to win the championship in the league's first year of operation.

GENERALS WIN 7TH JUNIOR TITLE IN SUCCESSION

Defeat St. Mikes 2-0 to Win Best-in-Seven Series Four Games to One

FROOD MINERS WIN

By The Canadian Press

Oshawa Generals last night shut out Toronto-St. Michael's 2-0 in the fifth game of a best-of-seven series for the Ontario Hockey Association junior A title. The victory gave the Generals the series 4-1, and the right to represent Ontario in the Memorial Cup playoffs.

The Toronto collegians held off the Oshawa attack through the first period and well on towards the end of the second frame, but Bill Reinhardt slipped through the Toronto defence and scored the first goal on a rebound shot by Bobby Love. In the third period, Ken Smith added the second goal, after he broke away from a ganging attack by St. Mike's.

Generals now will meet the champion of the Ottawa district in the Eastern Canada Memorial Cup semi-final.

In the senior hockey race, Sudbury Frood Miners, who defeated Hamilton Aces last week, took a one-game lead in their best-of-five series with Hull Volants in the Eastern Canada play-down semi-final, defeating the Volants 5-4 in overtime. The first game of the series resulted in a 4-4 deadlock.

The Ontario Hockey Association junior 'B' final series opened last night at Toronto with Barrie Colts taking a one-game lead in the best-of-three round. Colts turned back Toronto St. Kits Oaklands 5-4 in overtime in the first game.

Bloomington, Ind. — (AP)—Members of the Indianapolis Reds' squad in training here are being fed a banana split by the ton course of their evening meal in the Indiana University field house following the day's workouts.

Lakewood, N. J. — (AP) — First-baseman Phil Weintraub returned yesterday to the New York Giants' camp from Chicago where he had been turned down for military service.

PREMIER TAKES REFUGE

Istanbul, March 28 —(AP)— Premier Nicholas Kallay of Hungary has taken refuge in the Turkish Legation at Budapest since the German invasion of that Axis nation, it was reported here last night. The suspension of official functions here was announced by the Hungarian Consul General, Denov Ukvary. He said "events of the last few days deprived Hungary of her political freedom."

Toronto, March 28 — (CP) — If H. H. L. scouts get wind of that old timers game played in Windsor they probably will be right around with the contract forms to sign up their contract forms to sign up some of the old hopefuls. Among those turning out for the war charity game were such venerables as John Ross Roach, stonewall goalkeeper of a past generation, Lorne Duguid, Hap Emms, Frank Carson, Mickey McGuire and others. The veterans tied a city league team 8-8.

They didn't exactly play like youngsters, but they surprised the fans by their sprightliness. Roach was handed an elaborately-wrapped bottle of liniment just before the game, but went out to block pucks with some of his old-time abandon.

Quipper John after the battle, "I was just warming up tonight. I now am ready to step back into the big time."

If the manpower problem gets any worse the old-timers may yet be prevailed upon to turn out. They have the experience anyway . . .

Old Friends Rest.

St. James Candidians, Manitoba junior champions, had their knuckles rapped by President Frank Sargent of the C.A.H.A. when they attempted to add four new players to their lineup for the Memorial Cup play-offs. Commented Herb Manning in the Winnipeg Tribune, "The report stopped in just in time. If St. James is destined to progress any further in the playdowns, it will be nice to recognize some of the boys on the team as having actually played a bit of hockey in these parts."

Incidentally:

The big Royal Canadian Navy training base in Cornwall, Ont., N.S. now has its own artificial ice rink, capable of seating 2,000 fans. Plans were raised almost entirely by the young sailors in training . . . the Sarnia Senior Hockey Federations have disbanded and a new Sarnia Minor Athletic Club was formed in their stead. The new group will operate athletics of all kinds in the junior, juvenile and bantam classes . . . Eddie Bodin, the Winnipeg lawn bowler, toppled an even 1,000 pins in four strings to become the first man to roll the highest ever bowled in Winnipeg . . . The Brantford Amateur Baseball Club will be followed during the Military District 13 (Alberta) and Pacific Command boxing tournament in Vancouver next month. Reds will be in the ring, and no cheering will be allowed except between rounds.

New York, March 28 — (AP) — Shades of Rube Waddell, eccentric southpaw pitcher for Philadelphia Athletics back in the 1900's. Al Gettel, Giant rookie, came to camp up with a set of spring training rules, one of which set a nickel fine limit on poker games.

If this rule spreads to other major league clubs it will be tough on the more experienced hands who have learned the hard way that "a buck a day is the limit" game.

Other rules, as set forth by manager Connie Mack, call for a midnight curfew, no serious drinking; compulsory appearance at meals (do they need a rule for that?). Those who get caught will be fined according to the player's salary.

"The boys themselves wanted the rules," explained Mr. Mack. "They seem to feel we'll have a pretty good ball club this year and they wanted an understanding that would protect the chances of the club as a whole."

News from the other camps included:

Cairo, Ill. — Catcher Ken O'Dea reported to champion Carbondale. Catcher Gerald Burmeister now only unaccounted-for absentee.

Evansville, Ind. — Veteran Roger Cramer expected to return to centre field for Detroit, sterling Chuck Hostetler to right.

Muncie, Ind. — Pirates' mound staff now down to eight with loss of southpaw Wally Hebert.

New York, March 28 — (AP) — Fuel for a small fire . . . after looking in on the recent basketball conchers' conference and seeing 69 names registered, this dept. again is puzzled by the fact that the so-called national game of the United States doesn't get the same sort of attention from the colleges . . . as far as we can learn, the baseball and as one of the court tutors pointed out: "Perhaps in a few colleges that pay attention to baseball, they haven't full-time coaches. They just pick someone who isn't busy and give him the job on the theory that anybody can be a baseball expert." . . . We suppose those are the same folks who claim there's no interest in college baseball.

DAY WILL STICK WITH SAME LINEUP

Toronto Leafs Ready for Game That Means Practically Nothing

Toronto, March 28 — (CP)—Toronto Maple Leafs prepared today to make a next-to-last effort which stand in the fourth game of their Stanley Cup semi-final play-off series with Montreal Canadiens.

While defeat would not put Leafs out of the running — Canadiens hold a 2-1 edge in the best-of-seven series — it would leave them with the necessity of winning at least one of the taking three straight games from the Montreal champions on Maple Leaf real ice.

Coach Clarence (Hap) Day looked forward to tonight's game with confidence. "I think we'll win it," he said, adding that he would use the same lineup as that which was defeated 2-1 by Canadiens Saturday night.

Coach Dick Irvin of Canadiens, who also said he planned no lineup changes, said: "It's going to be a tough game. It's the tie for Toronto and the breaks will decide it. Leafs have been playing well in this series, better than we thought they could play."

The two clubs were treated over the weekend by Rube Bannister of Toronto for injuries suffered Saturday night probably will be in action, said Irvin, but they are Bill Ezinicki, who suffered a Charley Horse, and Ray Getliffe, whose ankle was injured.

SPEEDING FURGE

London, March 28 —(AP)— The Budapest radio yesterday forecast a speedier fine purge of German-occupied Hungary's Jews and anti-Nazis. CASUAL COMMENT

By R.J.C.

Not Too Personal

As the maid placed the breakfast things on the table, her employer noticed that she was looking happier than usual.

"You seem pleased about something, Rose," he said. "What is it?"

"I went to the dance last night," she told him, "and because engaged to a window-cleaner."

"I'm pleased to hear it," said the employer. "What's his name?"

"I don't know," replied the girl, rather haughtily. "One can't begin straight off asking personal questions like that."

Key to the Future

Up in Sarnia the sport moguls have abandoned their senior hockey, football and baseball federations for the duration of the war. Instead the "Tunnel Town" sport heads have lumped a program to promote sports on a large scale in the midget, bantam and juvenile series, that is to say provide a set program of all sports for the benefit of all boys up to and including 17 years of age. Adequate supervision and coaching is to be provided and leagues or groups set up all over the City of Sarnia for baseball, hockey, basketball, softball and no doubt lacrosse. Here is an infantile system to insure the future of sports talent in any small city. At least the "Tunnel Town" sport heads are making a move in the right direction at least give the less aged boys of the community an opportunity to play and learn the fundamental principals of competitive team sports. Here in Kingston we could well be put into practice right here in Belleville where it is sorely needed.

Sad News

From Fred Craig's Peterborough Examiner column comes a hint we don't like far from the target. Fred says: "Has the drive that was aimed to put a modern sports arena and hockey cushion in a prominent place in Peterborough's post-war construction program bogged down? We have been asked that question and all that we are able to answer was that if it hasn't the progress that has been made must be the only thing in the nature of a military secret for nothing is being given out. For weeks this column knows nothing was done because the committee found it impossible for any one to take the responsibility of chairman. The result has been that all the initial enthusiasm engendered when the project was first announced last fall has been allowed to leak away and before long it may be found that the chance to get the campaign under way with plenty of steam and momentum has resulted in us missing the boat entirely. We hope not. An arena is a "must" so far as sport development is concerned and every effort should be made to see that one of the community's greatest needs is provided. But frankly we don't like the policy of drift that seems to have set in. What is the matter with the public spirit that has been shown by the citizens of Welland who have got a similar proposition well on the way to completion.

Win Championship

Frank Martin's Alemite lassies won the City Ladies' Basketball Championship of 1944, eliminating Reliance in two straight games in the final series. Alemite won the first game 36 to 22 and even made it worse last night to win 36 to 10, as the Reliance girls just weren't in the same class with the "Easy-enders." Coach Martin's regular, Marion Salisbury, Dot Ronsky, Betty Gilbert, Ruth Oliphant and Peg Rowbotham starred with their height and experience for the Reliance gals, who were very much at a loss once their sox scoring threat, Kay Coathup, was handcuffed. Last night Mrs. Coathup just could not pound out the Alemite defense for a single basket.

It was as rough a girls' cage game as one could expect to see and the referees had their hands overflowing, relieving sores and bruises after the tussle. Abundantly Referees Jack Dickens and Herb Burley meted out something like 16 penalties, but they were really lenient in this matter, as that number could easily have been doubled and without prejudice.

Remember When—?

Georges Vezina, the "Chicoutmi Cucumber" and one of the greatest goaltenders in hockey history, died from tuberculosis 18 years ago today. The supermind of the nets played his first game of profession-al hockey in the old National Les Canadiens on Dec. 21st, 1910 and the last game with the same club on Nov. 28th, 1925, despite a temperature of 102, the first serious symptom of his fatal malady. When Vezina first reported to Les Canadiens he weighed but 98 pounds and was smoking an old clay pipe.

Cy Young is 77 . . .

Denton True (Cy) Young, veteran baseball writer, who knows era, will be 77 years of age tomorrow. He will, no doubt, spend the day as he does others, on a farm just a mile or two from the place where he was born, near Peoli, O. The Hall of Fame pitcher died in his native state after the death of his wife in 1934 and since then has lived with a neighbor's hilltop farm overlooking his old home and the cemetery where Mrs. Young is buried. His activities now are limited to his correspondence and an occasional speaking engagement.

LESSON NO. 238

By SAM GORDON
The Jibitzer

Some hands are so bare, they make you blush just to look at them. Others are so strong, you are easily carried away by them. That's the time when you should keep calm.

Let's lead yourself the north hand in this pair:

SOUTH
♠K Q J 10 9
♥A K 10 5 4
♦4 3
♣8 7

♦A K Q 4 3 2
♣A K

That north hand of yours is a whopper in any language. All by itself it is something to rave about. But suppose you have it when your partner has started with an opening bid of one spade. Wow!

Now, don't get excited. I know how you feel. It looks like a sure small slam. Or a possible grand slam. The trump suit can be diamonds. Or clubs. But keep your shirt on.

You do not yet know the denomination in which a slam is safest. For all you know, it may be best to no-trump. But control yourself. And start exchanging information with your partner.

There is no hurry. You can keep the bidding alive. Just answer with a one-heart bid. That is the signal for saying: "Partner, let's not stop bidding until we reach a game at least."

You have two strong suits to show. When they are of different lengths, always bid the longer suit first. That tells you to first mention your diamonds. But with a one-jump to three diamonds.

You thus say you have a diamond suit that is biddable. Your one-jump says you already see trick enough for a game. Being on the first round, your one-jump also shows at least two sure tricks.

The unusual type of your hand has not yet been revealed to your partner. But you have made a good start. He knows by now that your hand is strong. And that he must keep bidding.

You could, of course, take the play of the handlebars and make up the partnership mind right now. And you may even guess at the correct final contract. But remember, your blood pressure.

AT THE CAPITOL

"High Explosive"

Chester Morris and Jean Parker are again romantically interested in each other in their new Paramount picture, "High Explosive," now at Capitol theatre, with Barry Sullivan, a newcomer to the screen, forming the third part of the attractive triangle.

The film, produced by William Pine and William Thomas, has to do with nitroglycerine and the courageous men who deliver it where and when it is needed in the present war work program of "Holy Matrimony."

Monty Woolley and Gracie Fields take the plunge into marriage in "Holy Matrimony," the new Fox frolic which is now at the Capitol theatre.

Together in a rose-covered cottage, with a laugh for every shingle on the roof, Monty and Gracie have a hilarious time in the 20th Century-Fox film.

The Canadian Universal news completes the big double program.

AT THE BELLE

MacKinlay Kantor's "Happy Land"

With its stilling picturization of MacKinlay Kantor's sensational best-seller, "Happy Land," which is scheduled to open today at the Belle Theatre, advance reports indicate that 20th Century-Fox has added still another to its impressive list of triumphs in transforming top literary properties to screen masterpieces.

More than thirty million readers have already thrilled to Kantor's beautiful and unforgettable story as a featured Evening Post story, as a run-away best-seller, as a Reader's Digest Fiction Feature and as a nationally circulated newspaper syndicate feature. Of it, William Allen White says: "If I had but one gift that I could give to everyone in this land, high or low, rich or poor, military or civilian, it would be "Happy Land."

Now on the screen, the film, which features Don Ameche, Frances Dee, Harry Carey and Ann Rutherford, tells the story of the laughter, tears, love and courage of the people who are the heart of America, is already being acclaimed as one of the most human and moving stories to be filmed.

"Happy Land" deals with the effect of the war on one family in a typically American community, and of the strangest adventure that ever made everyday Americans overnight heroes. It is the story of the March family—of Lew March, in whose friendly drugstore a town's life and drama is played; of Agnes, his wife, whose courage conquered the cruelest thing that ever could happen to a woman; of "Granny" March, who was destined to change people's lives, even if he had to change worlds to do it; of "Rusty" March whose growing to manhood is the essence of the American story; and of Lenore Prentiss who made herself over into the image and likeness of the girl of "Rusty's" dreams.

Since "Happy Land" is as typically American as a soda at the corner drugstore, 20th Century-Fox decided to go all out for realism in this intense and moving film—not in just one scene—but in every scene of the picture. Not for one spectacle, but to bring home with all its dramatic force the impact of the small things in daily life.

Accordingly, despite the difficulties involved in location shooting, one of the first scenes filmed was leave Hollywood in years went to Santa Monica, California, to shoot the film in the small town which Director Irving Pichel and Producer Lamar Trotti decided was "even more authentically Western" than any city could be described by Kantor. Because of the importance placed in realism, "Happy Land" is slated to be the most true-to-life film Hollywood has ever made.

The film's impressive cast is headed by Don Ameche in the role of Lew March; Frances Dee as Agnes, his wife; Harry Carey as "Gramp," and Ann Rutherford as Lenore Prentiss.

Four Featurettes

Four varied and entertaining featurettes are announced for exhibition on the same program including the Canadian Movietone News, a Terrytoon cartoon "Canoodles," an enchanting travelTalk "Snowland Sentinels" and a timely and enlightening "The March of Time," "Invasion."

AT THE McCARTHY

"The Awful Truth"

Irene Dunne, who unceremoniously cut loose from a career of stately roles to indulge cinematically in the whimsies and historical insanities in "Theodora Goes Wild" will be seen in an uproarious comedy role in Columbia's "The Awful Truth" which opened today at the McCarthy Theatre. Cary Grant this time serves as Miss Dunne's screen cohort as Ralph Bellamy, Cecil Cunningham, Alexander D'Arcy, Robert Allen, Joyce Compton and Esther Dale.

In "The Awful Truth" Miss Dunne is seen as the prim, staid wife of Cary Grant, a bounder of sorts who simply can't get used to marriage ties. He takes an innocent vacation trip in the guise of a business trip and returns to find his wife has been out all night with a romantic foreign vocal teacher. The car, she explains, broke down and they were forced to spend a night at an inn. Accusations and recriminations fill the air before Mr. and Mrs. decide to separate. In court the only bone of contention proves to be Mr. Smith, the prolific wire-hair terrier, Asta, of "The Thin Man" series. Irene wins custody of the pup but the court allows Cary to visit the dog once a month.

Affairs take their merry course until Cary expresses his intentions of marrying a pretty young thing with a social register background as soon as the divorce is final. Irene then puts Theodora's wild ways to shame with her actions in the climactic scene wherein she tries to impress on Mrs. Aversue that young Cary is not the sort to be marrying wealthy, pretty young things.

Ralph Bellamy enters the scene as Oklahoma oil tycoon with a yen for Irene. Alexander D'Arcy is the innocent vocal instructor who suffers at the hands of the irate Cary while Cecil Cunningham is the tartar-tongued sophisticated Aunt Patsy.

The Day in Parliament

(By The Canadian Press.)

TODAY

The House will continue consideration of munitions department estimates.

The Senate will sit.

YESTERDAY

The House heard Labor Minister Mitchell say that as the tempo of the war in Europe increases there will be "greater and greater callups of men in the age groups liable to military service; Munitions Minister Howe discuss Canada's post-war industrial prospects, say the government will appoint a Royal Commission to study the whole coal situation and announce that part of the work of developing the propulsion aircraft engines has been transferred to Canada; Mr. Mitchell say the grand strategy of the war made it "inevitable" that industries would be closed down and others started.

The Senate did not sit.

EXCELLENT TIPS OBTAINED

London, March 26. (CP-Reuters) —Generals planning details of the forthcoming invasion of Western Europe are taking direct guidance pencilled by privates in the front line to help them work out tactical schemes, it became known yesterday. A war office official said "excellent tips are obtained."

PRINCE TOURS LANCASHIRE

Manchester, England—(CP) — Prince Bernhard of the Netherlands recently toured Lancashire and during his visit called on nurses at Preston who have been caring for Dutch sailors and seamen in hospital.

"A VOICE FROM PARADISE"

A sailor lands at an Eastern Canada port and telephones his mother in a faraway Ontario town. He has been on convoy duty, whereabouts unknown, for seven months. In a couple of minutes he is home.

"It was like a voice from paradise," his mother told our operator.

Every Bell operator, every Bell lineman is conscious of the importance of handling today's great volume of wartime messages with the least possible delay. Through their efforts, plus the public's co-operation in avoiding non-essential calls, messages still go through with near-normal speed.

In 1943, it took an average of 124 seconds to complete a long distance call—not very much longer than in normal times.

THE LITTLE DOG BARKED

by ANNE ROWE

CHAPTER 18

By the time I'd stopped wondering about the elasticity of time, Wells Colby was deep in his account of the evening — how the theatre around ten-thirty. Bill here and there, he mentioned the names of two actors, one of them the star of this week's show, then went straight to the Hutch, and stayed there until the Sergeant made us come here.

"Both you and Parris!" the Inconsolable added carelessly.

"Why—er—no. Bill went out for a while," Mary replied.

"Oh, he did?" the Inspector turned to Bill Parris with a comfortable sort of hopefulness. "Well then maybe you sent something. Or wasn't you out at the right time—seven or a little after?"

Bill shrugged. "I honestly can't say, Inspector. We were talking about one of my father's plays, and I ran over to the house to get it."

"Hmm—over to the Parris house. Would be the wrong direction," the Inspector mused audibly. "Did you bring the play to your friends?"

"No, I couldn't find it."

"Hmm—too bad! What time did you get back to the Smalch Hutch you?"

"—without the play?"

"I didn't look at my watch. But it was about the time the Sergeant raided us." Sharpness was creeping into the young actor's voice.

The Inspector noticed it. "No cause for hurt feelings. You are the only one gets asked questions," he told Bill. "You next, Mr. Vick."

"How come you to be out late at night, without your friends?"

"Because I'm a fish. He stomach's gone back on him through all this excitement." The old prospector's deep voice was almost a croak. "I couldn't stand hearing him groan all the time sat thought a breath of fresh air and being with others would do me good. I'd just arrived in the Hutch when I was dragged out again and brought here."

"I see. You were coming from the direction Mr. Parris here was going to. At about the same time."

Inspector Pettengill rubbed his hands. "Anything of him?"

"I hardly could. Seeing I was walking through my grounds," Vickery told him coldly.

"Hmm—I see. But the Inspector turned back to Bill Parris. "You see Mr. Vickery was walking his grounds, on your way to your house."

"I hardly could. Seeing I was walking on the road," Bill imitated Vickery's perfection.

The Inspector said nothing for a few seconds, in which his eyes traveled from the defiant young actor to the patently scared older man and back again. Then he dropped the matter, by asking Cora Paulsen: "And you, Mr. Paulsen. What you do with your evening?"

"Much the same as the others." Paulsen looked more than usually handsome in a dull colored tweed. "I cost over a matching sweater, "I was bachelor almost whole evening and left around nine-thirty if I should say. A stroll and a smoke. Expecting to be back at curtain time. But then I met Miss Marshall and we got to talking and time flies. Just like Mr. Vickery, we'd only been back to the Snack Hutch when we had to leave in a hurry."

"I see. You'n Miss Marshall been together from nine-thirty-five? Where you meet her?" A swift glance flicked toward me.

"Not from nine-thirty-five. It was nearer ten," Paulsen corrected. "And we met on the bath house the rocks, along the water."

"—but rather on a dark night ain't it?"

Paulsen laughed. "Oh—no darker than all 'Fern Cove. One gets used to it and besides, we carry flashlights. Also—the moon was coming up."

"—But—ayah—they's a late moon tonight. I forgot." The Inspector shook his head in self-reproach. "So you'n Miss Marshall was moonlighting together. Hmm—"

"We were doing nothing of the sort," Sondra became vocal at last. "We were discussing the play, and I, in particular. Mr. Paulsen knew some valuable suggestions about our scenes together and —he's right—it made us forget the time. You aren't an actor, Inspector. So you don't understand how absorbed we get, talking of our work."

Sondra sounded even more affected than usual. In other words she was lying. And also, she was wrong. If the Inspector wasn't a connoisseur of good acting, he'd been one of bad, often enough.

Inspector Pettengill dismissed his reluctant guests soon afterward with an abrupt: "Thank you. That's all, for now. You go back to your friends in the Snack Hutch now, so they can see I ain't put you in the hoosgow."

He also disposed of Linda, when they had gone, by ordering her to bed. But he insisted on a further talk with me.

"You better see Miss Linda gets to bed. She needs a rest. And when you've tidied her in, let's you'n me chaw this whole thing over together."

And then I had an interview with Linda that seemed to me to be something of a revelation. The moment we were alone she let her self-decline and collapse, flinging her arms around my neck and gasping out heroically: "I'm so glad you're a darling! You've saved my life! I'd be dead now if you hadn't come and I've been so mean to you! Please forgive me. I should have told you about Ada Burns' head to that man all right.

"Hush, dear. Why you think so wrong, but the wanton killing of the small girl made me much more than the attack on Linda had. It was so cruel and unnecessary, and utterly Inspector Pettengill's fault.

I'd tell him so. I vowed in a rage. I'd tell him to his face that he was a sorry bungler who couldn't keep his mouth shut. That, in all intents and purposes, he was the slayer of the poor girl.

I hastily threw on some clothes— but quit cutting the process that Linda had already gone—and ran over to the Inspector's room, bursting through the door without knocking. And then stopping short in surprise and hatred. There was Linda doing what I had come to do. She was standing at the center table, her back to the door, pouring a stream of coffee from an urn into one of the room: Inspector Pettengill, standing at the opposite side of the table, and Sondra Lorring sitting in an armchair beside it.

"A wonderful policeman you are, I think not!" she was shouting when I burst in. "All you can do is get little dogs burnt to death, poke your nose in my private affairs, and conspire with him. A conniving vicious nod toward Lorring clarified her meaning. "I won't have it, I tell you! You've got to stop it! I—I'll kill myself if it gets into the papers or on the—the—I am—"

Linda broke off with a helpless fit of rage, determined not to use the words "father" or "daughter," and flung me an accusing look.

It was my cue. I jumped into the breach with a small clatter of orchestrated words and my own, centering my outburst around Sirsy, as Linda had built hers around her family troubles.

"So you had to brag to Sondra! And as a result, poor Sirsy's dead now, and the vet has to bury him—if another animal hasn't. I yelled at the Inspector. "Didn't you know she'd grab the nearest phone and tell her Honeyboy—"

That's where I suddenly stopped. And almost fainted when Loring finished the sentence for me, saying with that strange, unreadable smile of his: "Tell Linwood, you mean? Yes, more than likely. Sondra's in love with him. But—how would that account for the little dog's death?"

Linda was too astonished, the Inspector and I too embarrassed, to find a plausible answer. Pettengill, after a pause, took up his own defense in his own explosive way.

"You're quite right, both of you," he said with unbelievable humility. "I should covered myself with glory on this here case, so far. Should ought to ordered a guard around the you, Miss Linda, last night. But my telling Miss Marshall about the fire was done on purpose. I phoned Doc Gates from your room, Miss Turner, while you put Miss Linda to bed. Warned him to watch out. And sent a deputy over. Thought we might catch the murderer when he come for the little dog. Only like the deputy stepped into the house for a spell. To get warm, says he. For a drink, I guess.

"And the murderer must been waiting for some such thing. Broke a window in the dog hospital and tossed a bundle through it all drenched in gasoline. Right into the straw of them dog beds—Doc Gates says the fire went up like a match. All he could do was get Sirsy and his blind pups out, and keep the fire from spreading to the main house."

Inspector Pettengill's disclosure that he hadn't acted on idle impulse had a steadying effect on me, even if its failure of his scheme had cost Sirsy's life. My eyes turned into grief, and I began to cry miserably.

"I'd hope Sirsy was still dopped and didn't know what was happening—didn't suffer too terribly," was all I could bring out.

"He didn't. He didn't suffer at all." The Inspector was patting my shoulder consolingly. I was grateful for his words. But Linda wasn't.

"Oh, he didn't suffer! You know it all!" she suddenly broke out again. "And I don't suffer either—being tricked into meeting people I hate, and going in fear of my life for two days and three nights now while you are snooping around, or finding out things, and doing nothing about what you've found out!" She turned straight to Loring. "And you! Sitting there grinning! I hate you! I've hated you ever since I can remember! Ever since I was a child! I ruined mother's life, I'd rather be murdered than give my life to you! But I won't! I won't! It isn't just a poor little dog. No one's safe. Anyone may be next! Mrs. Burns, perhaps because she saved me last night! And that's why Miss Lorring suggested dinner! You can! You know what's behind it all; your precious sister—her love affair—your money. The dirty money for which you married—the old woman. You're all wonderful in touch with—with a pitchfork!"

Linda was dismissed by the Inspector again. "You know it, too! You've talked with her! Why don't you arrest her. Why don't you use the famous third degree to make her tell you who the murderer is? Whom she hired to murder—her baked niece?"

"And don't you dare believe her if she says it's her stepson, because he isn't—Sondra's voice—the triumph was suddenly in Linda's voice—"I know he isn't. I'm not a child you! I know. It came to me when I woke this morning. Sirsy's smoke— And the clothes of the man last night smelled of tobacco."

Her triumph ebbed as she was out of the room, had slammed the door, was clattering down the porch steps—

No one spoke for quite a while after Linda's headlong departure. At last I said tentatively: "Shall I go after her?"

"No, not I wish you'd stay and—" For once the Inspector didn't sound completely sure of himself, as he turned to me. "Suppose you'd you don't mind? Not that I want to make a deposition of what you say, Miss Turner. It haven't even got my steno around. I'm short of men and need him elsewhere. But—I'd like to have some sort of unofficial record, for my own benefit, and Mrs. Turner says she all was said at your sister's house for me. Make a few notes. Read 'em in a book—"

"It should, Mrs. Turner is a famous author." Loring smiled politely. "And I don't in the least object to her writing down—from memory—what I am going to say."

"Meaning you won't say what you don't want her to write down," Inspector Pettengill guessed accurately.

"Correct. I'll tell you when to send her out." Loring nodded serenity.

Soldier Press States Cassino Fight Failure

Naples, March 28. (AP) — The Allied attempt to drive west Cassino from its stubborn German defenders appeared tonight to have been suspended for the time being after the failure of an Indian assault, a failure conceded by newspapers of both United States and Canadian soldiers.

These newspapers, the Stars and Stripes and the Maple Leaf, also gave expression to the Allied determination to profit from the bitter experience and eventually capture the key town on the road to Rome.

It was announced that massed Allied artillery will begin a systematic bombardment to blast Nazi parachute troops from the ruins of the Continental Hotel and the Hotel des Roses.

Effort Abandoned.

Absence of mention of ground activity in the Allied communique appeared to indicate that New Zealand troops who fought their way machine-gun nests in the last quarter of Cassino had for the moment abandoned the effort to drive the Germans from their remaining strongholds.

The Maple Leaf, the Canadian soldiers' publication, said: "The attack . . . combination of bombs from the air, shells from artillery and punch from the infantry has failed.

"The Allies have been beaten at Cassino, but there is no reason to believe that they will be beaten again.

"The formula is learned the hard way.

"The next time the forces who know they are fighting for freedom hit Cassino, it will be from the Live on Sorewood Time.

"The Germans still stand straddling the central road to Rome," said Stars and Stripes, publication of American service men. "But they live on borrowed time. The Allies, by their successful action in the battle for Cassino, lessons which will count heavily, have not been fought. The British and American men who invade Europe from the west will profit by those who have gone before them in the mountains of Italy. When Allied soldiers start again on the road to Rome, they will not have been made easier by the hardships which have failed in the fighting at Cassino".

INVASION JITTERS JUST BEGINNING

Surprise One of Deadliest Weapons in Allied Arsenal of Attack

By JOHN M. HIGHTOWER
Associated Press War Analyst
Washington, March 28 —(AP)— The invasion jitters are just beginning.

From here on, there will be "jitters" alarms, false alarms manufactured by the Anglo-American High Command and phony reports and rumors put out by the Germans. This will continue until the smartest dopesters on both sides of the English Channel have exhausted their bags of tricks in the greatest battle of nerves, preceding the greatest amphibious assault in history.

The quoted words are from Prime Minister Churchill's Sunday broadcast from London, designed to deceive the enemy about exactly where and when the blow or blows will fall, was interpreted here today as a warning to the world to get ready for some strange manoeuvres.

Surprise is one of the deadliest weapons in the Allied arsenal of attack, and the Germans are believed to be well-versed in its techniques. They need deception primarily to keep the undersupplied forces of Europe prematurely, and thus expose them to slaughter. The Allies are counting on these forces to strike at exactly the right moment to exploit a tremendous opportunity, tie up enemy occupation and reserve forces, blow up rail centres and otherwise create confusion in the German rear.

Germany 'Atlantic Wall'

The Germans meanwhile are reportedly feverishly—forcing French, Netherlands, Belgian and other dominated people into service to help them—to strengthen their already powerful Atlantic Wall defenses.

Netherlands reports made available here from Switzerland sources are especially detailed in such activities.

Those are the reports already have flooded some of the Dutch coastal lowlands, while the industrious Hollanders spent five centuries draining and reclaiming the sea and the skies it necessary. They said that the Germans early particularly concerned about Dutch territory because once penetrated it quickly into the industrial heart of Western Germany.

The flow of such information to the Allied invasion chief, probably is receiving highly informative data on the size and disposition of German preparation from underground sources all over Western Europe.

2 JAP-AMERICANS SENTENCED FOR FAILURE TO REPORT

Phoenix, Ariz., March 28—(AP)— Nine draft-age Japanese-Americans from the Poston, Ariz., relocation centre were sentenced to three-year prison terms each yesterday after admitting they failed to report for pre-induction physical examinations March 19.

9 KILLED IN U. S. BOMBER CRASH

Colorado Springs, Colo., March 28 —(AP)— Nine persons were killed Sunday night when an army bomber from Peterson Field here crashed and burned in the mountains, it was announced last night.

Roosevelt Expresses U. S. Admiration For Yugoslav People

London, March 28 (CP)—President Roosevelt expressed the United States' "admiration and friendship for the Yugoslavs in a message to King Peter on the third anniversary of that country's entry into war.

His message, dated March 27, was delivered by the Yugoslav government, said:

"Three years ago today the Yugoslav people rallied to begin their glorious struggle against the forces of aggression and tyranny. I extend to the embattled people of Yugoslavia the admiration of America's admiration and friendship."

REDS WITHIN 40 MILES CZECHOSLOVAK BORDER

Russians Advance Against Odessa, Black Sea Port

Sweep Forward On 175-Mile Curving Front After Taking Of Nikolaev

CROSS BUG ESTUARY

London, March 29 — (CP)—Gen. Rodion Y. Malinovsky's 3rd Ukrainian Army pushed across the South Russian steppes from captured Nikolaev toward the great Black Sea port of Odessa today, while 200 miles to the northwest other Russian forces were reported within 40 miles of the Czechoslovakian frontier.

The Russians were advancing on Odessa's approaches on a 175-mile front. Further west in Bessarabia, a Soviet communique said, units of Marshal Ivan S. Konev's 2nd Ukrainian Army were within eight miles of the Odessa-Ternopol-Lwi railroad last principle escape artery from the port.

Spearheads of Malinovsky's forces which captured Nikolaev at the mouth of the Bug already were reported across the Bug estuary, driving along the coastal road that lead to Odessa, 75 miles to the southwest. Other columns were plunging south from bridgeheads 60 to 80 miles upstream, where the Russians also counterattacked and 40 other communities were captured. Donaueschka by 7:7 miles north of Odessa.

Berlin asserted that Konev's army, stretched along the east bank of the Prut River boundary line of pre-war Rumania, had crossed that stream to assault the rail and highway junction city of Jassi (Jassy), but neither the Russian communique of the night nor dispatches confirmed this report of the first Soviet invasion of this territory.

Russians Into Rumania

The 2nd Ukrainian Army, however, drove south to take the towns of Tayra and Kodrin near the latter rail railway into Rumania. Other units operating to the north, Moscow said, captured Linkovtsy, 15 miles southeast of Kamenetz-Podolsk, thus narrowing the sack of the sack on large German forces reported cut off their retreat from Proskurov.

Forty miles northwest of Czernowitz, Bucovina capital, in whose outskirts Red Army troops were reported fighting, Marshal Georgy K. Zhukov's 1st Ukrainian Army captured Kolomea, 15 miles northeast of Kolamea" on the Czernowitz-Lwow railway and only 40 miles from the formidable Carpathian mountain barrier, through which the famous "Lwow gap — slave" leads into Czechoslovakia.

Land and Naval Gradation

Capture of Nikolaev resulted from a combined land and sea operation.

Today the Russians were smashing down through approximately 8,000 square miles of territory which still held by the Germans in the southern Ukraine, but there were few natural barriers to delay their drive to that port and the shores of the Black Sea.

The Berlin radio last night indicated that the Germans were evacuated Kovel, 170 miles from Warsaw in prewar Poland, but the Russian communique did not mention operations in this area.

Germans Recapture Island of Rab

London, March 29 — (AP)—German troops have reoccupied the island of Rab off the Croatian coast about 30 miles south of Fiume, a communique broadcast from the headquarters of Marshal Tito (George Broz) announced last night.

The bulletin gave no details of the fighting for Rab but declared the Nazis were marshalling large forces in the vicinity of Jadziche—which is situated directly opposite the island on the Croatian shore—for an offensive against Tito's Partisan troops.

Seventeen have been curtailing fighting in Eastern Bornia, the communique added.

NAZIS REPORTED ISOLATED AT KOVEL PRE-WAR RAILHEAD

Stockholm, March 29 — (AP) — A Berlin dispatch to the Swedish press today quoted German military circles as saying that Nazi troops at Kovel in war-ravaged Poland been isolated by the Russians and now were being supplied entirely by air.

The same dispatch quoted a Nazi front correspondent as declaring:

"One must be prepared for new retreats."

CANADIAN RADIO TO GO TO WAR IN "BIG WAY"

Dr. A. Frigon Says New Shortwave Station at Sackville to Open

FEW DETAILS GIVEN

By JACK BRATLEY

Ottawa, March 29 — (CP) — Canadian radio will go to war starting on a date between October and December, final word and mode from a new shortwave transmitter at Sackville, N.B., it was disclosed today.

Dr. Augistin Frigon, acting general manager of the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation, continuing his report to the Commons Radio Committee, outlined the set-up of the new station which he described as "one of the most up-to-date on the North American continent.

He announced that preliminary studies have already been started on a tentative program schedule and on the hiring of necessary personnel so that "the most effective" use can be made of shortwave broadcasts during the war.

The station will be beamed to various world regions with emphasis on the European beam, directed chiefly at the Canadian forces, so that we may start any time from then on and not later than Jan. 1, 1945," Dr. Frigon said.

While he did not give details on programs he hinted the composition of a broadcast advisory committee which included Gladstone Robertson, Under-Secretary of State for External Affairs; W. H. Ramsay, Secretary of the Cabinet War Committee; A. D. Dalton, special assistant of Wartime Information Board; Dr. Frigon and others.

This was generally taken to bear out previous reports that a department of psychological warfare was to be established to carry Canadian propaganda to enemy and occupied countries over the air waves.

The previous reports said that Canadian broadcasts, suggestions from the armed services, external affairs, wartime information and departments, would be given in various languages — including German and Japanese.

30 JAP AIRCRAFT DESTROYED OVER BURMA, ASSAM

Enemy Pressure Is Continuing in the Ukhrul Area Near Imphal Road

RETAIN HOLD ON ROAD

By CHARLES GRUMICH

Associated Press Staff Writer

New Delhi, March 29 — (AP) — Destruction of 30 Japanese aircraft with six more probably destroyed and seven damaged in two days of widespread air activity over Burma and Assam was announced today.

Meanwhile the communique from Admiral Lord Louis Mountbatten's headquarters announced that Japanese pressure continued in the Ukhrul area northeast of Imphal, near the Burma-India border, and added "the enemy have taken up new positions."

The communique indicated other Japanese thrusts toward Imphal in the small Indian state of Manipur had been checked, but it mentioned enemy movement in the hill country between Kohima and Imphal.

Headquarters said Allied troops maintained their hold on a road in the Tamu-Palel area, south of Imphal.

A renewed Japanese air offensive reaching far over the immediate objective in Manipur on Monday brought bombing attacks on the Chakeri and Lodu area in Upper Assam. These attacks were repulsed, the communique announced, with the destruction of 11 enemy bombers, which were forced to flee without dropping any bombs. Fighter planes also were downed.

The Allied communique announced 36 Japanese planes in all were destroyed Monday and two more on the ground Tuesday, the day total to 30.

An unexplained score shows that between March 1 and March 28, 132 enemy planes have been destroyed, probably destroyed and 41 damaged in the air and on the ground, against losses of 36 Allied planes on all sorts of strategic and tactical missions.

3 Allied Planes Missing

Three Allied planes were missing from the extensive air operations, in which 750 sorties were flown, Tuesday, the communique said. It announced that 8,423 Japanese troops had been killed in Northern Burma since last October 26.

Lord Louis Mountbatten's report to Allied troops drove the enemy back in the Ukhrul area of Imphal, where they inflicted casualties and captured valuable enemy equipments in succession to the capture of Tiddim-Imphal Road. The Japanese were reported resisting fiercely to stay to clear them from a small block on the upper part of the Tiddim-Imphal highway.

SIX PERSONS DIE TRAPPED UPSTAIRS AS HOUSE BURNS

Four Others Escape but Three Are in Hospital at Kirkland Lake

STOVE OVERHEATED

Kirkland Lake, Ont., March 29—(CP)—Six persons, including children and a woman of 71—died early today in a fire which swept the home of Mr. and Mrs. Frank Butler in Kirkland Lake. Four others escaped from the two-storey home and three of them are in hospital.

Dead are: Mrs. Ella Anderson, 71, aunt of Mrs. Butler; four Butler children, Herbert, 15, Alan, 12, Billy-9, Glen 6; and a ward of the Butler family, Gerry Greer, 11. All six were sleeping in the upper storey of the house. Mr. and Mrs. Butler and two daughters, Mrs. Greer and Evelyn, 4, escaped through their bedroom windows. Mrs. Butler and Evelyn are in hospital suffering from burns. Butler is recovering from shock.

Fire Chief Wm. Ellis said the fire was unburned.

Overheated Stove Blamed.

The fire, believed to have been caused by an overheated stove, started at 11:35 o'clock last night and is believed to have swept the lower part of the small one-storey house and then flashed up into the attic, trapping Mrs. Anderson and the five children sleeping there. Herberts body was found on the floor beside his bed and the bodies of the other five victims were found on their beds.

When the parents were awakened by the fire they found the stairway cut off by flames. The father attempted unsuccessfully to reach the stairs but was able only to get his wife and the two girls out the downstairs window and then get out himself.

Firemen who arrived a few seconds later found the frame house completely ablaze. They minded later they recovered the bodies. They said they believed the first sweep up super-heated air up the narrow stairway took the lives of the six.

Under one of the upstairs beds, firemen found the body of the family dog, with hardly one of its hairs singed.

The father and Herbert had gone to bed in the house just 20 minutes before the fire started and went straight to bed.

An inquest will be held.

PRIME MINISTER DEMANDS VOTE OF CONFIDENCE

Churchill Stalks Into House to Take Up Challenge

BILL TURNED DOWN

By JAMES M. LONG

Associated Press Staff Writer

London, March 29—(CPP)—Prime Minister Churchill stalked into the House of Commons today to risk his political future on the issue of a vote of confidence in his government.

The defeat came when the House, over-riding the opposition of Harold Butler, president of the Board of Education, approved by a vote of 181 to 116 an amendment to the government's education bill making it illegal for private teachers equal to that of men.

The rebuff followed an angry debate. It was reported that Butler had offered his resignation at the cabinet meeting, but later this was denied with the explanation that he regarded the vote as a rebuke to the government rather than to himself personally.

Butler had maintained that acceptance of the amendment—offered by Mrs. Cazalet Keir, conservative member from the London area—would jeopardize the government's wage principle.

The Prime Minister himself was not present when the vote, which came early lines, was taken. Comment of Papers.

The setback obviously was distasteful to government leaders and was the subject of widespread discussion in the London press.

"No government could tamely accept such a rebuff as yesterday's defeat upon an important detail of the education bill," said the Daily Telegraph. "As those responsible for the defeat seemed to realize subsequently, such an event cannot be laughed off as a mere domestic or parliamentary matter. A government would become a farce."

The Daily Sketch, however, was the only London paper to use the word "crisis" in referring to the situation.

"If they (the government) dound themselves still have the confidence of commons and the, country they may put the matter to a test, after which a general election and return to party politics would be inevitable," it said. "A crisis might be avoided if the government undertook a prompt inquiry and to report to commons."

The Daily Herald said the defeat was "a startling occurrence but it does not, in the view of the Labor Daily Express declared:

"There is no question here for a vote of confidence on the government. But the vote is a grave disappointment to those who carry vast responsibilities. It is a wretched thing for the government to feel that an immense measure of reform can be endangered in this way."

NAZIS FLOOD LOWLANDS

London, March 29 — (AP) — The Germans have started flooding low-lying areas in the Netherlands, the Lands Information Bureau declared today, as part of their plan to combat the expected Allied invasion of western Europe.

The government, except for one or two small towns, the island group known as the South Holland and Zealand Isles and have been evacuated preparatory to flooding the Bureau said.

The Germans have told the Netherlands already is flooded, one Dutch official estimated.

INDIAN TROOPS, NEW ZEALANDERS ARE WITHDRAWN

Gurkhas Could Only Be Fed and Supplied Sufficiently From the Air

1,500 SORTIES MADE

By LYNN HEINZERLING

(AP War Correspondent)

Naples, March 29. (AP)—Indian Gurkha troops who had 'clung stubbornly to Hangman's Hill, an exposed knob just below the peak of Monastery Hill bverlooking Cassino, have been withdrawn, headquarters disclosed today as violent artillery and mortar duels thundered in and around the town.

At the same time Allied photographic interpreters reported that medium bombers had cut all the rail lines from Northern Italy to the German frontline area.

Hangman's Hill had been occupied by the Gurkhas for approximately two weeks, and they could be fed and supplied sufficiently only by air. Withdrawal of New Zealanders from Hill 802 on the slope of Monastery Hill also was disclosed.

The strategic importance of the two features was lost when the general offensive against Cassino failed to dislodge the Germans, it was explained.

Retention Valueless.

This, plus the difficulties of removing the wounded and bringing reinforcements, made continued retention of the high ground valueless, headquarter officers said.

Allied troops also smashed another small assault on Hill 915, which is due west of Cassino.

Allied artillery scattered a German tank formation taking positions for an attack three miles northeast of Cisterna in the Beachhead south of Rome.

Allied planes flew more than 1,500 sorties Tuesday, shooting down a total of 13 enemy craft against a loss of ten.

State of Siege Is Proclaimed In Ploesti Oil Fields Says Tass

London, March 29 — (AP) — The Soviet Tass news agency said last night that a state of siege had been proclaimed in the Ploesti oil fields of Rumania, 170 miles from the Russian front, and that the Nazis had ordered the removal of all oil stored in the area.

Rumanian police were ordered to close all air-raid shelters and to fire on anyone found in them, Tass said, and the Germans have reinforced their SS (Elite Guard) battalions guarding the fields.

Tass added that the Germans had replaced all Rumanian technical personnel with German scientists at the field, from which they have been draining about 3,000,000 tons of oil a year.

As the Russians swept forward toward the Carpathian mountains, other reports said the puppet regime in occupied Hungary had dissolved the Social Democratic and Peasant parties.

Pas-de-Calais Area Hammered by U.S. Heavy Bombers

Double - Barreled Blow Is Struck Against France and Germany

MONTH OF POUNDING

By AUSTIN BEALMEAR

Associated Press Staff Writer

London, March 29—(AP)—American heavy bombers plunged deep into Central Germany today and other heavy bombers pounded the Pas-de-Calais coastal area of France in the campaign described officially as "aimed primarily against the Luftwaffe on the ground and in the air."

It was the month's 24th great assault by the U. S. bombers, a month by the end of which they could be said almost sufficiently which Maj.-Gen. James H. Doolittle announced last night had destroyed more than 2,100 German planes in the last eight days. This day was taken by American airmen flying from Britain alone.

Fighter escorts accompanied the bombers into Central Germany.

The double - barreled attack against Germany and France followed a lashing of four airdromes in France Tuesday by 250 to 500 American heavy bombers.

Targets Not Identified.

The German targets were not identified, but the preliminary announcement from U. S. headquarters said: "Today's attacks followed two days of bombings of Luftwaffe airfields in France where the Germans did not put up serious aerial opposition."

Berlin claimed that violent air combats were being fought over western Germany by midday. One broadcast claimed "several enemy bombers have been shot down shortly after the enemy had flown over the Dutch frontier."

In the House of Commons, meanwhile, Sir Archibald Sinclair, secretary of State for air, said the German fighter force in Western Europe is formidable. Nevertheless it undoubtedly many hard battles lie ahead.

Fuzzy Wuzzies Dance in Frenzy, Celebrate Release From Japs

Finschafen, New Guinea, March 29 —(AP)— Fuzzy Wuzzy history has been made with the greatest sing-song held by New Guinea's native people in modern times.

Thousands of ochre-painted, feather-decked natives from villages throughout the Papuan territory and Sunday to celebrate their release from Japanese overlordism.

They danced themselves into a frenzy and stopped off the big day with a roast pork feast augmented with Australian bully beef and flour. The Australian food was there because the hungry jungle dancers had previously practically free of wild hogs. Only recently had cans of food been found to relieve the nearly 3,000 natives on hand for the celebration.

Angua (Australian-New Guinea administration unit) staged the celebration.

An Australian officer with many years' experience in the territory, translated the chief's talk, telling the natives in stigin English: "Japan man he finish. Australian man he stop."

Boys from Rabaul and the Sepik river area did the dancing, painted their painted faces and shook themselves into a bandmad of weeds told they too would soon be able to return home.

The final speech the natives slowly began to writhe and twist to the blare of jungle drums. They chanted native songs and soon the jungle arena was a swirling mass of human color.

At the height of the furious dancing one American Negro soldier yelled: "Boy, them boys is real happy."

After the feast the natives started to their mountain villages, each carrying back the word: "Japan man he finish."

Democrats Happy Over Elections

Muskogee, Okla., March 29—(AP)—Democrats laid claim today to a nationwide significant triumph in Oklahoma's special congressional election. Republicans blamed the new deal party, minimized the results of yesterday's balloting and predicted it'll be different in the November elections.

The state's sprawling district, traditionally democratic, was made a major battleground. Democrats and Republicans put Fray. The Roosevelt administration was called the issue by both sides.

With only 19 sparsely-populated precincts of the district's 251 still unreported today, democrat W. G. Stigler had 21,406 votes to Republican Clark, regarded as 21,405 to 17,878 votes.

In Washington, Robert E. Hannegan, Democratic National Chairman, said today Stigler's victory "exploded completely and decisively the myth of a nation-wide republican trend."

CITY AND DISTRICT NEWS

BLINKER SYSTEM FOOLS TRUCK DRIVER

The new blinker system put into effect recently in the city at the corner of Front and Dundas streets was the cause of inordinate consternation to at least one truck driver the first night. Shortly after midnight approach from Front Street from Pinnacle, Alderman Newton Lloyd, and Lieutenant Orrin A. Lloyd, stopped, when the red blinker light which was clearly visible from Pinnacle and recorded on their safety approval. As they neared the intersection the blinker light switched to a panel-truck standing motionless on Front Street waiting to proceed north, when the light changed. The driver must have imagined in a little audio your cussing when he found out that he was waiting in vain for the flickering light to settle down and mean something . . . at least he wasn't given a $10 fine on the spot.

MOTHERS REMINDED TO ATTEND SHOW

Mothers in the city are reminded again of the remake show to be staged by Queen Elizabeth public school auditorium by three o'clock Thursday afternoon, when Mrs. A. W. Harcourt of the consumer branch of the Wartime Prices and Trade Board will demonstrate the possibilities of remaking materials into children's clothing. Although all types of children's clothing will be shown at the show, particular emphasis is expected to be given to the remaking of materials into children's underwear. The demonstration is free and all mothers in the city are invited to attend.

CAR UNCLAIMED ON "ESPLANADE"

For the past three days a 1936 model Ford motor car has been parked on the proposed esplanade bordering the Moira River and impeding the progress of vehicular traffic along that thoroughfare. LEG OF PORK DISAPPEARS

This little part of a pig never did get to market.

Yesterday, J. C. Rutter, Prince Edward County farmer, brought a portion of pork to Belleville to be cured by to sell the precious ham. Mr. Rutter left the portion of a leg of pork in his parked car while transacting some business in the downtown district. When he returned the entire leg of pork was gone. Police were notified, but little could be done regarding recovery as no person apparently saw the pork-pilferers leg parade.

AIR GUNS CONFISCATED BY PROVINCIAL POLICE

The discharging of air rifles in the College Hill sector of the community caused no end of concern last night and ultimately resulted in Provincial Police Constable Tuttle visiting the area. City police first received complaints, that air rifles were being discharged and pellets breaking windows, but investigation revealed that the missiles were being committed outside the city on Dundas Street. Provincial police went to the scene and after investigating two air guns were confiscated and the youthful owners given to several lads regarding the discharging of such guns near buildings or people.

36 TRANSIENTS GIVEN SHELTER IN MARCH

Indications that transients still roam the highways of Ontario, even if the police station today when it was disclosed that no less than 36 were "knights of the road" had been given shelter in the city during the first 24 in the month of March. A native of Russia by the name of Szido, who stated he was 62 years of age, was the sole occupant of the police station for the night last night and today continued his journey westward. The transient register book at the police station shows an increase in the number of transients seeking shelter over the same period of 1943, authorities pointed out.

50,000 Miners Out in Yorkshire

London, March 29 (CP)—About 50,000 miners were estimated to be on strike today in Yorkshire coalfields, and Scottish shipyards also were hampered by labor disputes.

The miners are striking because they say a wage settlement deprived them of the privilege of taking home coal without paying for it. A wrangle over the operation of the pay-as-you-earn income tax system provoked 2,500 to strike in Stirlingshire, Dumbartonshire and Lanarkshire. Fifty Rotherham pits employing 6,000 were idle.

Two thousand engineering apprentices at the Tyneside shipyards walked out over the Christmas and Yorkshire industrial districts. Eighty per cent of the 2,000 workers in Gateshead and 1000 in Yorkshire walked out in sympathy, making a total of 3,000 workers. In Scotland the strikers 30,000. The strike started as a demand for exemption from the practice whereby boys are drafted into the pits on reaching the same age into the armed forces.

PO. Duffield, D.F.M. Addresses Cadets

Members of the Belleville Air Cadet Squadron heard at the weekly parade last night at the R.C.A.F. air gunner from the time of "briefing" to the safe return of the raid until crews are back at their home bases, when Pilot Officer Duffield, D.F.M. of No. 5 Initial Training School spoke to the boys on "Operations" at the weekly training period Monday evening. After the address Commanding Officer Squadron Leader Bowerman as air gunner PO. Duffield is back in Canada to train as a pilot.

Also a new member on Lancasters, PO. Duffield told the interested air cadets his experiences of four years in the R.C.A.F. and gave in detail the procedure of preparation for a raid over an enemy target, and of the duties of each member of the crew and the necessity of them working as a team.

His most interesting operation was that of bombing the Renault engine works on the outskirts of Paris. He stated there had been no flak and no searchlights. "It was a beautiful job," he said. Asked about the action for which he was decorated the flier modestly evaded the issue.

Flight-Lieut. R. M. Anderson, of the R.C.A.F. at Ottawa, former Belleville physician, has been cited for his heroic Canadian Humane Society for his courage and coolness in saving the life of Judy Gill, July 5th from drowning, according to word received by his wife in the city. The story of the rescue for which the former Belleville officer was cited was carried recently in an Ottawa paper.

Sitting on the shore near Hog's Back, Flight-Lieut. Anderson had noticed the girl, Miss Helen McCarthy, flailing about in the water. Seeing that help from people on the shore was not an expert swimmer and had gone beyond her depth, Flight-Lieut. Anderson dived into the water and swam about 50 yards beyond her danger.

Fully clothed and without removing his shoes, the Belleville officer soon got to get the girl and in making the rescue he had to dive under the water as she had gone beneath the surface. When brought ashore Miss Gill unconscious but was quickly revived.

Flight Lieut. Anderson knew nothing of the citation until he was informed of it by an Ottawa reporter.

Native of Belleville, Flt. Lieut. Anderson is a graduate in medicine from McGill University and prior to his enlistment in the R.C.A.F. a little more than two years ago had practised in this city for many years. He has been stationed at R.C.A.F. headquarters in Ottawa for the past year and resides at 16 Lakeside Avenue. His wife and three children reside at 52 Hillcrest Ave., Belleville.

Daniels of Worcester, Mass., has been awarded the Silver Star for gallantry in action in the Solomon Islands, according to word received here by his wife. Pte. Daniels' brother Archie, is also in the Pacific battle area.

Pte. First Class Horace J. Daniels, U. S. Army

He and his brother left this city five year ago to go to their parents in Worcester and have since actively enlisted in the United States Army. Another brother, Sgt. James A. Daniels, is engaged with the R.C.A.F. overseas.

Enlisting in the United States Army three years ago in Vermont, Pte. Daniels, with his brother was attached to the Pacific area and took in the action against the Japanese in New Guinea last year before moving to the citation that went with his award of the Silver Star. General Manager Canadian Press Gives Fine Report

Toronto, March 29—(CP)—J. A. McNeil, general manager of the Canadian Press today in his annual report that CP is perfecting the system for reporting the greater struggles and sacrifices which will be the price of victory but also for chronicling and backgrounding the world-wide reconstruction which must inevitably attend and follow upon the coming of peace.

But coverage of the "lesser but still important activities at home and abroad" has not been neglected, he told the annual meeting of the co-operative news-gathering agency.

"Our general news service has been kept well up to the requirements of peacetime newspapers and recognizing the limitations imposed upon them by staff shortages, wartime restrictions and other handicaps on publication."

Mr. McNeil said that probably never since the early formative days of CP has the co-operative's members been so important as it has been under present wartime conditions—"and never has it been more willingly given."

Operation Completed.

Of arrangements for covering the Dominion election just election, he said:

"While indications at the moment are that a Dominion election is not imminent, preparations have been completed. It was felt inadvisable to leave preliminary work until a time when important news might be breaking from overseas.

During the last year "considerable attention has been given to providing Canada's overseas forces with regular news from home, Mr. McNeil said. He gave these details:

1. Circulation of The Canadian Press News, published weekly by CP in London for the services, was increased in January from 35,000 to 45,000, with 6,000 copies of each issue flown to Italy.

2. CP provides 750 words of Canadian news daily at 9 Oclaws for transmission to the 5th Army in Italy and the Canadian Army paper published in Italy, The Maple Leaf.

2. At the request of the Canadian Red Cross a 500-word news bulletin for Canadian prisoners-of-war in Germany and Italy is prepared weekly in Toronto and cabled by the Red Cross to its international agency in Geneva.

5,000 Ration Books Given Out First Day

Complete satisfaction on the part of local ration board officials was expressed today over the response to the opening day of the ration books which commenced in the butter quota in the city last Tuesday afternoon. Nearly 5,000 ration books were distributed on the opening day, the afternoon by an army of volunteer workers and officials before large crowds during the remaining three days.

Especially pleasing to ration board officials was the reception given to the public over the change in location of the distribution centre, the latter this year. Judging from comments heard, those making their new ration books welcomed the change in that it eliminated the necessity of standing in line on the steps to the city hall auditorium.

Despite newspaper assurances, however, that rations had already had been promulgated the services of sufficient clerks to completely distribute the books without residents being made to wait for lengthy periods, a number of cases in evidence before the market building on Friday, the first morning of the opening time. Through smooth working of the system, however, the crowd was handled quickly and by five o'clock the distribution was over to a trickle.

At the time of distribution of the 5,000 ration books given out Tuesday, 18,000 were given out in Belleville in the sale of sugar, the ration established on Tuesday little difficulty was experienced in receiving the allotted residents in the four day period.

Nearly Completed

The new transmission building at Sackville, designed by CBC engineers, will be completed in a few weeks and "we will start receiving equipment shortly now."

Dr. Frigon said that once all the equipment is installed and tested engineers there will have a practical demonstration to find its most efficient arrangements for the various installations.

He said the function of the advisory committee would be to make advisory recommendations to the CBC on the "technical and non-technical service" on matters of policy, program selection, broadcasting and other matters to be covered in talks and similar programs."

Dr. Frigon said the CBC staff, will be the Secretary of the committee and will co-ordinate the work between the various CBO divisions and government departments.

Serving other technical activities of the CBC, Dr. Frigon told the committee, will be 10 engineers have been installed at Sioux Lookout and Watrous in Ontario, auxiliary broughr radio to isolated communities that could not be reached in any other way.

Another at Dartmouth.

He said the transmitter receiving station is under construction at Dartmouth, N.S., the Maritime headquarters, the Britannia Heights, Ont., station in bringing in programs from overseas and the European and African battlefronts and in connection with network of RBC programs intended for the CBC network.

Another shortwave receiving station is being established near Vancouver for reception of Australian programs.

Dr. Frigon told of CBC resourcefulness in "making do" with odd bits of equipment.

"As we could not obtain the proper equipment for our transmitters, small transmitters were built from parts collected from Germany and various countries," he said.

Another development of the CBC engineers was portable field equipment for the CBC announcers.

"The difference between the CBC set-up and others is that others is that we virtually have a travelling recording laboratory on wheels," he said, referring to the complementary portable equipment which the CBC has now. "We also Have An Advantage.

"No other broadcasting outfit has had this advantage to date, according to our overseas engineer who has inspected them," he said, between $1,8600 and $3,800 annually.

Comment from home, Mr. who, in a few cases, make more comparable with private stations than ours do, I believe our fixed salary scale provides for considerably higher salaries of almost all private stations in Canada," he said.

Oppose Recommendations Of Mining Commission

Toronto, March 29 —(CP)— An meeting of the prospectors and developers' section here last night expressed opposition to recommendations made to the Ontario Legislature recently by the Ontario Mining Commission.

Resolutions hastily favored retaining the present provincial securities regulations instead of the method of drafting a new one as the commission suggested. The section opposed abolition of the present securities commissioner and the replacement by a three-man board, another move recommended in the mining commission's report.

Recreation Alley Bowlers Continually Assist 'Tag Fund'

One of the most consistent and largest contributors to the Kinsmen Tag Fund are the bowlers at the Recreation Alleys. Since inaugurating their "first ball" tag days the Recreation Alley bowlers have contributed $25 to the Tag Fund, the latest donation or organization contribution on record.

Indications of the popularity of Canadian funds set up for the purpose of provision of clothing for Canadian boys serving overseas were seen in Belleville city hall, when Chairman Buster Lalkey, of the Kinsmen Tag Fund, received a number of small cards from boys overseas, expressing thanks for smokes already received and urging that the cheque in location of the distribution centre, the latter this year. Judging from comments heard, those making their new ration books welcomed the change in that it eliminated the necessity of standing in line on the steps to the city hall auditorium.

Despite newspaper assurances, however, that rations had already had been promulgated the services of sufficient clerks to completely distribute the books without residents being made to wait for lengthy periods, a number of cases in evidence before the market building on Friday, the first morning of the opening time. American destroyers and Corvettes shelled the Japanese on tiny Fitzroy Island, in the Admiralty Group, northwest from the American base at Lorengau on the Island of Manus.

During the day 18 more buildings were wiped out at Rabaul by dive bombers and Wirraway fighters. Heavy, medium and dive-bombers hit the airdrome with 50 tons.

WHAT SHOULD THE COST OF A FUNERAL BE?

At one time it was not considered good taste to discuss the cost of a funeral. Times have changed. Many of Canada's finest establishments have adopted a policy of lower cost and values $50, $75, $100 or more less than regular funeral costs based on volume. They have advertise what the cost would be. Being Belleville's oldest funeral directors it is fitting be. We should be the first to adopt this policy in this community. Our new funeral home, centrally located, with ample seating capacity in the chapel, and music if desired, is included in this policy.

Accused Denies He Bought Beer For Prisoners

Member of Veterans' Guard Accused of Misconduct With German Prisoners

TELLS OF CAMP LIFE

Bucklngham, Que., March 28—(CP)—Opl. William Lee of Montreal, on trial before an open court martial on six charges arising from alleged misconduct with German prisoners of war, denied yesterday he had purchased beer for the prisoners at a nearby Thurso hotel the night of March 19th, and that he had drunk beer with them.

Lee, a member of the Veterans' Guard of Canada was testifying in his own behalf. Another Veterans' Guardsman, Pte. Nelson Skinner, of Granby, Que., faces trial shortly on similar charges.

Witnesses testified shortly after the court martial opened that Lee had bought beer for the prisoners and had drunk with them and a group of Buckingham girls in the hotel.

Under examination by his defence counsel, Capt. T. B. Brown, Lee said conditions at the camp from which the prisoners came was the worst he had ever seen. He was posted to the camp, a works project of a new munitions plant, on March 17 miles north of Thurso, Feb. 2.

Showed How Men Lived

When the prosecutor, Capt. L. C. Carroll, objected to Lee's statement, Capt. Brown said he wished to show the conditions under which the men were living and their influence on their subsequent conduct.

Lee said he and three privates transferred from Farnham, Que., found in the camp they had to take whatever the Germans cooked for them for meals. In Lee's sleeping quarters were old beds and blankets used by former occupants.

"There was no control there and the Germans could do what they liked with us," he added. "We had to eat with them in the same mess, and could not even put our feet under the table, as potatoes were stored there in bags."

There was no place to post standing orders, and had to keep them in a barracks box which he had brought along, said Lee.

Ordered by Lieutenant

Lee testified he had been ordered by Lt. R. Schenk, Compet ownde superintendent, to take eight Germans to Buckingham for dental treatment, and that Schenk had said to send one guard along with them. At the same time, he was informed 14 prisoners were coming in and he was to meet them at Thurso.

"He asked me to send Pte. Skinner to Buckingham with the eight Germans and to wait in Thurso to make arrangements for the 14 prisoners that were coming in," he added.

The prisoners arrived, said Lee, and he transferred them to a car under another guard and then had dinner at Myre's Hotel.

He told the court he had been out of the camp only once before, when two prisoners escaped. They were later caught at Drummond, a company settlement. On one occasion 30 German prisoners were left in the camp under one member of the Veterans' Guard.

When the eight prisoners arrived at Thurso about 7 p.m., Lee said, he did not see any girls coming in with them, "but there were girls all around, as they always are when prisoners are about."

He said he saw the girls dancing with the prisoners, but stopped them.

Under Influence of Liquor

"The girls were under the influence of liquor. They were in a crazy humor," he added. When the prisoners left Thurso for supper, the girls "kept butting in," and he complained to Holland Larose, the hotel manager, about them.

"Did you ever buy a bottle of beer for prisoners of war?" Lee was asked.

"I certainly did not, sir," he replied, adding he did not see any of the prisoners drinking.

Later, Lee added, he found two or three of the girls in the prisoners' rooms and ordered them out. He had a hard time keeping the prisoners in their rooms, and it was difficult to keep the girls away.

"It is impossible when you come down to Thurso with prisoners to keep the public away," he said. "You can't stop the public from fraternizing with them. You can only do this by having each prisoner under a guard."

Lee told the court he had one bottle of beer with his dinner, another at about 2 p.m., and shared a third bottle with a man named Labelle, driver of the car. This was all he had to drink that day.

Just Fraternizing

Under cross-examination by the prosecutor, Capt. Carroll, Lee declared the statement made Monday by Rolland Larose, manager of the hotel, that he had bought up to 20 bottles of beer for the party as "the biggest frame-up."

"That must be a frame-up to get me for some reason," he said. He charged collusion between Larose and Schenk, saying the former, when he spoke little English, used the word "incoherent" in his evidence. The same word had been used by Schenk. Trial is continuing.

At Monday's hearing, Pte. Buckingham girls testified they had been drinking beer and dancing with the prisoners.

LOOKS LIKE MARTHA RAYE

Yes, Mildred Morley, formerly with the Canadian Army Show and a native of Hamilton, does a Martha Raye impersonation at the Kinsmen "Monte Carlo" carnival at the Belleville Armouries tonight, Thursday and Friday when the Kinsmen hold their annual indoor circus in aid of their Fag and Milk for Britain funds. Miss Morley is a talented radio and stage star and was with the Canadian Army show that successful stage production toured Canada. She will be featured at the Agincourt along with "Blackface" Justin Crosbie, who starred in an army show during the last war. Her featured Martha Raye impersonation is "Mamma I Want to Make Rhythm."

Miss Morley recently delayed a contract to appear in New York in order that she might be near her husband, who is training at Petawawa Military Camp. Truly she is one of Canada's outstanding entertainers. Then, of course, there will be the conventional Kinsmen games for the amusement of all carnival-goers.

Canadian Ads Shown U.S. Representatives On Ration Suspension

Washington, March 29—(AP)—"Rationing Suspended" advertisements from Canadian newspapers were displayed to the House of Representatives as three Republicans assailed Administration handling of the food distribution problem.

Representative Fred Hartley (Rep.-N.J.) showed his colleagues the ads and related that rationing of meat has been lifted in Canada, in Canada.

"If Canada, under efficient management, can do this, why can't we?" Mr. Hartley asked, "particularly when a good share of the goods for sale there comes from our country."

When are we going to see an end to this Administrative muscle dancing on rationing control and substitute some common sense?"

18-Year-Old Bride Fails To Be United With 16-Year Husband

Cambridge, Mass., March 29—(AP)—The otherwise art thou Romeo" petition—stripped of its legal phraseology—of 18-year-old Mrs. Ann Bryden Mulligan was answered in Probate Court Tuesday, but she failed to become reunited with her 16-year-old husband of slightly more than a month.

The young wife hailed the youth's father into court on a petition charging he seized the bridegroom while they were honeymooning in New York and has since held him prisoner.

Judge John W. Monahan, upon learning that attorneys for the young bridegroom—Joseph Patrick Mulligan, had filed a petition for annulment of the marriage which took place at Town Gates, N.Y., Feb. 26, declined to act on the pretty bride's petition for the release of her husband.

An Opportunity

Announcement from Ottawa that unpaid balances on the 1943 income tax which fall due on April 30th may be postponed for four months to August 31st without payment of interest is news that comes with a measure of relief to a good many persons no doubt, especially those who thought that their balance would be small and could be easily met, but had failed to note that the balance would be in many cases considerably greater than was anticipated. The fact that with the change in the system of collection taxes to "pay as you go," there remained something to be made up for-the first three months of last year when the change was made, had to be recognized.

For several reasons the extension of the date of payments of unpaid 1943 balances will prove beneficial. Those who found themselves in the position of having a greater balance than anticipated with the possibility that they might not be able to pay the full amount by that date will now have this opportunity. Of course those who can pay up in their balances at the earliest day as well do so and settle that account for 1943. Then too it must be remembered that the four months' grace will quickly pass and people should make certain that before the new date they are able to make their settlements.

In another way the four months of grace will provide such citizens with an opportunity to buy Victory Bonds as they would normally hope to do in order to co-operate in this part of Canada's war effort. Others who have the means of paying up their tax balance or arrears may go more extensively into the purchase of the forthcoming Victory Loan issue set to begin on April 24th., buy them in greater volume and also be ready to pay their balances in a short time on the 1943 tax long before the August 31st. date.

The relief which the change offers in allowing payment as much later as four months will, however, be taken as a suggestion or invitation that people can wisely relax in their efforts to save as far as possible money for the purpose of carrying on the war or for a short month's time the balance must be paid and he would be reckless who would expend unnecessarily even for a brief spell.

If all those who will feel a sense of relief at this announcement set out to buy Victory Loan bonds when the opportunity soon offers, they will be furnishing the Dominion with necessary money and will lend themselves able to pay the 1943 income tax balance without interest. In these two ways these taxpayers will be able to serve.

But meanwhile no one who must file an income statement for 1943 should fail to do so on or before April 30th. That is the last date for filing an income tax statement.

Trenton by Water

(Trenton Courier-Advocate)

An American man writer asked a Trenton organization to tell her if it was possible for anybody to come to Trenton by water. The letter was turned over to Our Hardest Thinker, who checked over the information we have in this office, and replied, of course, of course! In the old days Captain Cryder was skippering the Steamer St. Helen between Trenton and Montreal, and Captain Munro was doing the same with the Steamer City of the Bay on the shorter route between Trenton and Kingston. The American writer can now go to work and finish her story, knowing that what she has been told was the authentic information she lacked.

Another Blow at Germany

Russian victories are continuing to roll up against the Hun and to hurl him backward from the land into which so joyfully and with such prospect of loot and power he started on two years ago last June, directed by Hitler—to seek the Ukraine's wealth, the Caucasus oil, and the rich areas of Russia all along the two thousand-mile front to the Baltic and Gulf of Finland. But that was in the past. The German outlook darkens steadily and twilight is engulfing Hitler and his Germans.

In a war on so mammoth a scale as that on Russian front, scarce a day goes without a great victory, some important towns or centres falling into Russian hands. Some great sweeping movement that entraps Germans by the divisions. A gain on the Russian front is important therefore for it is part of a vast program.

Nikolaev's capture by the Russians on Tuesday was one of these gains. Stalin has said of it, that it is "a large regional and industrial centre, important railway junction, one of the largest ports on the Black Sea and a powerful strong point of German defence."

The fall of Nikolaev leaves Odessa the only major port remaining in German hands on the Black Sea.

Lore of Vesuvius

The first recorded eruption of Mount Vesuvius, the world's most studded volcano, gave the ruins of Pompeii to classical scholars and also killed a Roman scientist, writes a Chicago Tribune columnist. He was the Elder Pliny, who had a strong bent towards observation in natural history, and his curiosity caused his death.

The incident is described at some length in a letter by his nephew, called Pliny the Younger, to Tacitus, the historian. The philosopher, Aug. 56, was then in command of a fleet based on the Campanian coast. Seeing the eruption from his ship, he landed for closer investigation at the port of Stabiae, where he dined in the house of a friend. (The house was destroyed later). In the middle of the night earthquakes and showers of volcanic rocks alarmed the party, and they left the house to seek a safer place, with pillows on their heads for protection. After several hours Pliny collapsed from gas poisoning and inhalation of fiery vapor. His body was found without burns the next day.

This great eruption had been preceded by sixteen years of earthquakes, but the inhabitants had clung to the fertile slopes of the shadow hill. From their vineyards came a wine called Vesuvinum to fill household jars in the Pompeian villas. To day it is called Lachryma, Christi.

The eruption of 1906 was one of Vesuvius' most destructive performances. A young American lecturer happened to land in Naples the day before with a new gadget called a motion picture camera. Pliny, he was curious, and while the inhabitants were running away he moved toward the volcano. He was Burton Holmes, who exhibited scenes from those old-fashioned flickers two weeks ago.

Slanderous Name

A report current in that in Gothenberg, Sweden, a magistrate has ruled that "the term 'Nazi' is an insult" and that "any person applying it to another will in future be liable to a fine of twenty crowns." Not only in Sweden but throughout the world the names "Nazi," "Fascist," "German," "Japanese," and so forth, will probably become insulting epithets.

The snow makes friends of children, but when skies are cold and gray
The old who can afford it pack their grips and run away;
But a cherry tree in blossom is so beautiful a thing
That no one that I know of ever runs away from spring.

When school is out, and summer sets the city streets on fire,
To the seashort and the mountains many families retire.
The blasting ills of August for their comfort is too hot,
So they linger until autumn in a favorite, cooler spot;
But a cherry tree in blossom and the birds nearby to sing
Hold so much of charm and beauty no one runs away from spring.

Likes are likes and I don't quarrel with what suits my neighbor best.
When he runs away from winter I have nothing to suggest.
When he finds the summer stifling and packs up and goes away
To a cottage by the seashore, I have not a word to say;
But I notice all come homing when the robins northward wing;
Everybody that I know stays about to greet the spring.

London Letter

London, March 30 (CP) — The Nazi high command has at last stepped into the lead as the most-soughtafter individuals in London.

However, his position to a great extent dependent on an external influence, from the support of the United States army.

The rise and fall of his predecessors is worthy of this slight study as a guide to the fate that may be in store for the cabbie.

The peacetime Hitler was the aristocrat, married his tassels into the war but lost them early and was last seen strutting pitifully into a neat queue while his wife stayed at home cursing an iron bar control in anticipation of a big day at the factory.

There was in his stead a man of gruff ways and few social graces, the bulldog. He rise started with the ration book and his reign was hardly an unqualified harsh.

His fall was not so much a fall as the effect of one high bird surpassed by another.

He gave way slowly and with fierce resistance to a man who had known bitter obscurity for months and months, the man who owns a fiat or a house or a single, grubby shilling. His rise was based on occasional sordid financial dickerings.

His fall, again, was more that of the man surpassed by something that went higher.

And finally we come to the era of the man who drives a taxi.

No champion, among those who have gone before, has flaunted his position as does this despot riding the streets on helpless, straddled multitudes of the capital.

His whole public setup is based on American theory of mobility which maintains the foot is for use only when there is no car within range of the voice or the recesses of the purse.

His cab is his chariot, his tongue his sceptre. In the pleas of his fellow Englishman he finds a vicious malevolence. In the most pitiful sound that old city has to offer, the cry that sends a "taxxxee" to its doom, he finds acknowledged and down some cavernous, blacked-out street, he takes a grisly delight

Drew Is Critical Of Contract Given To Montreal Firm

Premier Claims Howe Indicated DC-4 Douglas Plane Would be Built at Malton

BUDGET DEBATE ENDS

Toronto, March 29 (CP)—The budget debate ended, the Ontario legislature again will turn to the comparatively light agenda of government and private bills and to renewed wrangles between Premier Conant and Opposition Leader Drew.

A motion yesterday to go into committee of supply to consider the estimates brought the third formal division of the session when the C.C.F. official opposition proposed an amendment regretting lack of government action to guarantee "planned development of the natural resources in this province and social ownership of monopoly enterprises."

The Liberals, the two Labor-Progressive members, the Macleod, Toronto Bellwoods, and J. B. Salsberg, Toronto St. Andrews, independent Liberal, and Mitchell Hepburn of Elgin, voted with the government against the C.C.F. The vote was 80-57 against the amendment, which was defeated on a motion by the same margin.

Mr. Drew, opening the debate called by the opposition leader, E. B. Jolliffe. Before it came to a close Premier Conant, Mr. Jolliffe, Mrs. Salsberg and W. L. Miller (Conservative, Dufferin-Simcoe) had budget debate.

Premier Conant reassured the House of Ontario's intention to cooperate with the Dominion in the Dominion-Provincial conference and said he had suggested to Prime Minister Mackenzie King the establishment of a Dominion-Provincial committee. Mr. Drew also suggested a preliminary Dominion-Provincial conference to prepare for the main parley.

Bills involving the city of Brantford, Kirkland Lake, Fort William, the township of North Monaghan were given third reading.

Grand Trunk Not Remedy Situation

Mr. Jolliffe, in his summation for the opposition in the budget debate, said the government's action in granting an additional $100,000 to municipalities for education did not remedy the educational system. The government's failure to provide educational opportunities on a better basis at the present time, he declared, were still to be faced.

The Drew motion of amendment subsequently defeated.

Premier Drew said no promise of compulsory education laws had been broken. The government had the matter under consideration and intended to carry it out.

The assertion by the House that should the new department of planning and development reach decision on the question of public ownership it would not hesitate to call an immediate session of the legislature to put the department's recommendations into action.

Mr. Drew criticized a Federal announcement that DC-4 Douglas Transport planes for Canada's air services would be manufactured in the Canadian Victory plant at Malton, Ont., rather than in the "vast new controlled by those who are citizens of Canada, not of any foreign nation, or of the United States".

Decision Abandoned

Mr. Drew declared said Munitions Minister Howe had indicated that post-war commercial aircraft for Canada's Trans Air Lines would be given to the Lancaster plant of Victory Aircraft, formerly the decision had been abandoned and the DC-4 Douglas assembly at Malton plant and other subsidiary industries would be affected, should more quickly convert to peacetime production than the Victory establishment.

"It is important to know that Mr. Symington (H. C. Symington, president, C.P.A.), was personally associated with the Royal Securities Corporation of Montreal, which is heavily interested in financing Canadian Vickers, Limited," Mr. Drew said.

Mr. Diefenbaker spoke when the House resumed discussion of air transport estimates after passing all but the munitions and assets estimates in the War Appropriation Bill, a total of $18,400,000.

Australia and New Zealand had declared for an international air authority, he said, or failing that an empire system.

"Canada is the pioneer of the airways of the future," he continued. "Should not Toronto also be the pioneer of an Empire scheme comprising the whole world?

"That is the challenge I give to the Minister of Trade and I say there is implied in that no threat to anyone. There is implied unlimited collaboration in the interests of the control of aviation after the war for the benefit of the universal peace.

"The establishment of the scheme would allow Canada, to maintain Trans-Canada Air Lines. An empire corporation set up in this way could well give Canada as head office for the system."

The policy propounded by Mr. Howe, that Canada must meet the needs of a rapidly changing air situation by co-operation with international control was the only solution because if aviation was to be controlled on narrow national lines the seeds of a future war for control of aviation would be sown.

An international plan, however, could only be reached after full discussion, he said. "We should not know what discussion had taken place and whether there had been any agreement such a system. Without Russia no international agreement could be made."

Should Maintain Control

Mr. Howe said: "As far as I am concerned," he said, "we believe that Canada should maintain control over the further developing of her vital position in national and international aviation.

"We believe that all international air routes should be owned and remain under the Board of Transport Commissioners, in accord with similar powers and not under the control of the executive.

"We believe that existing T. C. A. lines should be maintained, reasonably subsidized and a relatively-owned commercial aviation company be set up to operate and to open up new routes."

Mr. Diefenbaker said the C.C.F. policy differed from that of the British Labor Party in that the British Labor Party had international company operating airlines and the C.C.F. believed in international control.

M. J. Coldwell, C.C.F. leader, said his party regarded international ownership and operation as the ultimate goal. He believed the United States would go any further than international control.

Canadian Scene A Century Ago

By J. L. G.

Full justice should be done to the memory of Canada's pioneers. Their cheerfulness under adversity and courage in danger are an example for us who must also "fight the good fight."

When the first frosts of autumn began to tinge the trees and rivers with ice, the men went about the farms killing the hogs for their winter eating. It was a busy time for women, too. Every one expected the tender over the tallow after the slaughter and get-rich-quick Yankee peddler had not often yet turned the job over to itinerant workers. Candle-making then ceases sometimes shamed amateur efforts; but on the other hand, it was not economical and therefore more fashionable, to have all housewifely articles home made.

Some house-wives liked tallow-dip candles, finding them particularly suitable for bedrooms, being unsworn by mound-candles which were apt to smoke and splutter after the dips. It was a slow-coach family that could not produce dip candles by the time the frosts were pushed away without delay in a cool place to harden, otherwise they were a nuisance.

What a fat-hoarder the pioneer was—and who could blame her! Unlike the fashionable modern lady, who turns all grease remnants in to help the war effort, she saved the odd scrag and used them for candle-making. In a kitchen, she quickly made herself a "country-made lamp" by running a cotton thread through a candle mould and filling it with melted lard. But what housewife in the world would allow her supply of lights to get so low that she would have to resort to this? Candles saved by itself formed too soft a candle. However, by the addition of a little beeswax, or else mixing lard and beef suet candles which burned with a degree of hardness could be obtained.

Few of the pioneers burned their candles "at both ends." When one saw the flickering flames of a candle one could be sure that the household was enjoying a celebration of some sort. Usually, a new candle adorning the supper table was doused as soon as the meal was over. The blasting fire had to take over the duties of a lighting system.

Some housemasters stamped candle moulds in a solution of pewter before threading them through moulds. The hardening process in so doing they made the candles burn brighter and with less odour.

Empire System of Air Transportation Within International Framework Progressive Conservative Proposal

By FRANK PLANKETT
(Canadian Press Staff Writer)

Ottawa, March 29 —(CP)— An Empire system of air transportation operating within the framework of an international system for the control of world aviation is the Progressive Conservative alternative to the government's policy on international aviation.

The policy of the official Opposition Party was given in the House last night by John Diefenbaker, Prince Albert, Sask., Conservative Munitions Minister Howe's policy statement on aviation of last week.

With the broad lines of the government policy Mr. Diefenbaker was in agreement. He said he regretted, however, no mention was made by a closer tieup of aviation interests of the nations of the British Commonwealth and suggested such a tieup would not be hostile to the interests of other nations nor to the principle of international control.

Empire Air Board Suggested.

Among his suggestions for setting up an Empire Air Board on which Great Britain, Dominions and India would be represented to arrive at a common air policy, was the creation of a corporation operating airlines which might include the headquarters in Canada because of this country's strategic position in regard to international air routes.

Canada, operating alone, he said, could not hope to be a first power in the air. Canada's position as the centre of international air traffic, Canada's proximity to Europe and with the men, the skill and the experience of the Royal Canadian Commonwealth Air Training Plan, this country could become a first power in the post-war aircraft industry, a training ground for thousands of workers after the war.

Questioned Proposal

Mr. Diefenbaker said he questioned the government's proposal to follow the "chosen instrument" principle in setting up Trans-Canada Air Lines as the agency for international routes in the war of what he said was a British tendency to depart from the "chosen instrument" principle.

In the domestic field he said he failed to know the reasons for separating airway ownership from airport control. He urged that the T.C.A. should be maintained and reasonably subsidized and that other companies should be maintained and allowed to develop new routes.

His was critical of the government's proposal for a Canadian air transport Board on the grounds that it would not be independent. He thought the regulation of air transport in Canada by an independent board, other than present Board of Transport Commissioners or a new board.

THE RAINBOW

In the Old Testament, back in the days of Noah, God sent a rainbow. God sent the rainbow in the cloud as a token of his covenant with Noah and with Noah and his descendants.

The rainbow has attracted the attention of the fascinated man since the beginning of time.

The secret of the rainbow lies in the individual raindrops.

Proof of this statement as I like it. Each prism in splitting light into its primary colors.

The rainbow is produced by the refraction and reflection of light through a drop of water, mist or spray.

The most perfect rainbows are seen when the sun is shining brightly behind the observer and the rain is falling in large drops in front of him.

This is due to the fact that the drops retract and reflect light differently at different angles from the observer.

The principal bow is known as the primary rainbow; it is caused by the refraction of light through the drop. The colors are red on the outside and violet on the inside. Its form such a rainbow each ray of light is refracted twice and reflected once; refracted on entering the drop, reflected from the inner surface and refracted again as it emerges on its way to the observer.

What is known as the secondary rainbow, often seen outside the primary, is larger and fainter and differs from the other in that the colors in it are reversed. In this case two internal reflections take place in the drop before it comes out of water.

The concentric bands composing a rainbow have their common centre at the anti-solar point. Imagine a line through the sun and the eye of the observer, and consider the point where it pierces the sky at an equal distance below the horizon as the sun is above it. That is the anti-solar point.

The rainbow does not appear to be the same to each observer. Two observers, for example, standing close together, will not see the same rainbow. Each will see a rainbow that is peculiar to himself. Each will be the centre of his own rainbow.

Loss of Oilfield Would Cripple German Effort

By KIRKE L. SIMPSON

Russia's winter offensive along the east bank of the Dniester River and now pushing on to the Carpathians, key to the Germans' gateway to the Rumanian Valley, is striking the most deadly offensive blow of the war at German resources.

They have more than ruined many breeders from the Southern Ukraine granary. They have virtually trapped in the Nikolayev-Odessa area the German Army Group that, definitely from an offensive-defensive strategy to aggressive defensive, could deal Hitler's armies the most damaging blow struck at them by the United Nations—war-fellowship.

Prime Product Oilfields

The crucial front the Germans must hold in Rumania if they are not to lose their most vital war resource, Rumanian oil, is the northern sector of the first front north of its junction with the Danube near Galatz. The front and the line of defense along the Danube close to each other, afford the Nazis a water-guarded defense line linking the Danube Delta with Carpathians and Transylvanian Alps. The wide sweep of open country from Galatz northwestward is thus considerably protected not only by the Siret River in the vulnerable section of the front indicated deployment to cover Ploesti and its vital oil installations.

It is made clear that both the Prut and the Sireth have been Russian-outflanked to the north and northeast, however; and that a concerted Russian new attack to break through to the Ploesti zone is developing. Simultaneously the Kamenets-Podolsk bar opened the way for Russian armies to push into Dniester Valley mapping the Lwow-Bucharest railway, has carried the Russian front well to the east of the Carpathian Mountain wall in the Stanislawow area. This effectively covered the right flank of the new Russian offensive now striking at the Prut against any possible major German counter-attack from the north.

On the Prut the Russians were last reported less than 100 miles northeast of Jassy, Rumania's oil centre from which hydrocarbons flow to the Danube through the iron gate of the river pass.

It Is Objective.

By every indication Russian strategy has a bitter fighting in the Dniester and Southeastern Poland Ukraine and Southeastern Poland has been aimed for weeks at isolating the upper sector of the Danube Delta in Rumania for a campaign to blow at Nazi oil resources. Whether the attack also is to be pushed into the Carpathian passes now in sight of Russian troops or into Hungary and Czechoslovakia is open to doubt.

Military reports indicate the Germans are using their salients of Kamenets-Podolsk and Tarnopol to push heavy forces southeastward for a desperate stand on the Dniester across the Danube Delta and Carpathians and Transylvanian Alps. The wide scope of open country from Galatz northwestward to Lwow is considered protected only by the Siret River is the vulnerable section of the line needed depleted most to cover Ploesti and its vital oil installations.

It made clear that both the Prut and the Sireth have been Russian-outflanked to the north and

WILL MAKE NO REQUEST TO OTTAWA COUNTRIES

London, March 28 — (CP) — British plans do not expect to Russian government other than Ehs for removal of Japanese Ambassador, Foreign Secretary Eden told Commons today.

Replying to a question whether such action would be asked of Russia, Switzerland, Spain, Turkey, Sweden or Switzerland, Eden said, "No, the considered opinion of the Government of Ehs do not apply in the cases of other countries mentioned."

Bustling Capital Red Cross Centre For Newfoundland

St. John's, Nfld., March 28—(CP)—Canada's largest city in Newfoundland who might be called the "Five-Million Pound Town" because of the millions of dollars spent here by Canadian and American forces, is also a "Red Cross town" which has achieved a record of wonderful service since the Red Cross was organized here on October 1, 1940.

Reasons who reach St. John's by various routes by the plan saying, "Is like Winnipeg" or "It was here that I set foot on this dock a year ago." She usually is.

Many have had a trip crossing the Atlantic bound for Canada received special requests from fellow passengers, many of them merchant seamen who had at one time been torpedoed and taken as survivors to St. John's to remember them by Miss Wilson.

"The St. John's Canadian Red Cross organization is the largest and most efficient we have met in our world travels—and we have met many of our friends hold the same opinion," they said.

Miss Wilson was the first to tap Red Cross resources when an influenza epidemic struck the city. After that came the Auxiliary Services officers working with the Red Cross to provide comforts for the troops, recreation halls built and equipped. Then came the days the Canadian Red Cross got the resident Canadian women together and formed the best aviation rule but with lunch-cards for all high-duty engines and machinery.

For that reason the impending Mid-Britain battle of the Danube Delta could be one of the decisive campaigns of the war, the forthrunner of German collapse.

2 Dutch Farm Hands Condemned by Nazis

New York, March 28 — (AP) — The Berlin radio said today that two Dutch farm hands, Peter Heisbeed and Henrik Burnsma, had been condemned to death by a German special court in Cologne on charges of sabotage and slaughtering cattle and selling or bartering the meat.

German food needs "can be regarded as fully ensured in the fifth year of the war," the broadcast added, but said the courts must proceed "ruthlessly against any criminal infringements of just food distribution."

Comforts For Sailors

Over a three-year period more than 250,000 beautifully knitted woollen garments have been given out. The Red Cross truck and station wagon driven by smart Red Cross Corps girls are familiar sights delivering bags of "woollens" to Allied ships.

To the men of the navy, army and air force of all Allied countries and to merchant navy men, go these warm woollens, provided, despite the cold that sweeps the North Atlantic. Clothing for survivors landed in Newfoundland is an important part of this war.

Canadian Red Cross is also responsible for many of the supplies, particularly operating room materials utilized by the service hospitals. Voluntary workers make weekly visits to hospitals, providing Canadian newspapers, magazines, candy and cigarettes for each patient. They administer the hospital libraries. At Christmastime the gifts are brought by Canadian patients and favors and decorations put up in the wards. In addition, parties are given and specials for convalescents arranged by this busy corps of Red Cross workers.

When a ship docks, the workers find out what supplies and comforts the crew requires from Canadian Red Cross Transport drivers deliver the orders to the ships.

Volunteer work is maintained by wives of navy, army and air force officers and men, and a group of Canadian, English, Scottish and women resident in St. John's for many years. Some 65 of these women work each week at Red Cross to keep all services functioning.

One of the newest services is in connection with the Canadian Navy Well Child Clinic. There the mother brings her child for a weekly check-up and examination by the hospital doctors. Canadian Red Cross lends a hand by providing volunteer workers.

Commercial Fishing Problems Aired by Tobermory Resident

"We commercial fishermen don't feel we have had an olive co-operation with the Department of Game and Fisheries as we have a right to expect," T. A. Golden, Tobermory, said in a talk at Owen Sound, and reported in the Sun-Times. Conditions seem to be changing. The old saying is the squeaking wheel gets the grease.

Mr. Golden, who is the president of the Lake Huron and Georgian Bay Commercial Fishermen's Association, has been active in behalf of commercial fishing. He also dealt with the problems of the commercial fishermen.

Mr. Golden, in commencing his address stated that at a recent meeting of the game and fish committee of the Ontario Legislature the president of the Northwestern Ontario Resort Owners' Association had asked that a ban be placed on the manufacture of gill nets and that the privilege be given to residents of the commercial fishermen. He had spoken against this proposal. Which had been defeated. Tourists and commercial fishermen, Mr. Golden remarked, had a little interest-ested in the propagation of fish and there is no reason why they should be at cross purposes.

Three Methods Used

There were, Mr. Golden said, three generally used methods of propagating fish. The natural method, fishing considered a poor man's game, so propagation including the necessary boat, could be purchased for $2,000 to $3,000. Then there was the net, the weight were used to halt hooks and the fishermen supplied with the hooks. He had to set their hooks, as fish do not generally congregate on the surface. The hooks are 24 or 25 feet apart on the line. At the start of the year the hooks are set in deep water, later the lines are floated so that the hooks are between the surface of the water and the bottom.

A second method, Mr. Golden continued, is the use of pound nets, set on stakes driven into the bed of the lake. There is a lead from the shore to a heart-shaped portion of the net, then a trap. Pound nets cost $500 each, without the stakes, and the limit for each fisherman is ten. The licences cost $50 per net. About $10,000 would be required to buy all equipment for one boat, a fishing, and the upkeep was usually by quite heavy.

Gill Nets Most Costly

Gill nets are the method most commonly used by commercial fishermen in the Tobermory area, but the equipment costs more money than any other means of fishing, about $20,000 being required to equip a big commercial outfit. As many as seven gangs of nets would be required, it was stated, for a year's haul for different equipment. Gangs of nets cost from $1,000 to $2,000 each and are often five to seven miles long. They are generally set in 30 to 40 feet of water.

In this district, Mr. Golden said, the fishing season lasts for eight months of the year and for the commercial fishermen it means repair their equipment. Depreciation is considerably "terrific."

Fish Getting Scarce

Fish are getting less and less plentiful, the speaker declared. In 11-1936 fishing held up fairly well. Statistics compiled by the Ontario Department of Game and Fisheries, from fishermen's returns, showing between 1926 and 1943 the catch of trout in Lake Huron dropped 62 per cent, the catch of whitefish 52 per cent in the Georgian Bay the trout catch was down 14 per cent, and in the whitefish catch 56 per cent. Returns for the past year in the catch of this trend, in Lake Huron at least.

The chief demand for the depletion of fish is the fact that the fishermen, Mr. Golden declared, is the remedy, he said, is intelligent restocking. The Government of Ontario, Mr. Golden said, had undertaken restocking using the same methods as used 25 years ago. In spite of the fact experience with speckled trout had proved that fry failed to survive, the latter results were obtained with fingerlings, the Government continued to release lake trout fry in the Great Lakes. The Lake Huron and Georgian Bay Commercial Fishermen's Association, Mr. Golden said, had continually requested a change in policy. In the past, to make room when spawn hatches, part of the fry had been dumped in the Great Lakes, the remaining fish reared for planting in inland lakes. The commercial fishermen had advocated the taking kept for the Great Lakes. This year about 1,200,000 lake trout fry were reared to three quarters to two inches in length will be released in public waters.

Another reason for the decrease in the amount of lake trout caught, Mr. Golden said, followed was the increase in the smelt but this problem had been solved. The smelt having mysteriously died. Lamprey eels are a great pest, Mr. Golden, he said, and he advocated killing them when they spawn in the spring on the North Shore.

Canadians Shape Varied Opinions of British Life

By DOUG HOW
(Canadian Press Staff Writer)

London, March 26—(CP)—The story of the relatives who came for the weekend and stayed three months has been repeated within the import by the whims of this war.

Now, unless the crystal ball's thwarted, there'll be visit one branch of the Empire family ever and another will soon have its turn at its climax. With the departure of the armies of the world from the isles of Canadian invasion of the British Isles will be definitely on the wane.

The invasion started in late 1939 and grew to a mighty strength until it was in the Mediterranean drew Canadian fighting men there and started the sapping process to which the assault in the west will give a final push.

Considering men who returned to Canada wounded or on leave for other reasons, and those who have come overseas to fill the ranks, there is probably roughly 500,000 Canadians have seen the Britain they were taught to call "home."

They have formed their own opinions, some good, some bad, and the impact of their thoughts should share strongly in shaping Canada's course of future years.

The extent to which they have been influenced by the war's ways is something only the years can determine. They have remained a community unto themselves here, a colony which sent its sons and daughters to the islands but always drew them back again to their own ways, manners and customs.

The Love of Canada

Few will remain behind in Britain when the general homeward movement begins. On the other hand, far more than the 16,000 brides of Canadian servicemen will cross the Atlantic in the years after the war if immigration regulations permit. There are few Canadians in this country who don't know someone intent on taking up a new life overseas.

It would be false to make the flat statement that the Canadians have been away for only four years. Many, not all of them in the ranks of the service, disliked the country and have not become accustomed to it in the years of the war.

But it would be equally false to make the statement they have not liked British Isles in those years. There is no knowing the depth of sincerity beneath the words of a soldier who grumbles about "this lousy country."

It depends to a great extent on the individual, on the people he meets and on how he tries to meet. Thousands of Canadians ignored the standing offer of hospitality in homes throughout the British Isles.

They have taken to the supposedly dour, close Scots much more quickly than the less English. The Scots and Scotland they found a bit more to their liking and here is bit more like home.

The main force of the Canadian invasion, however, has spent itself in the English South and in London. It is from the capital and the verdant, beautiful counties of Surrey, Kent and Sussex most of their brides have come, from quaint, Tudor villages, from capricious London, the placid East Grinstead, aged Guildford.

Here military necessity put them, and here, for better or worse, they have lived these four years of war.

It takes a jerk of 5½ tons to break the 28 cords in the British army's parachute. Each rigging line is made of the finest braided silk cord, tested to a breaking load of 450 pounds. The canopy to which they are attached is made of the finest silk. The whole business weighs 30 pounds, including the pack and container bag, and costs £9 ($280). As a consequence it is now calculated that the parachute jump is no more dangerous than jumping off a slow train.

Mess Room Chatter Of Canada's Airmen

By LOUIS V. HUNTER
(Canadian Press Staff Writer)

Canadian Bomber Base, Kingsland, March 28. (CP)—Officers at the mess are chuckling over the story of a "Wit" who asked to be paraded before the base commander.

She entered the C.O.'s office, sat down smartly, and said, "Sir, I'd like to apply for some 'pre-invasion' leave so I can have a few days with my husband before the second front starts."

The C.O. was taken aback. "Pre-invasion" leave, that was a new one for the book, apparently.

"I know you know the date, sir, so I'll leave it with you".

The commander promised to consider the request, convinced that some people are given credit for knowing much more than they actually do.

The Battle of Berlin looks "just like the Maple Leaf Gardens' ice surface on a Saturday night," the crews of the Canadian Bomber Group PO. Lloyd Conley MacDonald, Toronto navigator, reported after a raid on the German capital. But, he added the airmen agree it's possibly just a bit brighter.

The ice illusion is caused by the solid layer of cloud that covered Berlin during the recent attacks, while the flood lighting comes from fighter flares above and fire and barfied searchlight beams below the layer. The action comes from hundreds of aircraft passing through the area and even color is supplied by the pathfinders' heavier marking flares.

Flight Sergt. whose home is at 24 Henning Ave., Turnpin, worked in the Toronto, Ottawa and Winnipeg Transcad of the Canadian Press before he enlisted. He is with the Thunderbird Squadron, Canadian unit.

Dall came overseas with the 48th Highlanders of Canada, won his commission with them and then was transferred to the R.F.C. for flying duties. He rejoined his unit after the war.

He came to British this time in March, 1943, from No. 1 Service Flying Training School and No. 4 Training Command, Calgary and went to Air Force with the squadron, which converted from Wellington bombers to Halifax four-engine Halifaxes after its return to England from the Mediterranean.

Guild to Care For Small Children During Service

St. Andrew's Guild held its monthly meeting in St. Andrew's Presbyterian Church auditorium on Tuesday night with Mrs. J. Wilson presiding. Mrs. W. M. Bennett read letters of thanks for parcels sent to boys overseas. A committee to visit the premises of the Deacon Shirt Company and the making of war materials in operation was accepted. Final arrangements for tea were made. It was decided that the Guild would aid in the care of small children during the summer months to enable their mothers to attend service. Plans for the entertainment of the service men on Sunday evening were discussed. "Silver Wings in the Moonlight" and "Lilacs" were accompanied by Mrs. G. Stackhouse.l Cpl. Simpson, Mrs. W. Smith, Mrs. "Brown Bird," accompanied by L.W. Clarence; quartet of Buddy Carbaugh, Don Bankier, Bill and Gordon Bankier, sang, "Sweet Afton." Delicious refreshments were served by Mrs. E. S. Hill and her group.

Turn Food 'Remnants' Into Soup

The soup kettle offers such a stead of the inevitable crackers or thrifty and nutritious means of utilizing a great many foods that homemakers cannot afford to overlook it these war days. Celery tops, greens of all kinds, carrots, tomatoes, potatoes, herbs, spices, fish, poultry—they can all go into the soup pot, where all of their valuable juices will be retained.

Many food odds and ends that might be discarded may be used to make a savory broth or stock for wartime meals. Believe it or not, even fish heads and backbones may be used for soup—they form the foundation for good fish chowder stock. And cooked chicken feet you were going to toss into the discard can be used to make a delicious broth the bird's neck and wing tips to make a rich, flavorful bouillon.

Bacon and ham rinds give savory flavor to dried bean soup. Left-over cabbage and other leaves may be cooked in the water in which the blanched flavor of several vegetables is always better than the flavor of just one vegetable. The stock is strained, and after the leaves have cooked awhile.

Noodle soup is at its best when it's made with chicken stock, but noodles also have their place in vegetable soup. Spaghetti, alphabet or elbow macaroni are also substantial additions to the main dish soup. Be sure your "soup accessories" as well as the "soup necessaries" are varied now and then. In-

Londoners Stress Simple Fashions In Wartime Dress

By MARGARET ECKER
(Canadian Press Staff Writer.)

London, March 26 (CP)—Charm starts many a story on women's fashions in Britain these days, and the story about the well-dressed woman that hurry along the Strand or Piccadilly or any other London thoroughfare, as a similar crowd would be on Toronto's Yonge Street or Granville Street.

Clothes here are a bit drab and a bit severe, but the British woman has done that. There's a bit uniform in all women in London are putting up a stiff fight to be smartly dressed—and most of them are succeeding.

Those who know say that England's women are better dressed than ever before in Mayfair mansions with their pre-war Hollywood wardrobes. But despite clothes rationing shortages, the women of moderate means who may never have owned more than one cheap little dress now with the phantom of clothing coupons before them, can shop and buy one really good dress and looks for the first time.

There's still the venerably heavy English tweed suit, but the good tweeds can be cut into creations of charm and style. Or they give up 13 hoarded coupons—one-fifty of the total 66 a year—and buy a make sure it is well-cut of shoulder, waist and hemline.

The same suit—or the good little simple wool dress—is the mainstay of working women in England, and night life starts a split second after work ends. Even the poorest curtain may go up as early as 5.15 p.m. 1.30 p.m. in Paris—in time for time to whip home for a quick change from office to pub and buy Fred the sleepy time gals like to be home by 11 p.m. in this fresh London, but the early evening of dining and dancing has to start early to get home in time.

Hence the little black dress is a wartime playgirl's friend in need and the girls who wear them are the best-dressed things wherever they are. The girls work hard to look their best, and after one night the faithful frock will have been pressed with pink flowers in the wearer's mood, and the next time while, or with a collar of sparkling sequins.

Not many of the girls around town these days could stop traffic with their clothes, but they do manage to be more than well-dressed women are supposed to be.

The war's brought its clothes revolution too. A couple of years ago here, people said, that women shouldn't wear hats, and most went bareheaded, but they took to wearing hats now, when they can get them.

Color Harmony in Cosmetics

Sheila Ryan knows the art of make-up.

By HELEN FOLLETT

LIKE certain illnesses, beauty fads and fashion frenzies usually go through three stages—the onset, the crisis, the convalescence. But that rule does not seem to apply to lipstick or nail polish, both of which have become institutions. The beautiful lip career has been blazing five years, and liquid veneer has been applied to nails for almost as long a time.

Pretty glitter on feminine nails bespeaks good grooming and attention to appearance. Nail polish, like lip stick, started out a bright Chinese red. Men hated it; some hate any polish much brighter than the natural coral coloring of the nails. You'd think they'd be used to it by this time. When color schemes are concerned, men are usually conservative.

Mrs. Smarty uses several shades of polish, knowing that there will be color conflicts if the tinting on her nails doesn't make friends with the frock she wears. Sometimes when Mrs. S. goes committee shopping, she takes along a sample of her dress fabric to see how it gets along with current lipstick and nail polish offerings.

Vivid Make-up

Called a black or white frock, flisks-up can be fairly vivid. The navy blue dress does very well by itself when rouge and lipstick take on a definite bluish tone to match the color scheme. There's a luscious pinkmauve polish that is going to be a sensation when summer comes and we wear pastel clothes.

Coral adds looks well with grey, ruby is a friend to brown.—When one considers the immense number of cosmetic steps, soft pedal on them, women are concerned, men are usually conservative.

Mrs. Smarty uses several shades opst soft greyish ones, are trying.

MORE RATION COUPONS WILL BE SOON FALL DUE

Butter coupons 56 and 57 in that book will fall due on the first day of April, thereafter in the April and the first 10 P coupons in the same book will be valid at last for the purchase of home canning sugar. Attention is also called to the fact that ration coupons 50, 51, 52 and 53 will expire on Friday, March 31.

Surprise Witness Says She Heard Woman Scream

Nurse Is Family Above Lonergan Apartment In N.Y. Testifies

CONFESSION READ

By JAMES H. FORKERSHILD
(Associated Press Staff Writer)

New York, March 23—(AP)—A surprise witness testified Tuesday that she heard a woman's "loud, shrill scream" coming from the apartment occupied by Mrs. Patricia Lonergan shortly after the time the young heiress was slain.

Testifying at the trial of Wayne Lonergan, who is charged with his wife's death, Annalise Schoenberg, a nurse, said she lived in the apartment above Mrs. Lonergan, said:

"I heard a woman say, 'Oh my! What are you doing? Stop that!'"

The nurse testified after Max Levinson, operator of a drug store, identified a man as the man who entered his establishment on Madison Avenue March 24th and purchased a pancake compact. The state contends the defendant used the compact in an effort to hide scratches inflicted on his face during the fatal attack.

In a dramatic move, Levinson stepped down from witness stand, walked over to the defense table, pointed a finger at Lonergan and said: "That's him."

The state made several unsuccessful attempts to purchase poisons, ranging from cyanide to veronal, to commit suicide, his unsigned confession, read in court, said.

Lonergan, according to the stenographic report read by Assistant District Attorney Court Jury at his trial for the slaying of his wife, Patricia, admitted he struck her a number of times but denied he ever attempted suicide.

When the first will was written, the statement said, Mrs. Lonergan had an estate of about $250,000 and was to inherit $7,000,000 from a trust fund set up by her late grandfather, Max Bernheimer, who had accumulated a fortune in the brewery business.

Jubilant Montreal Canadiens Hope to Wind Up Series With Leafs in Their Next Meeting

Habitants Go Ahead 3-1 in Games When They Win 4-1 Tuesday Night

DURNAN SUPERB

By FRASER MacDOUGALL
Canadian Press Staff Writer

Toronto, March 20 — (CP) — The jubilant Montreal Canadiens today trained their sights on the Stanley Cup final, confident that one win more in Montreal tomorrow night would wind up their best-of-seven semi-final series with Toronto Maple Leafs.

The National Hockey League champions took a 3-1 stranglehold on the series last night, with a 4-1 conquest of Leafs before 13,709 fans. It was their third straight triumph at the expense of the Leafs whose only win so far in the series came in the opener in Montreal one week ago last night.

Hero of the Montreal win were fiery Murph Chamberlain who played his first professional hockey with the Habs and goalie Bill Durnan, the 29-year-old Toronto native whose stellar play in the Montreal goal this season won him the Vezina Trophy as the year's outstanding goaltender.

Chamberlain, 29-year-old native of Sharpville, Ont., assisted in one Montreal goal and then scored the two final counters which made victory emphatic. One was on a long shot with 2 seconds to go while the Toronto goal was unprotected, Paul Bibeault being on the bench while all players engaged on Frazier in an effort to get the two tying goals.

The lanky Durnan was superb all the way. He was the Leafs only hope on a shot by Leaf rookie Ted (Teeder) Kennedy, 18-year-old Toronto boy, Ont., youth, whose play for Toronto was outstanding.

Game Hard Fought

The game was harder-fought than the score indicated. In the first period and again in much of the third the Toronto boys showed plenty of scoring pressure. Winger Georges Boothman summed up their efforts in the dressing room after the game when he said: "We're just being outplayed in this series."

First break in the close checking went to Canadiens in the second period. Jerry Heffernan scored the goal with assists going to Glen Harmon and chunky Mike Bibeault. The puck was deflected by the body of one of the Toronto players aimed to bring in front of the nets but when it was over the Leafs were unable to get the puck out. Veteran Hector (Toe) Blake added another goal before the period ended, whipping the puck past Bibeault on a play with Phil Watson and Elmer Lach.

Leafs opened up with a furious drive in the third period but were unable to score until Heffernan went off for slashing. Then a power play clicked with Kennedy getting the goal and Boothman and Pratt getting assists.

But Chamberlain dashed the hopes of Toronto fans with his first goal on a pass from Leo Lamoureux. Chamberlain's second goal, perhaps gave him considerable satisfaction for on Saturday night he had missed the open net from close range in the final minute under similar circumstances. Bibeault, also having been taken from the nets in that game.

EUROPEAN DRIVE MAY PUT CRIMP IN U.K. SOCCER

Player Scarcity and Curtailed Traffic Likely to Close Football Fields

SCORES SERVING

By ALLAN NICKLESON
Canadian Press Staff Writer

London, March 20—(CP)—It looks as though the opening of the European drive will be the crusher for British soccer. It will be only the severest of gestures, but many mean that for a short time the game won't be able to carry on with the best-we-can fashion which has characterized the wartime brand of date.

Scores of footballers already are serving abroad. When the Second Front forces move out of Britain there will be other scores of footballers among them.

Then, coupled with expected drastic curtailment in Britain of all traffic but that absolutely necessary for mines may well be enough to close football fields for a time.

It's tough enough now for harassed managers to field teams but, without pretending to keep soccer on the high plane it has struggled through five years of war, added by the fact that the government that considers sport an essential tonic for a nation's morale is a fairly dizzy days.

To keep the game going the Football League, ruling body of the sport, has allowed the players "guest player" broadly speaking, that means that a footballer can play for any club near to where he is stationed although he is a registered player with another club. The bulk of these guest players just work in factories in their when the invasion of the west starts.

In some instances, through the "guest player" system, little-known footballers have been called from the stands to fill out a well-known team a few minutes before the kick-off, thereby giving the brand of football, as played in the big-time leagues before the war, has deteriorated but remains nevertheless a top-ranking source of enjoyment for the spectator.

Youngsters Get Chance

That's comparable to the situation in the National Hockey League in Canada and the United States where playing timber which would not be up to peacetime standards is welcome these days.

In some instances the use of guest players has meant that a player competed against the club that owned him. A example of this came a few days ago when Eddie Hapgood, America's International back, played for Luton Town against the Gunners in a League South match. Another Arsenal star, Lee Sexton, played for season in the other major league, League North. He was with Notts County, which failed to reach the qualifying round for the League North Cup.

Ted Matthews, star outside right with England's wartime international teams, played most of the season with Blackpool because his Royal Air Force unit was in that vicinity. He is the property of Stoke City, also of the League North, and managed to play a couple of games with them while on leave.

Now that the League North competition has entered the cup rounds proper, however, players are limited to one club. So, Matthews will play with Blackpool and both such clubs advanced into the cup rounds, Matthews can be in a better to knocking his own club from the competition.

It is a complex situation. Teamplay that featured peacetime competition has been practised in many cases by individual effort. Then, too, the speed of the sport has been toned down a bit because players lack soccer timing and condition that comes from practice.

Toronto, March 20 — (CP) — Proposal to stage an "east-west" high school football championship next fall between Toronto and Winnipeg teams crowned champion in collegiate points which want a chance to take part in any cross-country play.

Harry (London Free Press) Elam says that fans in Western Ontario are "highly incensed and not a little indignant" over the whole thing. Hamilton, Windsor and Sarnia all have a number of good high school pigskin pushers, he says, and would like a look-see at an elimination series to decide the eastern champion. He suggests if this is not done the game would be only an exhibition.

His point is well taken, but then promoters of the game weren't asking for a Dominion championship, but only an east-west game. And it can't be denied that Toronto is the east and Winnipeg fh the west!

Record Searchings:

Ever since Maurice Richard slammed the goals for Canadiens, his stalined thumbs have been searching books to locate another Stanley Cup scoring marks.

Winner by a wide margin was Frank McGee of Ottawa Silver Seven, who netted 14 against Dawson City early in the century. Then there was Joe Malone who scored seven in a game against Sydney Millionaires in 1913, and Harry Smith of Ottawa with six in a 1906 Cup game against Montreal Wanderers.

Only other player to set while the scorers' teams were on scoring jamborees of their own. Nearest approach to Richard's unique one-man feat was made by defenceman Art Ross who netted four for Vancouver in a Stanley Cup contest against Regina in 1921, his defencemate scored the only other Vancouver goal. Dick Irvin played for Regina in that series.

Incidentally:

Freddie Edwards in the Port Williams Times-Journal points out that both Gus Bodnar and Gaye Stewart, Leaf forwards, hail from Lancaster, from the lakehead city, which is thus the first centre to produce prize-winning rookies two years in a row . . . Prince Albert, Sask., kept faith in having the silliest scoring stones in the west. They were taken west in an emergency in 1939 and used during every winter since . . . Montreal sportscasts say the Boston Bruins' Jack Crawford is using stones dating back to 1850, and has some of 1903 vintage tucked away . . . The Quebec club has some of the 1877 period . . . Age was no drawback in the Y.M.C.A. Crooks, Winnipeg intermediate basketball champions this year. Their average age was 32 1-2 years, with a 22-year spread between the oldest player, Lauder Phillips, one of the survivors of the 1933 plane crash that killed Jimmy Gardiner and old Winnipeg Tollers, played with the Crooks.

197 NIGHT GAMES IN MAJOR BALL DURING SEASON

Big League Electric Light Bill Estimated at Over $60,000

SENATORS LEAD

The electric light bill for the two 1946 major baseball league schedules will be close to $60,000.

The 197 night games scheduled in the American, 91 in the National) will be the most in any season's history. Reason for the increase from 156 last season is the lack of daylight baseball. Games not in the armed forces are working in war industries during the day.

The Washington Senators have the top total of 43 night games, playing every weekday night from May 10 to the close of the 1946 season Sept. 17. Washington was granted this privilege because Federal Government workers cannot get away from their jobs before 5 p.m. The St. Louis Cardinals and Brooklyn Dodgers with 42 each. Browns will be permitted to play 41 night games. Other teams equipped with lights are limited to 14 night games each. Only major league teams without lighting equipment are the Chicago Cubs, Boston Braves and Red Sox, New York Yankees and Detroit Tigers.

Despite reports which prove night baseball to be a financial lifesaver, many baseball men, including Lieut. Colonel Larry MacPhail, who introduced lighting to the major leagues in Cincinnati, fear that so much of it is dangerous to professional baseball. They are afraid that baseball patrons will grow to expect such backbreaking schedules as double-headers on Sundays and holidays and games every night in the week. Another worry is that children, less likely to attend night baseball, may not get so interested in the game.

Most players like night baseball. It disrupts their eating habits. Many fans are afraid baseball patrons will grow to expect such backbreaking schedules as double-headers on Sundays and holidays and games every night in the week. Another worry is that children, less likely to attend night baseball, may not get so interested in the game.

Most players like night baseball. It disrupts their eating habits. Many fans are afraid because they think the action is hindered by the lights. In the game, they say, looks faster than it really is. Batted balls, they say, look like the stands to be travelling faster than they really do.

The lights, actually, do not bother the players. The illumination is powerful enough so that a man reading a newspaper on the field would find himself distributed the lamps in the clusters atop the lofty towers would light a 447-mile highway. The 615 lamps in the Municipal ball park, for example, furnish the equivalent of 92 million candlepower. The cost of operation is approximately the same as it would be for lighting 1,500 homes for the same length of time.

HAWKS SWAMP DETROIT WINGS TO LEAD SERIES

7-1 Victory Costly as Mosdorfer and Marchildon Hurt in Contest

BENTLEY SCORES 3

Chicago, March 20 — (CP) — Chicago Black Hawks led by their first string defence pair, Bentley (Max) (Smiley) Smith and Bill Mosienko last night overwhelmed Detroit Red Wings 7-1 to take a 2-1 edge in their best-of-seven Stanley Cup semi-finals. The second game is slated for the goals.

Bentley, 27-year-old Deloro, Sask. left winger, netted three goals and assisted in two more, while Smith, Mosienko, Bob Goldham and Doug Bentley, scored one assist apiece. Mosienko, young Winnipeg right lane player, suffered a badly bruised shoulder in last night's game but scored a goal and an assist before leaving the ice.

Cliff Purpur notched the remaining Chicago tally while Carl Reynolds provided the lone counter for Detroit.

It was a highly optimistic Chicago team that looked to Detroit for the fifth game of the series tomorrow night. However, the optimism was tempered somewhat because of Mosienko's injury which may keep him from the Thursday night encounter. The Hawks may also be without the services of defenceman Earl Seibert. Much March, who suffered a bad ankle last night.

Can't Cope with Speed

The speed of the Bentley-Smith-Mosienko combination left the Red Wings well behind most of the time. Davy Dion had a busy night for the Detroit Cage but the Hawks' five-pronged forward top much for him.

Bentley started the scoring before the five-minute mark when he collected on a play set up by Mosienko and Smith, but Lisconbe's goal tonning set Detroit Manager Jack Armstrong and Mud Brumetean goes evened the score. After that the game was all in favor of the Black Hawks.

Mosienko lifted the Hawks to the fore when he converted a pass from Earl Seibert and Gaye Allen then Smith evaded Dion to score on Bentley's goal leaving the score 3-1 for the first period closed. Going into the second period, Smith added his second goal with Mosienko and Goldham assisting and Purpur also scored unassisted and Purpur then with only 2 seconds left before the final bell.

Referee Bill Chadwick kept the game in order and only eight penalties were handed out, both teams drawing four each.

Sport Shorts From Britain

By ALLAN NICKLESON
(Canadian Press Staff Writer)

London, March 20 (CP)—Freddie Mills, who is one of the few in Britain who believe he could stand a chance against Joe Louis, stepped into London's Queensberry ring for his first fight in nine months and won an unimpressive victory.

The British and Empire light-heavyweight had a tough time with Bert Gilroy, Scottish middleweight champion, before the referee stopped the fight in the eighth round of the scheduled 15-round bout. If nothing else, the bout exposed the temerity of Mills' challenge to Joe. Mills, through his manager, 47ed Broadribb.

The feeling was that if Louis could accept the challenge he would "murder" the former scrawny-looking boxer in the first few seconds.

Mills, weighing but 175 pounds, was such a long way below the form expected of a champion that he could hope to beat him, since some of his punches missed by a couple of feet. Ringsiders agreed that until the Bournemouth Bomber concentrated on something more than a two-handed windmill attack he cannot be rated as a world contender.

The fight was stopped with Gilroy on his feet, but clearly on out above his eye. Many figured that Gilroy was stopped in the first round when he had Gilroy on the canvas for the count. One of Freddie's punches missed Gilroy by nearly a foot and landed on the ring post. Referee T. H. Thomas. The officials knees zagged for a second and he had to hold on ropes to save himself from going over. Mills spokesman said the fight continued.

Mill's last serious contest was last year when he took just five minutes to knock out six-foot Al Robinson. Robinson is a boxer who has been beaten by Canada's Al Delmore.

"I've been in boxing exhibitions but they are no good," said Mills, a sergeant physical training instructor in the Royal Air Force, "I want to fight real opponents. The two were taken prisoners during the Dunkirk evacuation but released when the 8th Army entered Tunis.

LESSON NO. 349

By SAM GORDON
The Kibitzer

Mrs. Tyro says the never gets quite a hand. That's what she says every time she gets such a hand. Look at a pair of them in these two partnership hands:

SOUTH
♠K Q J 10 9
♥K J 10 9 4
♣8 7

♥A
♦A K Q 4 3 2
♣K 5 3 2

South opens with one spade. North responds with a bid of three diamonds; a one-jump signal, routing to game. South now shows that he also has a heart suit.

With a jump signal already used in his deal, no more jumps are needed to keep the bidding open to game so, the south bid in this spot is three hearts.

North now shows the club suit with a bid of four clubs. He could have rebid his diamonds. But since at least two cards had been bid the second suit before rebidding the longer suit.

South now rebids his hearts with a bid of four hearts. Rebidding his hearts shows that suit to be at least five cards long. So, he has said he has at least five hearts and at least five spades. See how?

By bidding spades before hearts, south says the hearts are not longer. By rebidding hearts, he says they are five cards. If they are not longer than spades, the spades must be at least five long.

North thus learns that south has at least ten cards in the two major suits. Therefore, south can have no more than three cards in diamonds and clubs.

The next bid by north could be five clubs. That would show at least five clubs, and at least five diamonds. And south would have to show a preference for one or the other.

However, north knows there is a slam of some kind in their pair. He may not be able to find out in what suit. If any. And if so will he determined as a safe trump, can there be a slam in no-trump?

Park yourself in the north seat. Now, what do-you think?

"Happy Land," outstanding Lesly recognized as one of the ablest character actors on the screen, Harry Carey is featured in the western inspirational drama, "Gramp," in 20th Century-Fox's stirring screen version of Mac-Kinlay Kantor's "Happy Land," which is now closing at the Belle Theatre.

Don Ameche as Lew March; Frances Dee as Agnes; and Ann Rutherford, as Lenore Prentiss, are at their brilliant best in this powerful, heart-warming hit. Others in the cast are Cara Williams, Richard Crane, Henry Morgan, Minor Watson and Dickie Moore.

The Canadian News, a color cartoon, a traveltalk and a new Edition of The March of Time "Invasion: complete the show.

Margaret O'Brien in New Film

A veteran doctor and a sick child provide one of the most poignant human stories in years in Gilliespie's Criminal Case," which comes next to the Belle Theatre. Lionel Barrymore as the diagnostician, Dr. Gillespie, and other players include Keye Luke, John Craven, William Lundigan, Nat Pendleton, Alma Kruger, Marta Linden, Henry O'Neill and Phil Craig.

They Did It Once Before!

A thrillingly dramatic panoramic view of the Russian saga. Done the time the people of the vast land were forced to fight the Germans out in 1944, thru their current triumphs in reversing the dreaded blitz, is unfolded in "The Battle of Russia" which opens tonight at the Belle Theatre as the added feature attraction.

By way of prelude, there are flashes from Russian films unfamiliar in this country, depicting the historical revolt of the Teutonic Knights in the Thirteenth Century, under the leadership of Alexander Nevsky; the annihilation of Charles XII's Swedish Army at Poltava in 1709; and Napoleon's disastrous adventure in the Winter of 1812, so similiar to the disaster that befell Hitler's Nazi hordes 130 years later.

The major part of the film, however, colforms Hasif with the current war in Russia in brilliant depiction of the army and people, strategy and gallantry that shattered once and for all the Nazi myth of invincibility.

A new Community Sing film will also be exhibited.

AT THE McCARTHY

"Mr. Smith Goes to Washington"

When better pictures are made, Frank Capra will make them. Until that time, we're content to sit tight and unhesitatingly declare Capra's "Mr. Smith Goes to Washington" the greatest picture of his hit-packed career, and, therefore, the greatest picture ever to come out of Hollywood.

The film opening next at the McCarthy Theatre, a Columbia production co-starring Jean Arthur and James Stewart is a stirring human drama revealed by Capra out of the very heart of America, filled with all the laughter, the love, the pathos of real life in these history busines of living.

Jefferson Smith, a small-town youth who is strongly imbued with American ideals, suddenly finds himself thrust into the seats of the mighty, hypocrital of the land when he is appointed to fill an unexpired term in the United States Senate. Self taken by the appointment with the greatest seriousness. He doesn't know that the state machine, intent upon a piece of corrupt legislation, is sending him to Washington because they consider him their most likely dupe. Mr. Smith—Stewart— gradually learns how he is being used. Prompted by his best instincts and to Miss Arthur, his secretary, he refuses.

How, and with what exciting consequences, is the core of the story, and events sweep to a climax no audience will ever forget.

James Stewart, in the longest and most outstanding role in his career is superb. No wish behind him is Miss Arthur as a cynical, Washington-wise but lazy wife at first scoffs at the young Senator and is antagonistic to him. Claude Rains, expertly cast as Mr. Smith's senior colleague, is deeply moving as a man who must compromise his highest ideals. Thomas Mitchell is seen as a newspaperman who has a strong, unexpressed devotion for Miss Arthur.

Others in the sensational cast include Edward Arnold as a bull-genial political boss who hardens at Mr. Smith's first hint of opposition to his unscrupulous grafting; Beulah Bondi, as the mother of the senior young Senator; Eugene Pallette, as a political henchman; Guy Kibbee, Ruth Donnelly, H. B. Warner, Harry Carey and many other stellar personalities.

Prairie Chickens

That three is definitely not a crowd is proved by the successful trio of Jimmy Rogers, Noah Beery Jr., and Hal Roach Jr., who are working together in Hall Roache's "Prairie Chickens", the second feature attraction opening next at the McCarthy Theatre.

AT THE CAPITOL

"The Bugle Sounds"

His greatest role! Timely! Thrilling! "The Bugle Sounds" starring Wallace Beery, opens next at the Capitol Theatre. Here comes the tanks! Here comes a service saga mightier than "Flight Command." Wally as a fighting sergeant of the cavalry who hates to give up his horse for a tank! Packed with drama, heart throbs, it's the picture to thrill every one. You will see the thrilling spectacle of streamlined army in action! Dive bombers, parachute troops, Nita Bugeler, tank regiments. You will also see the sabotage plot revealed by a clever trick. The film had the cooperation of the United States army. A great cast supports Beery including Marjorie Main, Lewis Stone, George Bancroft, Henry O'Neill, Donna Reed, Chill Wills and Wm. Lundigan.

"Cowboy in the Clouds"

Athol, Mass., is a long way from the great open spaces of cowboy-dom. Playing on a championship football team seems to have little to do with riding, except perhaps on the shoulders of wildly cheering college undergraduates. However, the hard-riding son of the saddle Charles Starrett, the Columbia western star now playing in "Cowboy in the Clouds" next at the Capitol Theatre, owes his present career to both Athol, Mass., and a football team.

"The Masked Marvel" (New Serial)

Republic Pictures has a smashing new serial in "The Masked Marvel" which will show at the end of the week for three days, Friday to Sunday inclusive.

Episode One, "The Masked Crusader," introduces a very intriguing situation—four courageous young men assigned to the formidable task of exposing the head of an allien sabotage organization. One of them is "The Masked Marvel" who invariably intervenes, just in the nick of time, when the danger is most formidable. No one, not even the four boys themselves, know just which one the "Masked Marvel" is, but his courage and daring are beyond question.

A colored cartoon completes the big program.

AT THE BELLE—Ann Rutherford who as Lenore Prentiss, in 20th. Century-Fox's starring filmisation of "Happy Land," makes herself over into the image and likeness of the girl of Richard Crane's dreams. Don Ameche, Frances Dee and Harry Carey head the cast of the film.

'MAD RUSSIAN' GIVES CHICAGO CUBS HEADACHE

Lou Novikoff, Slugging Outfielder, Among Absentees From Camp

BASEBALL ROUNDUP

By TED MEIER
(Associated Press Sport Writer)

New York, March 29 — (AP)—Lou Novikoff, the "Mad Russian", apparently is up to his old trick of giving Chicago Cubs a headache.

The slugging outfielder is among the absentees from the Bruins' spring camp at French Lick, Ind. It can be taken for granted that the James Boys—Manager Wilson and General Manager Gallagher—do not like his tactics one bit.

Just as a year ago when Lou stayed away until after the season started, rumors involving a Novikoff trade have started. Warren Giles, general manager of Cincinnati Reds, is reported trying to talk Wilson into a swap for the outfielder.

Meantime the Cubs learned that Pitcher Jim Warneke and Outfielder Charlie Gilbert had passed their pre-induction physical exams and that Slugger Jimmy Foxx will report Saturday ready to start his comeback.

Chicago White Sox, also training at French Lick, were told by Johnny Humphries, one of their best pitchers, that he has been reclassified 1-A by his New Orleans draft board.

News from other big league camps—

Detroit Tigers — Catcher Paul Richards is scheduled to take pre-induction exam at Dallas today.

Philadelphia Phillies — Club has made an offer to holdout Outfielder Triplett, General Manager Herb Pennock declared.

CANADIANS WIN TEN OF 15 BOUTS

By ALLAN NICKLESON
(Canadian Press Staff Writer)

Somewhere in England, March 29 (CP)—Roddy MacDonald's chances appeared about as bright as Piccadilly in the blackout when he entered the right against a smooth-boxing, well-conditioned fellow from the British army physical training corps.

Roddy had been in a terrible slump. He just couldn't find the form he last showed in winning the middleweight championship of both the British and Canadian armies last year.

But the form came back just quickly when the corporal from Edmonton beat the P.T. instructor in fourteen journament in which Canadians won 10 of 15 bouts from a British team representing eastern command.

Punching strongly in his "stand-up-straight" style, Roddy gave one of his best performances in taking a unanimous decision from Sgt. Inst. Tom Sweeney. The display retired tongues of handlers and friends that Roddy wool develop into a top-notch post-war professional.

Against the pick up eastern command, two of three 1944 Canadian army titleholders won their bouts. Big Joe Main, Calgary trooper, defeated Freddie Pyth of R.M.E. in the heavyweight class, while little Jackie Billings, a gunner from St. Marys, Ont., took a bantamweight victory over QMS. Stan Hartley, R.M.E. The Canadian crown wearer who lost was Sgt. Jack Ennis of Windsor, Ont., a light-heavy.

The 1943 Canadian army featherweight king, Tpr. Larry Salming of Montreal, invaded Pte. Johnny Hunter.

Other Canadian winners included Dvr. Jerries James of Kingston, Ont., slugging lightheavy.

Man O'War, Great Warrior, Now 27 Still Well-Preserved

(By The Canadian Press)

That great old turf warrior, Man O'War, is 27 years of age today. Big Red is still a well-preserved piece of horseflesh down at Faraway Farm near Lexington, Kentucky, Harry B. Scott, manager of the farm, said yesterday he doesn't notice much difference in Man O' War from one year to the next.

The pride of Owner Samuel D. Riddle, Man O' War still attracts a sizeable number of visitors each year. In his long season of racing he set five American track marks, won 20 out of 21 races and garnered a total of $249,465.

As a sire, he has produced such performers as War Admiral and Clyde Van Dusen, winners of the Kentucky Derby. Crusader, War Relic and many others. But his last crop has been foaled. The big red stallion is in his second year of retirement from the stud.

At Bay Meadows racetrack yesterday Frank Chojnacki, widely-known jockey, rode his last race before going into the army next Monday. And he escaped injury in a spectacular accident. His mount, Sir Winsome, finished second and then got one of control, crashed through the railing and died. Chojnacki was spilled behind the crash.

J. K. Houssels of Las Vegas, Nev., had claimed Sir Winsome for $1,840. He had to pay also for hauling the carcass off the track.

THE LITTLE DOG BARKED

by ANNE ROWE

CHAPTER 19

The Inspector dropped into his beloved rocker and set it in motion. "Okay, it's a deal. Now, I'm ready to swallow things got kinder beforehand this morning. I didn't offer to have you meet my daughter the early, and with no preparation at all. Only the little dog wasn't killed brought both her's Mrs. Turner here hotfoot, the minute they heard it."

"I understand perfectly. And it was rather fortunate for me." The man's smile was incredible. What in heaven's name did it remind her of? It brought my daughter very close. She's the image of her mother, of course, but her behavior at our impromptu meeting showed me how strikingly she is like my daughter. The same violent emotionalism, the same exaggerated lows and highs that have plagued me all my life. There was one delightful story though in her judgment of me, that I'd like to correct—if you'll allow me, Inspector."

Pettingill was teetering vehemently in his impatience to get started with the questions he meant to ask Loring. But he said only: "Ayah."

"Thank you. Then—please, Mrs. Turner, I'll not be kind enough to tell your—leading lugenue—that she is doing me a rare injustice, in saying my first marriage was based on mercenary motives. It is true that I was nine years older than I. But that only means she was a beautiful, brilliant child of twenty. And I, at twenty-one, adored the ground she walked on." He paused for a moment, his baffling smile wiped out. "Her untimely death was the great tragedy of my life," he said at last soberly. "And the millions she left me is cold comfort. I'd have always been—a lonely man, a women and unlucky in love. As a writer you, perhaps, get my meaning?"

"I think I do," I told him. "You loved your first wife—and she died. And you loved Linda's mother—and something came between you. Neither—how shall I put it?—the other's feet loved you?"

"A little," he agreed. "Mostly they loved my money. Thank you for an understanding mind. Mrs. Turner—"

"Ayah. Sure. Like Miss Marjorie's mother—Mrs. Lorimer. Coincidence was wearing out, and his shrewd mind into the tiny opening. "You could knocked me down with a feather, Mr. Loring, when you said you knew about her and her—Mr. Linwood."

"Oh, that's an old story," Loring shrugged the matter aside. "I've been going on for years, Inspector, used to cry on my shoulder about the hopelessness of it—his wife's refusal to give him a divorce."

"But everyone thinks that you are going to marry Miss Lorimer!" she cried.

"Everyone thinks a lot of things —mistakenly," Loring told us, his smile more sardonic than ever. "At my time were really so brief as people think. I would marry Miss Lorimer, just to give her the pleasure of fulfilling her lover's yearning for a part of his money. But as for Miss Sondra is a joy to behold and I've never been fond of her. Also, my steady diet her little affectations wouldn't agree with me. In any way, how did you find out her carefully kept secret?"

"Mrs. Turner stumbled on it. Guessed it was Linwood by elimination," the Inspector said briefly. "But look, Mr. Loring, I don't aim to keep on talking you down. I want you to tell me. Let's set back to where we were when Miss Linda, busted in on us. I've told you of them clippings and Mack made a collection of. And that he was sore about what happened to break up his romance with Miss Linda's mother—Miss Linda's mother—"

"Oh, yes," Loring added me if I could account for the gap, and I said I couldn't. I thought it likely Mack hadn't kept a complete record of my past, so that he had kept one at all."

"Ayah. So you did." The Inspector was getting into his stride. "But maybe you can help me out. Tell me what was in them missing clippings?"

"Not much more than in the, two you showed me, I believe."

"Okay. Then tell me the whole story. Might find a clue in it for what's going on here right now."

Loring's smile slowly changed into a fixed grimace of pain. "All right," he agreed after a long pause. "It's rather awkward, in front of a lady, but Miss Turner is a writer and will probably regard it all in the light of material. So here goes: It was blackmail, pure but simple. Blackmail after an interval of around seven years.

A rather generous Folies Bergere girl was claiming a right to me, as the mother of my son."

"I see—and was she?"

"No." The answer came sharply, decisive. "She'd been a member of a seven months' party at my country place near Paris—my special—and I'm sure I remained fully maintained. She may have been. I didn't and don't remember. I was drunk for days running pretty wild, those days. It was the year after my first wife's death and I was trying to forget—strenuously. Soon she might have had a case against me, if it hadn't been for the discovery of the date. I called for New York right after that party. And my alleged son was born—almost eleven months later."

"Hmm—kinder unnatural," the Inspector commented, still dryly, "that they's one thing I don't get: Why did this hero remain silent seven years to file her claim?"

"Perhaps in the hope he'd forgotten the date I called, after all that time. And perhaps she'd been struggling re-marriage and thought it was a good moment to get a shake-down," Loring shrugged.

"Hmm—ayah. Might be. Sure wasn't a good moment for you, spoiled your new marriage, didn't it?"

"Yes. Thanks to my wife's fanatical love of publicity, she's not go into that, Inspector. The one thing I want you to know is: If I'd known my wife was going to have a child, I'd never have given her up. And now that I've found my daughter—thanks to Mr. Lorimer's intervention—I'm not going to lose her again. And I'm not going to have her ruined either. By a member of my slater's family, or lawsuit or anyone else who's after the Eureka money."

"Ayah. I hear you say so." Inspector Pettengill beamed. "I hope that young spitfire of yourn's stand around in the end. Could make you a mighty nice daughter, Miss Linda could. And you a mighty fine father for her. Specially as she don't want your money. Got to get back to our murder. I take it you've told me all you can till you can. No matter who the murderer is?"

Loring nodded solemnly.

"Good! Then tell me the rest of that old blackmail story. Reckon if you kept quiet about so far."

"You can discount Inspector!" Loring smiled. And for the first time his smile was real and free of irony. "I'll be glad to tell you the rest. I was only holding back because I thought, as I was waiting for—oh, well—I'm going to make a clean breast of it now."

"Glad then, just when I was sitting on the edge of my chair, all keyed up with expectancy, he turned to me and—there is no apologizing for "Sorry, But er—this is where, the script reads: 'Exit Mrs. Turner.'"

"I waited a few days from the police cottages in a welter of conflicting emotions: Grief for Sirray. Baffled sympathy for Burns Loring, while wondering why he had plumbed me out.

"The grief for Sirray was uppermost. I'd have given anything in the world to see the little dog capering about me, alive and happy, be able to sit down by the roadside and talk my problems.

Again I thought of Loring's words. . . . It must be a blind. A shutter he drew over the great loneliness of a life wasted in fruitless search for happiness.

"Would Linda come to understand her father and forgive him? Could I make her see that Loring had not been a heartless rake, but a headstrong, hot-blooded, blundering youth who'd paid dearly for every false step he'd made?

"I doubted it. Only Loring himself could convince Linda of that. By something he did, perhaps. Such as finding our murderer and bringing him to justice—saving her and all of us, from the constant dread hanging over our heads.

"Judging by the way he'd acted, and what he'd said, Loring was trying to do just that. With a choice of three suspects—Bill Parris, Tom Linwood and an unknown out of his past. With Vickery as an accessory—

"The third suspect was nothing but conjecture, I decided. Too farfetched to be taken seriously. Connecting the blackmail scheme that had caused the second tragedy of his life with the present danger of his new-found daughter might seem logical to Loring, simply because it had been connected with her in the past, before her birth. But it didn't make sense to me. Because if the blackmail had lain seven years back then, was almost seven years ago now. So how could there be a connection?

"No. The murderer must be a stranger to the old Penn Corse days—or Linwood.

"Linwood preferred, I admitted to myself, with a grim laugh at my own stubborn conviction, as I went up to my room to look for Linda. She wasn't there, had gone to the theatre for rehearsal. I was told at the desk. And so I followed her.

The whole cast was on the stage, the director included, when I pushed open the orchestra door. But they weren't rehearsing. Linwood and Sondra were standing apart—not together and all the others were crowding around Linda, talking excitedly.

They looked scared. I discovered when I came nearer. The dread of the thing had got under their skins at last and was making them afraid for themselves.

I heard Ione Welland say sharply: "Oolly, if that's a bludgeon I play, not one of us is safe!" Then she saw me and called: "Mrs. Turner! What are the police doing to protect us? and ran down the footlights toward me.

The rest of the cast followed her lead. Except all Linwood and Sondra and presently I was surrounded by all the centre group of a jabbering chuk of badly upset people. And was quickly showered with condolences for Sirray's violent death and questions about the "discovery" of the night before.

Linda had hung herself on my arm, was hugging it in unconscious friendliness. Orne Paulsen, Wells Hunter and Bill Parris were talking to me steadily, Bill about Sirray, the two others of last night's carnage. Even Sondra gave up her isolation to add an affected: "So sorry [illegible] sorry!" to the general effusions.

The whole thing was more than I could stand. The lump on my head began to throb mildly and again my knees were so wobbly I wanted to let go and collapse. I felt sick. Until Linwood put new strength into me—temporarily.

Linwood had not stood by himself, with compressed lips and frowning eyes, at the outskirts. Suddenly he shouted angrily: "Stop all this nonsense and get to work! I'm sick of waiting. I'm here to direct an Amroee play—not an ovation for Mrs. Turner!"

The gratuitous insult made me gasp. And would have made me forget my throbbing head and weak knees.

I pushed my newly acquired admirers aside and marched up to the director.

"Sorry to correct you, Mr. Linwood," I told him coldly. "You are here to direct—my play. And I mean my play, if you'd like a good look at the title page of the script you've been using. Mr. Amroee concedes me first place, as chief author. Go on rehearsing for the present, but not for Broadway! Oh, no! Not for Broadway! Unless you want to lose your money by it. Women, small dogs and defenseless women kills me before I can tell Mr. McVane that I won't have you —you one-take-six-hipland-bidder turncoat!"

That was as far as I'd got, when Ione Welland seemed to rise and till, and the walls started wavering. Then I felt Linda's arms around me, stalked out of the stage door and walked toward the Beach Hotel.

I was halfway to it when Ione Welland's tall out of breath, caught up with me.

"I had to follow you," she gasped. "I had to say 'thank you' for what you said to Tom. He had it coming to him, too—"

Ione suddenly broke off and trotted beside me quietly to the very door of the Hutch. There she grasped my arm and stammered:

"You must think me crazy—being pleased about the way you've raked Linwood over the coals. But you don't understand—you can't—I don't believe any longer that Bill Parris cut the rope or—or did anything. I'm sorry I ever said I thought he did and—I'm scared. Such a terrible fear—thank you again."

Then she scuttled off, back to the theatre. Which surprised. I kept puzzling over her "terrible fear" in connection with her friend Bill's relief in Bill Parris. And could have gone on wondering about it, if Orne Paulsen hadn't come in and sat down opposite me in the booth.

"Linwood's just been dragged off to the Inspector for questioning. No more rehearsal this evening," he told me. "And not much chance for work in the afternoon either, with Linda having to get to our Inspector. A wonderful show we'll put on Monday—at this rate! Believe me, I'd like to see the producer who can get me in to country tryout after this! Which reminds me: any word from McVane?

"Indirectly. His office wired he's planning to be here Saturday," I said between bites.

"Saturday! That's day after tomorrow! Two more days of tagging after Linda!" Paulsen groaned. "Some job, I tell you — trying to protect that girl when she's got such a crush on Parris, she'd think it was a treat being killed by him!

"Then you really believe Bill Parris did it?" I asked.

"Sure. Don't you?" Paulsen looked surprised. "To me, there's no doubt left after last night. Honestly, I can't understand why Inspector Pettengill didn't arrest him on the spot. It was so clear. Coiled for a manuscript and returning without it—after just enough time to run over to the inn and half strangle poor Linda—"

Linda says it wasn't Bill," I told him.

Orne stared for a second and then grinned ironically: "Oh, Linda does love him, does she? Well, I'm sorry to disappoint her, Mrs. Turner? Do you think it was Bill, or—"

"I'm keeping an open mind," I informed him, debating with myself as to how far I had the right to Linwood. "After all, there are other possibilities."

He looked puzzled. "Other—? Oh you mean Vickery was out on shore at the crucial time also! But Vickery's a old man. And—who else would want to ruin your play by such desperate measures?"

For a moment, I was at a loss what to answer. Then I saw the light.

"Oh—they could have hired someone to do their killing," I said, swallowing the last bite of my belated lunch and pushing the plate aside. "And that makes me think of Bill's hint. And—who else would want to ruin your play by such desperate measures?"

"Connection with my alibi?" Paulsen looked as bewildered I almost laughed.

"Yes. Your alibi and Sondra's," I nodded unconcernedly.

He stared at me for a second, then broke into laughter. "Oh, I see you've caught on to that! You're thinking that I'm a rival for director!" he laughed. "All right. I'll confess. But I'm not the only one, Mrs. Turner. And it was a jolt, finding him promenading in the dark last night with our beautiful vamp! Both in dark clothes, melting into the background so nicely I'd give their sweet secret away! I knew of course, Linwood's marriage—just wasn't. But I had no idea our gorgeous Sondra had such hidden depths. And I still don't see how it fits in with the mystery of yesterday and the notso-young Loring."

I could have told him exactly how it fitted but I only said: "Don't ask me. I've only known Sondra and don't know their private affairs. And you shouldn't bother about them to the extent of withholding information from the police."

"You mean I'm to keep mum? Broken my promise and told on Sondra? With the Inspector there's scared silly that I'd do it!" he asked reproachfully.

TORONTO STOCKS

Toronto, March 29 (CP)—Industrial stocks posted a small index gain in the action of the Toronto stock exchange and other groups were down narrowly. Trading proceeded at a slow pace and totalled 261,000 shares for the first three hours.

Industrials were helped by the slightly stronger tone of the base metal issues. Hiram Walker firmed 3-8 and minor gains were added by Massey-Harris, C.P.R., Canadian Car and Canadian Celanese. Canada Packers moved apeal a point and Great Lakes Paper added a fraction after a drop.

Soft spots in the gold group included Kerr-Addison, Chesterville, Buffalo-Ankerite, Lytich, Hipgsing Lake Duffaln and Senator. Hudson Bay, Noranda, Ventures and Sherritt were slightly weaker base metals.

Some of the cheaper western oils registered sizable turnover on soft prices of the senior issues. Leduc and Vermilion and prices were up a bit for Mid-Continent and Royalite.

WALL STREET

New York, March 29 (AP)—Whisky shares and the miscellaneous of Specialities were given a little support in the early stock market but the standard leaders failed to generate any recovery power after yesterday's sell-off.

While selling pressure was relieved, there was no sign that prices were in slightly lower territory from the time the first hour's business got under way. Transfers totalled around 1,000,000 shares.

In view of the market's rather unsettled position as a result of yesterday's break in the last hour Tuesday it was difficult to find any basis for the pronounced activity in the Oklahoma special corporate issues. Indeed it was plain that results here were disappointing to bullish continental interests.

Among stocks at better levels were Schenley, Sears Roebuck, Montgomery Ward, U. S. Rubber and U. S. Gypsum.

Fractional improvement was shown by a few of the rail specialties, Pittsburgh Seagrams making the best gain—½ point, while in Mines Dome was up a fraction and Lake Shore ¼. Canadian Pacific held unchanged.

LIVESTOCK

Toronto, March 29 (CP)—Cattle trade was slow with prices steady to the week's decline in trade on the livestock market here today. Hogs, veal calves and common to medium quality lambs were steady.

No sheep were offered.

Receipts reported by the Dominion Department of Agriculture: 650 cattle, 300 hogs, 600 lambs, 60 calves. Unsold from yesterday were 900 cattle, 100 hogs.

Prices in the trade included: Choice steers, one at $11.25-$12, a few butcher steers $10.25-$11.50, heifers $11.25 down; sales on steers low to fair to establish prices, a few bulls $6.50-$9, fed yearlings $12-$13.

Calves: $15.50-$16 for choice, medium and lights downward to $9-$11.

Lambs: $8-$12.75.

Hogs: $17.15 dressedweight, cows $13.25 dressed.

H. McLean Gives $5,000 to Fund

Windsor, Ont., March 29 —(CP) —Harry K. McLean, wealthy Chrysler Canada contractor whose hobby is giving away his money, hailed traffic at the Windsor street this morning by opening the window of his car, stopping at a red light and tossing $5,000 in dollar bills and silver into the street.

Automobile brakes screeched as drivers pulled to a stop and joined pedestrians in the scramble; some stood with their hands in the air while others ran for the money.

When McLean finished emptying the window sill, he had only about $100 of the $5,000 he had brought with him from the bank, moved to another hotel and repeated the money-throwing performance from a room there.

Lonergan Defence Rests Its Case

Only Three Witnesses Are Called, Accused Does Not Testify

New York, March 29 —(AP)— The defence of Wayne Lonergan, charged with first degree murder in the slaying of his heiress wife, Patricia, suddenly rested its case today at 11:16 a.m., after calling only three witnesses.

The handsome defendant was not called to the stand.

Edward W. Broderick's sudden move came after he had called to the witness stand Mario Gabellini, interior decorator who escorted Mrs. Lonergan on a round of night clubs the night before the state contends she was slain, and Mr. Isidore Michel, the Lonergan physician.

He had questioned Detective William Prendergast yesterday.

Broderick had attempted to show through Gabellini that the dead victim was "very drunk" shortly before she was killed.

He made the statement when Judge Samuel S. Leibowitz asked why he was interrogating Gabellini as to how many drinks Mrs. Lonergan had had on the night she died.

Gabellini, a dapperly-dressed interior decorator met Broderick's barrage of questions by stating that he did not recall how many drinks she had at each of the places, except that she had "one or two" at some of them. He denied that she was intoxicated.

They spent three hours at a restaurant, then went to the Riccadi Club, he testified.

"Did the Riccadi Club manager," said Mr. Lonergan ⯈ leave because she was intoxicated?" asked Broderick.

"Not at all, sir," said the dark-haired witness.

Gabellini, dressed in a tan suit and polka dot shirt clasped his hands and tapped his toes upon the floor constantly as he testified.

He said he and Mrs. Lonergan went from the Riccadi to the Stork, to hotel suite of Thomas Farrell, a magazine publisher. He didn't know whether she had any drinks there but said he saw her eat beer and drink milk.

Gabellini escorted her back to her own apartment about 4 a.m. on the morning of her death, he said.

Witness stepped aside and then he and Mrs. Lonergan had quarrelled over her staying out late, he testified with Capt. Peter Elser of the marine corps who appeared as a prosecution witness.

"Did you help Mrs. Lonergan right up to her door?" Broderick demanded.

"No sir," Gabellini answered.

"Wasn't it a fact that Mrs. Lonergan was so drunk she could not walk?"

"She absolutely was not."

Gabellini said he stayed only a few seconds at the apartment, then went in a taxi cab to a food shop where he was accustomed to eat. He said he invited Mrs. Lonergan to eat with him because "he was friendly with her and were talking in Italian."

Victor Mineo, the Italian cab driver into the shop to tell him not to let Mrs. Lonergan leave right you and Mrs. Lonergan had had in front of the apartment," Broderick demanded stated.

"Certainly not sir," Gabellini answered.

Dr. Michel, who preceded Gabellini on the stand, had corroborated Lonergan's statement in his cross-examination that he attempted to buy poison in New York the night before the slaying. Dr. Michel quoted the defendant as saying he wanted it for a friend.

KOLOMEA CAPTURED

London, Mar. 30 (AP)—Germany, capital of Bessarabia and gate-way to the Balkans has fallen to the Red army's advance, Premier Stalin announced tonight in a five hours after the evacuation of the strategic city.

Russian forces had broken into this third largest city of pre-war Rumania from the north and east after forcing the Pruth river.

The city which lies 17 miles north of present-day Rumania, is astride the railway running northwest to Lwow, in Russian Poland, and south to Jassy, Rumanian Galatz on the Danube, and the oil centre of Ploesti.

Evacuation of Czernowitz was announced earlier by the German high command in a Berlin broadcast.

Germans Cut Off From Base

Its capture cut the Germans off from their supply line in pre-war Poland and split the southern German armies off from those of the central and northern front.

In his order of the day broadcast by Moscow radio, Stalin said the city had been captured "by storm"—a statement implying the German garrison resisted to the end. He termed it an "important economic and political centre" of Rumania. Germans gathered in the big bend of the Dniester river Prut covering the approaches to the frontiers of Hungary and Rumania.

His brilliant 2 50-artillery salvo salute from 324 guns fired in the capital over Moscow tonight in celebration.

The order of the day announcement had admitted also that "German troops disorganized and routed" by the Russian Dniester Bug, on the latest approaches to Odessa, but as usual, claimed the withdrawal was without enemy interference.

Other Soviet forces were driving through the Carpathian foothills toward the northeast, threatening Czechoslovakia, following the capture of Kolomea, Prut river town on the same basis, the Dniester-Lwow railway 45 miles northeast of Czernowitz.

EIGHT NEAR STANISLAU

Indicating another Russian threat to Lwow in pre-war Poland, the Berlin broadcast heavy fighting was under way with advance Red Army formations in the area of Stanislau, 80 miles south of Lwow and only 40 miles from the previous point of the Germans' halts on the Lwow-Bucharest rail line.

Another Berlin broadcast said the Russians were throwing 15 rifle divisions and a tank corps, totalling 175,000 men, into the battle for the Dniester. Russian attacks to the Baltics in new smashes at the 100-mile German arc in Estonia, Latvia and Poland, said the new offensives had been unable to gain ground.

Advance units of Marshal Gregory Zhukov's Second Ukrainian Army were reported less than 30 miles from the famous Pass of Dukla in the leading Carpathian into Carpatho-Ukraine, taken over from Czechoslovakia by Hitler in Munich's rashfulfilment of European boundaries.

Cut Last Supply Line

Severing of the Berlin-Lwow-Bucharest railway by Zhukov's troops cut the last direct German rail supply line to Germany's forces in the entire southern front, dispatches said, rendering virtually artifical the position of Field Marshal Manstein's armies struggling to escape encirclement and destruction closing in from the north, east and south.

Meanwhile Marshal Ivan, S. Konev's 2nd Ukrainian Army stormed the fortified city of Balta, in the southern Ukraine 115 miles northwest of the great German-held Black Sea port of Odessa, from which other Russian forces were driving on a 50-mile semi-circular front extending from captured Nikolaev to the Dniester.

3,000 Germans Killed

More than 2,000 Germans died in the fighting for Balta, to hold Balta, the Moscow war bulletin said, and prisoners taken there were the remnants of Hitler's famous SS Elite Guards. Another force of 3,000 Nazis of Konev's troops broke through Nazi defence south of Yarmolintsi at the north end of the Kamenets—Podolsk pocket.

Floods Drown At Least Five In South States

Atlanta, Ga., March 30 —(AP)—Flooded rivers swirled over lowlands in Georgia, Alabama, Mississippi and north Louisiana today, causing widespread property damage, blocking highways and crowding relief and rescue forces. The American Red Cross sheltered 30 persons in the Cedartown, Ala., area and reported the number to increase to 200 if streams continued to rise.

Two Georgia towns, Dowen on the Chattahoochee, and Rowena on the Flint river were inundated. A 1,500-horsepower hydro-electric plant on the Flint at Albany, Ga., was thrown out of operation. Operators of the Georgia-Pacific Chemical Company plant at Fort Gaines, Ga., on the Chattahoochee suspended when the river rose to 41.5 feet.

Highly Perfected "Blind Fire" Used On Huns by 5th Army

Boston, March 30 —(AP)— The Allied 5th Army is using highly perfected "blind fire" methods to hit the Germans in Italy, Lt.-Col. Frederick Brown, commander of the Boston Ordnance District, said today.

He said: "When American artillery goes after the German artillery it is not a matter of a few guns and shells; it means navy, day and night, the employment of huge bombers necessary to wipe the place out."

Raids on Tokyo Are Inevitable, Japanese Warned

New York, March 30 —(AP)—The Japanese people have been warned by Gen. Kensaku Futiye that Allied air raids on Tokyo are inevitable and that the "state of affairs" there is "truly regrettable," the Tokyo radio said today in a broadcast reportedly U. S. government monitored.

The broadcast said that Futiye on returning from a tour of the Eastern Defence Command, had called a meeting at which upon his return from the front he reported to those in the capital, whether they are with the government or not, "to be mentally un-led" in defending Tokyo to their best efforts.

Nazis Recruiting Girls, Grandmothers To Meet Manpower Shortage

By WADE WERNER
Associated Press Staff Writer

London, March 30.—(AP)— Little girls and grandmothers are being harnessed to Germany's war program to help meet the Nazi task to overcome new manpower problems created by the destruction of thousands of factories by Allied planes, the Berlin radio said. German newspapers disclose, is being made to women of more than 50 years of age to volunteer to replace hundreds of thousands of men who have been called up from production to emergency reconstruction, repair and relocation tasks.

Articles in the Nazi press hopefully term the "great reservoir" of part time workers among elderly women, and also disclose that girls of 14 years of age are being put to work. Apparently many grandmothers are being drafted into the industrial areas after factories have been damaged or industries destroyed, are failing to return or report where they are.

also nine and 10-year-olds among them." The story declared that these children "gladly" work. Grandmothers on the payroll range in age to 70.

In addition, women volunteers expect to work in munitions plants and other factories wherever possible near their homes," the paper said, "and the authorities plan to assign urgent needs to be scattered among hundreds of thousands of homes.

These drastic efforts to get women to fill the gaps in the labor ranks take on particularly significance when it is realized that Germany must call workers to return to their jobs. Apparently many hundreds of thousands have left the industrial areas after factories have been damaged or industries destroyed, are failing to return or report where they are.

5TH ARMY REPELS SMALL ATTACKS UPON BEACHHEAD

Allied Planes Range Over Targets in Rome, Turin and Bolzano Areas

BOMB SOFIA

Naples, March 30 (AP)—Fifth Army forces repulsed two small enemy attacks on the Anzio beachhead yesterday while Allied planes ranged far and wide over Italy, hitting targets in the Rome, Turin and Bolzano areas and smashing across the Adriatic to bomb Sofia.

The dispatches said German tanks in Cassino again tried the strength of Allied defenders in the southern Cassino Road area, but 5th Army artillery dispersed them. In the Anzio beachhead sector the enemy struck at the town but withdrew when Allied forces engaged them.

The communique itself made no mention of Cassino, Anzio or Sofia.

The attack on Sofia, capital of Bulgaria, was carried out by strong formations of both heavy and medium bombers, a communique said.

In addition to assaults on rail targets in central Italy by large formations of escorted bombers, air headquarters announced that medium bomber forces attacked the Ponte Rotondo railroad north of Rome and harbor and rail installations in northeast Italy.

Twenty enemy aircraft were destroyed during the day's operations, the communique said, for a total of 11. The Mediterranean Allied air force lost approximately 1,500 aircraft during the day.

425-to-23 Vote Of Confidence Given Churchill Government

London, March 30. (CP)—Prime Minister Churchill today won a resounding 426-23 vote of confidence from the House of Commons after the eighth he has received in four years as Wartime Prime Minister.

The vote was demanded by the Prime Minister at his press conference first defeat—by a one vote margin—when its opposition to the educational bill amendment was rejected 117-116 Tuesday.

Mr. Churchill demanded the confidence vote so his cabinet "would know where it was stand with this house".

The Prime Minister had said if the House rejected the education bill in original form it would be his duty to advise the Crown that his government lacked the Commons confidence and he would be forced to advise dissolution of parliament.

House votes earlier in the sitting on two routine matters and declared that the government was given substantial majorities. Rutland county council had voted in favor of the amendment by opposition to the government wishes did not want to risk the possibility of a general election.

Voting by Government

This constantly indicated their intention of voting with the government, and when the division list was presented again with the amendment by the Labor party to the men and women teachers out.

Then was the amendment inserted in the bill when the House voted against it by a majority of 116.

DISCUSS ACTION TO SAVE JEWS IN BALKAN AREA

Captain Anthony Eden Says Britain and U. S. Discuss Plans

PUNISH ATROCITIES

London, March 30. (CP)—Foreign Secretary Eden told the House of Commons today that British and the United States governments had further action toward saving Jews in the Balkans from German terror and promised that those responsible will be guilty of an extermination policy.

Replying to Sir Archibald Sinclair, "there are individuals and even official authorities among the satellites who have resisted the evil of the German example and have shown mercy . . . the British government is concerned to make it clear that those who followed the right path also will not be forgotten on the day of final reckoning."

Mr. Eden said Britain was trying to rescue all menaced by German terror. He said the British were responsible for persecuted Jews—to enter Palestine within the quota and that the difficulty had been for them to leave their countries.

He answered in the negative a query by John David Mack, Labor, Yeovil, that "Are you not somewhat about 1,400 unfortunate people who succeeded in reaching Palestine were turned out?"

Nazi Ace, Col. Wilke, Lost in Air Battle

GERMANS STOPPED US SIMPLE STORY CASSINO BATTLE

War Secretary Stimson Makes Statement Discussing Situation

HAD ADVANTAGE

Washington, March 30 — (AP) War Secretary Henry Stimson, discussing the situation at Cassino, declared today the fact is that the Germans stopped us."

He told a press conference that the Allied attack on the Italian front was a "very difficult one at the time being without achieving the results that we had hoped." He said:

"The Germans, Mr. Stimson said, showed again "that they are obstinate fighters and tenacious. They do not quit when they are ordered to quit but they fight on to the end."

"Their occupation of the steep hills where their guns covered the valley floor gave them a great advantage," Mr. Stimson said, "the advantage of troops climbing the hills under fire."

Mr. Stimson followed up his blunt acknowledgment that the Germans stopped us, Allies at Cassino with this statement:

"That would be severe setback only if we did not profit from our mistakes. We have made a great many things since the war and we have put our learning into practice. There is no reason to believe that our ability to profit from experience has ended now."

RAILWAY TARGETS IN SOUTH FRANCE GIVEN POUNDING

Raid Engine Works At Lyon and Other Bombers Smash at Kiel Yards

48 PLANES DOWNED

London, March 30 —(CP)—R.A.F. and R.C.A.F. Halifax bombers—with the Canadian bomber group forming more than half the force of heavyweights — smashed at railway targets at Valrea, 18 miles south of Lyons, France, it is announced today.

Four-engined Lancasters again raided an engine works at Lyon in southern France during the night. The Air Ministry said, simultaneously swift Mosquito bombers in daylight hit rail and other objectives in western Germany.

One Canadian bomber was lost. All the other planes in the night's operations returned safely.

The Daily German radio system went off the air this morning, usually a sign of a heavy attack on the Reich. However, at mid-morning Chicago time, German broadcasting stations were still off the air, the German radio announced there were "no British attacks" overnight.

The R.A.F. night operation came after a day in which the United States 8th Air Force sent heavyweights against the Brunswick area of central Germany and to the Pas-de-Calais coast of France.

Nazis Give Battle

For the first time in daylight since early in March German fighters gave serious battle as the bombers and their fighter escort swept over the Brunswick region, vital Nazi aircraft producing centre.

A United States communique announced today the American fliers had shot down 48 Nazi planes, escorting fighters accounting for 36 of the destroyed and the heavy bombers for the remaining nine. Other enemy planes were shot down by the bomber's operations. Over the sa-de-Calais a sign of the opposition was made to nearly anti-aircraft fire.

Cowrey Loses Life

One night blows followed by only a few hours an R.A.F. attack on a German coastal town, Kiel, 2,345 tons and in which Beaufighters escorting Mosquito and Mosquito torpedoes and damaged at least three others with cannon fire.

One Beaufighter was reported missing.

Yesterday morning a Mosquito of the Norwegian squadron of the RAF Mosquito bombers attacked Kiel and scored hits on the railway station, also hit the railway lines at Trappes, Lemana, Courtral, Aulnoye and other points in France and Belgium, the targets designed to knock out Nazi western European supply routes.

Heavy Continuous Battle Blazes Along India-Burma Front

Western Tunnel on Maungdaw - Buthedaung Road Taken By British Troops

200-FEET LONG

By CHARLES A. GRUMICH
Canadian Press Staff Writer

New Delhi, India, March 30.—(AP) —Capture of British troops of the western tunnel on the Maungdaw-Buthedaung road, further clearing the way for the drive southward against Akyab, was announced from Admiral Lord Louis Mountbatten's headquarters today.

Heavy and continuous fighting in the last 24 hours blazed along the India-Burma border where the Japanese are driving toward Imphal plateau in the Manipur hills northeast of Imphal, but there was little change in the situation there.

The communique from headquarters of the Allied Asia region commander said the occupation of the tunnel "was completed after the forces had driven through dense jungle defences and, with tanks, overcame the tunnel. Then tanks drove up to the mouth of the eastern tunnel and fired into it point-blank. Infantry pelotons, penetrating the jungle-defended footpaths, found it deserted.

Bitter fighting has raged for weeks over the two tunnels piercing the Mayu range between Maungdaw and Buthedaung, important both for a rail link through the mountains, the tunnels were converted by the Japanese into strongholds surrounded by masses of defensive pillboxes and foxholes in dense woods.

Tunnel 900-Feet Long

The western tunnel was about 200 feet long. The British said they occupied a subsidiary tunnel after much equipment and arms in the fortress.

The Japanese still hold the eastern tunnel which is about 900 feet long. They also are entrenched from it also before the British can push their forces on down the road.

In the offensive against Imphal, the Japanese gained a position on the hill near the Tamu-Palel road about 35 miles southeast of Imphal and it was bitterly fought.

In the offensive thus far the Japanese have lost 2,500 killed, the communique declared.

Gliders and troop commandos, in another slashing attack on Japanese communications in northern Burma, have destroyed a railway line and bridge 60 miles behind the enemy southwest of Myitkyina, said the communique.

Myitkyina is on the railway to Mandalay, chief connecting line with Mytikyina, chief enemy base in the Hukawng Valley and the Burma road.

Yesterday morning a Mosquito of the Norwegian squadron of the RAF Mosquito bombers attacked Kiel and scored hits on the railway station, also hit the railway lines at Trappes, Lemana, Courtral, Aulnoye and other points in France and Belgium, the targets designed to knock out Nazi western European supply routes.

Shaw Proposes English Alphabet Of 42 Letters

London, March 30 (CP) — George Bernard Shaw said today he was willing to bequeath his entire fortune to establish a new 42-letter English alphabet which would represent all speech sounds in the language.

In a letter to the Times endorsing Peter Smith, Shaw said he had used the alphabet—which he devised himself—for years to save time in his writing.

"If only the British government had adopted it," he said, "it would be law."

"We have no English alphabet," Shaw wrote. "English speech has been spelled for centuries by guesswork before the language can be written or read intelligently. To do this with the alphabet we have to resort to permutations and combinations.

Pointing out the time-saving advantage of his proposed alphabet, Shaw said only a fraction of a second is lost in writing "enough" with six letters instead of two, but that fraction should be multiplied by the time time lost throughout the English-speaking world.

"The fact that Bunnish, with its 42 letters, can only spell half my name with two letters instead of four may convince you that it is impossible for it to be competently used in the world with three."

MAKEHIFT battalions of the masked Japanese Army strikes.

While other Chinese to the north and northwest in the same valley blasted the Japanese out of a honeycomb of entrenchments with the biggest and greatest of the guns close-range combat, this force was only 1,000 yards from the Japs and fought within "striking distance of the enemy," he declared.

Heavy bombers, out in strength last night, bombed Nazi targets in Germany and in Victoria Lake just north of Bangon, while fighters on a sweep of the Pas-de-Calais area destroyed 18 river craft and damaged 23.

Allied troops have driven Japanese forces from Ngakyedauk pass, captured the Tidzin road, along which the Japanese have been moving supplies and reinforcements to their communications centre of Imphal, and have destroyed many pillboxes and the enemy, the communique said.

Northwest of Imphal

Northwest of Imphal, Allied aircraft joined with artillery units in blasting Japanese positions which were caught in the open while driving for the Imphal road. The enemy is reeling back with heavy losses, the communique declared.

It was estimated 2,500 Japanese troops have been killed on the central front since the start of the present offensive began.

Lieut.-Gen. Joseph Louis Mountbatten's headquarters pointed today to the importance of the successful advance of the Allied 15th Corps in the Arakan sector. The corps, all-British in composition, has played an important role, it was said, both in bombing and straffing Japanese communications on the Indian border and in blasting a path for the Allied troops now driving southeastward in the Mayaung valley.

TOWED STATION WAGON SIDESWIPES PICTON BUS

An R.C.A.F. station wagon being towed to the Mountain View base sideswiped a Picton bus on Highway No. 33 during the night's storm, resulting in upwards to $300 damage to the left side of the public passenger conveyance.

Originally the station wagon, driven by LAW, Beatrice F. Ching, Mountain View, was implicated in a collision on Station St., in Belleville, resulting in an estimated $200 damage to the front of the vehicle. Unable to proceed under its own power, a truck was dispatched from Mountain View to tow the disabled station wagon back to its base. It was that the windshield of the vehicle being towed became covered with snow and rain, resulting in LAW, Ching attempting to drive around the centre line of the highway. Unable to see the oncoming bus, the station wagon sideswiped the north bound vehicle, forcing it into a ditch.

Bert Clark, driver of the bus, residing at 140 Burnham St., informed Traffic Officer H. Caldwell on investigation, he had attempted to avoid the crash but could not move off the highway owing to the guard rail.

Canucks Check Any Tendency To Go 'Limey'

By DOUG HOW

(Canadian Press Staff Writer)

London, March 30—(CP)—In a quiet Sussex field, a Canadian officer, lecturing the soldiers of his company on the situation on the Russian front, his friend, and one of the men spoke out:

"You want to watch yourself, sir. You're talking like a Limey in that lecture. We kept count."

To the Canadian, no other word is quite so representative of the speech of the Englishman as the word "actually." Few other cases could better illustrate the seeming barriers Canadians in Britain have created over more than four years using English manners of speech and custom.

This existence as a body as virtually a conscious effort gives strength to this determination. The man who says he tends to go "Limey"—Canadians insist on branding Englishmen "Limeys" and all pronounce it with the most obvious flout with the nickname that sprang originally from London's lime-juice drinks—is promptly matched.

Among his considerable number of things that have surprised the English in their years is that they, the English, not the Canadians, speak "English" with an accent. "The Canadian, however, is prone to "forgive" them for their expressions and devote his concern to the Canadian who adopts them.

The Canadian has looked, however, with growing approbation on this business of almost perpetual tea but he has found it right over and then to have the Englishman assume that, because he is Canadian, he automatically takes coffee.

He has never quite recovered from the shock and disbelief of discovering the large number of English pubs and he has never quite ceased the mystery of how so high a proportion of the population can make a living selling beer. Maybe he has not heard the saying: "An Englishman's word is his beer" or "An Englishman's thirst: It's gold in the bank."

As English institutions go, the pub as an institution, is much a part of life as bread and butter and taxation.

He thinks he is the best skater in the world and he is surprised to learn that he cannot find Englishmen doing things on skates he considers easy to do. Of course, he says, they do "the fancy stuff."

He is somewhat bewildered at the mass of roof-top chimney pots, and half-heated homes and at the spectacle of grooms and hostlers mixing with doors open in wintertime.

He is thankful—thinks the English girl is a good sport and he finds her quick to learn his style of dancing.

He has found no one teach him steps he never heard of. He may have been shocked in one or two current districts which became so Canadianized that when the English girl was asked how she had enjoyed a dance with an Englishman she replied: "He was very nice . . . But so English."

He has had four years to study the English way of life and he is going to carry home with him a hand knowledge of things that were once words in books. If he has liked something he has said and if he hasn't liked something he will say so, too.

But there is one thing you can count on; the Canadian who was over here when the bombing was tough has a deep admiration for English courage.

Nazi Supply Lines From North Italy Hammered, Cut

Allied Headquarters, Naples, March 30—(AP)—Medium and fighter-bombers of the First Tactical Air Force have cut rail communications between Italy and the German battle lines, damaging or bombing out several railroad bridges, it was disclosed today.

The 15th Air Force report in heavy bombings into bottering new blows last night and yesterday at Milan, supply city in northeastern Italy, attacking railroad yards at Milan, Verona and Brescia, just west of Venice.

The effect of Nazi fall communications repeated the job done by Allied army heavy bombers just before the Anzio landing Jan. 22. Repairing and re-opening of the bridges will require many weeks of work.

The bridge at Montallo di Castro on the coastal road 75 miles by road northwest of Rome was cut by dive-bombers.

The railroad steel bridge at Orvieto 55 miles north of Rome on the main line to Florence also was badly damaged, as were bridges at Fano, Cesano, Perugia, and near Rignano.

R.A.F. Wellingtons and Liberators bombed the Milan railroad yards last night after the United States heavy bombers had left. Verona's marshalling yards by daylight and other heavyweights had bombed the railroad yards at Verona, a junction of the Brenner Pass line from Germany and the north Italian rail network. Still other bombers attacked the Mestre yards.

Navy Divers Make Underwater Repairs In Bitter Cold

A Newfoundland Port, March 29 (CP)—For two days, working in bitter cold that numbed them on their breathing apparatus were in danger of freezing, a team of RCN Canadian navy divers strove to effect underwater repairs to a damaged corvette, and were successful in getting the ship out to sea in time to overtake its convoy.

The team, in charge of Warrant Boatswain (Diving) Chaney of Vernon, B.C., and Victoria, had the responsibility of completing the job 30 minutes ahead of the promised time, and began work immediately by Commodore C. R. H. Taylor, flag officer, Newfoundland, for its efforts.

Chaney was called for a "rush job" on a corvette docked and arrived that the corvette could not sail until an important piece of gear had been repaired. He said he and his men began the job by the following Saturday afternoon.

The next day the ice began to cover the water in the "slot in" and went down to tackle the job. Chaney said they had to chip ice off their gear.

Personnel regulations are that divers must not work in water of less than 37 degrees temperature. Chaney's crew worked in 27-degree water, the ruling having gone by the board in the time.

"If we ashored to the old rules," Chaney explained, "we couldn't get much work done in this port."

The crew commended for "excellent service during most adverse weather and working conditions," included Petty Officer Brown, Ingersoll, Ont., and Able Seaman Hunter, Windsor, Ont.

Soil and Water Situation

Russell T. Kelly in an address to the Belleville Chamber of Commerce recently emphasized the truth of the old saying, "waste not, want not." At the present time this adage is applicable to our soil and water situation which has for years been undergoing gradual but steady deterioration, he said. "If we continue to waste some of our natural resources as we have in the past it is not beyond the possibility that we may come to want. In Southern Ontario we are not to deal with all Canada, in some districts all possibility of further agricultural use is gone, in others loss of fertility is less obvious but the quality of crops and of livestock has depreciated."

This depreciation is the result of too drastic alteration of the natural soil-water balance, Mr. Kelly said. "In almost complete clearing of the land allows water from melting snows and heavy storms, to run rapidly off the surface, carrying with it some of the layer of fertile soil which is all that remains. It from starvation. Did you ever notice how brown the water is in the spring? Did you ever ask yourself the question, 'What makes it so brown?' The answer is that, unfortunately, it is very fertile soil being washed away.

"This water running away means another great loss; less water soaks into the ground to maintain springs and wells. Right here in Ontario today farmers are drawing water for their stock from two to five miles, and in some cases the cost is $3.00 per day to a singlefarmer.

"These ills will not disappear of their own accord. If left uncared for they will get worse. They were created wholly by man's work, and the cure will have to come from man's efforts. The principles of cure are well known, but their successful application requires careful, large scale planning. The plans will require a program of education to secure the necessary co-operation of individuals and local municipal authorities and Government."

Speaking on this subject of "Topsoil" the London Free Press said editorially a few days ago:

"The next time you cross one of London's bridges, or pass by a flooded creek in the country, take a good look at the water—the dark brown water. There go tons of good Ontario topsoil, on their way to the lake.

"Not civilization only, but mankind itself, lives on and off the top six to nine inches of fertile topsoil.

"Oil wells, mines of metal and of coal, all the wealth that man gathers from the depths of the earth, are exhausted in the gathering. But the good topsoil, properly farmed, comes back with new wealth and new support for human life, year after year.

"We cannot shrug off as a matter of little consequence the loss of topsoil. It concerns everyone. And plans for conservation, so much discussed nowadays, are not mere topics for idle conversation. They concern everyone, and deserve both national and local consideration and support."

Stephen Leacock

Stephen Leacock, who was known throughout the English-speaking world for his remarkable gift of humor in speech and in writings, has passed away but his memory will linger long among those who knew him and his works for his brilliant gift of humor and his kindly nature.

A clue to his humanity is revealed in the statement he once made that he would sooner have written "Alice in Wonderland" than the whole of the Encyclopedia Britannica. This reveals the intensely human characteristics of the man who was also an economist of great prominence. This quality always so rare, is seen in his lighter writings as well as in his other writings such as history. In the latter he leaves the mark of his personality, of the richness of his mind of which alone makes his works of a wide and deep appeal that they will not lose through the passage of years. This stamp of personality lightens all his work.

He liked to write and not long ago published a book on the subject of how to write. His works, numbering twenty-five volumes besides his appealing essays and articles, bear the stamp of his individuality.

He had a wide public through his writings and his public speeches brought him an extensive fame. Among those who possess happy memories of Stephen Leacock are many of his students whose lectures in his class room were times to be remembered for his utterances marked by so rich a sense of the humorous.

New Diamond Field

(C.P.R. Bulletin)

During the war extensive diamond mining has developed in an area of the Ural Mountains. The Urals' "Diamond Land" was discovered in 1829, when the first Russian diamond was found in this area. During an entire century only 239 diamonds were mined.

After the Revolution the "Diamond Land" was carefully explored and its industrial exploitation begun. The demand for diamonds, which are widely used in the mining, rubber, silk and weaving industries, and above all in tank and aviation construction, has increased greatly during the war.

As a result, new mining districts with small electric power stations, industrial buildings, dwellings and clubs have sprung up in the diamond area of the Urals, where formerly there was only virgin forest, and even the huts of trappers were few and far between.

In '44, Says Max Werner

(Montreal Herald)

Max Werner, whose war analyses and forecasts have stood up better than those of almost any other commentator, flatly predicts Germany's defeat in 1944.

In the latest issue of Redbook magazine he says we know "how, in what situation, and with what methods the war in Europe will come to a close. Nineteen, eighteen, the year of German defeat, will be repeated in 1944."

Tomorrow some other analyst may knock us off our optimistic highchairs, but it was nice to have heard from Mr. Werner.

Side-Paths Along Highways

(Ottawa Citizen)

One minor but important item which should go down on provincial works programs for after the war is side-paths along main highways. Such paths should be definitely accompany all highways under jurisdiction of suburban road commissions and main highways leading to and from principal cities.

"A correspondence of The Citizen pointed out recently, the Ontario Highway Department's response to the request that a sidewalk be constructed along the Montreal road east of Eastview town limits, was that it was "up to Gloucester township to make the first move." That isn't good enough. The matter of sidepaths ought to be an active part of highway policy.

For years this newspaper has urged side-paths along highways near centres of population. They are necessary for the protection of pedestrians and particularly school children. Before the war the situation was bad enough. After the war, when bigger and better motorcars are made, and there are more of them, it will be worse. In any case, that forgotten man, the pedestrian—who helps pay for highways—is entitled to some consideration before he is finally exterminated.

NAVY WIVES

Among the risks all women run,
There is that suit of navy blue
With stripes of gold, a hair and one;
If very rich, perhaps two.
Which captivate them so they'll be
The wives of men who go to sea.

At first the glamour's surely there!
Until to distant ports he sails,
'Twould seem with such a suit to wear
The sailor's luckiest of males;
And cold, indeed, would be the maid
Who'd scorn a "striper, junior grade."

But as the days go fleeting by
The navy wife begins to see,
As one could do with half an eye,
Her life's not all that it might be.
He goes to sea, upon command,
And leaves her sitting on the land.

Oh, Admiral King! if you but knew
The thought of all the navy wives
Who blame their loneliness on you
And tell how you have spoiled their lives,
I'm sure your order next would be:
"Send only bachelors to sea!"

All danger of any further trouble from the Jess' appears to be averted. Yesterday the ice which was piled up against the C.N.O.R. bridge moved out for some distance and immediately the water lowered to a considerable extent. While there is at present a vast volume of water flowing down the river it is a few feet below the banks and will not rise again this season.

Mr. M. H. Mowry, former manager of Stroud's Store here, who is leaving shortly to reside in Hamilton, was recently presented with a handsome gold locket by the members of the Yarker-Ivanhoe Bible Class in the Baptist Church Sunday School.

Mr. J. J. Kelso, Superintendent of the Neglected Children's Department, Toronto, is a visitor in town.

40 YEARS AGO

MARCH 30, 1904

About ten o'clock this morning the immense body of ice in the river took another shove and the consequences are that the city are experiencing a serious flood. The residents along the lower portion of Coleman Street were suddenly aroused from their slumbers by water rushing through their houses. In a few minutes at the junction of Coleman and Bridge Streets west the water was rushing over the roadway like a mill race. Rowboats were pressed into service and in short time Jones, Brock, Mary, King and Colborne streets were flooded with water to a depth of one to two feet. Even at that early hour in the morning many families vacated their houses, fearing that the worst was yet to come. In many houses the stove fires were put out. The loss in many homes will be considerable. The Water and Light Commission on Bridge Street west and on a portion of Coleman and Everett Streets and in this way the business of some of the stores were transferred to a place of comfort. Some blasting was done in the river between the park and the western shore and some time after 10 a.m. the flood commenced to move. The water soon lowered and in a surprisingly short time the flooded alleys and streets were drained. It is now thought that further danger is over for this season.

Ostrander, of Marmora, was elected as candidate for the next Federal election. A Century Ago

Many sportsmen now take greater delight in "shooting" with a camera than a gun. It's too bad that these enthusiasts will never have the opportunity to photograph the great flock of wild pigeons that passed through Belleville in 1844. Talk about mass murders! The birds were killed in such numbers for decades around the beginning of the 1800's. But even at that they were practically extinct by the end of the century.

Surfeited with, wheat stolen from the grain fields, the birds would literally descend for a siesta on the trees near by. Many of them were so fat, so many pigeons jostling for position on the branches that the limbs of the forest giants broke under the weight. Then it was a simple matter to shoot, net or knock the birds down. And were they good at mealtimes! A pioneer settlers discovered that wild pigeons were more delicious when cooked in a feather bustle than in an oven. Laid on top of pie-crust in the basin, and with potatoes, the pigeons made almost every other dish seem second-rate.

Guide to Ore

Because no copper or iron had previously been found in Greater Palestine, which includes the Wadi Araba Valley, Dr. Nelson Glueck, Director of the American Schools of Oriental Research in Jerusalem, and Chief Archaeologist for the Jordan Valley, is inclined to believe that the famous passage describing the Promised Land is figurative.

"And you shall inherit a land where stones are iron, and out of whose hills you can dig copper," (Deut. 8:9).

It is known now that along the entire length of Wadi Araba there are deposits of copper and iron. These were intensively worked in ancient times, particularly during the time of King Solomon.

At numerous places throughout the Valley the archaeological survey of the American school found ancient smelting sites. Numerous fragments of pottery, called tuyeres, were found, which enabled them to be dated, particularly to the time of Solomon.

Budworm

According to an authority who should know, Dr. Hawkins, of Canada's battle against the budworm that is causing such havoc in the forests is at a critical one, says the Fort William Times-Journal. The budworm is attacked by J. J. de Gryse, chief of forest investigations, Ontario Department, Toronto recently, Mr. de Gryse said that the time had come when it was necessary to decide whether their forests shall be managed or left handsomely to nature, or whether they shall be ruined or crupped in an orderly manner and the forests they shall perish or persist.

Mr. de Gryse said that the present balance between the natural balance of the forest through natural factors is extremely delicate and this has opened the way to depredations by insects, particularly the extremely difficult to control.

The deadly work of the budworm, said Mr. de Gryse, is cut out at hand when there is more than forty per cent of balsam in the forest. He added that balsam is a tree that inevitably "kills in" when the forest is stripped of its protection.

According to entomologists, the name of spruce budworm is misleading. The budworm actually attacks of balsam and fir always are the focal points of heavy outbreaks. The budworm feeds chiefly on the buds and as a spruce nothing as it has no buds. Hence, it is not a true worm but, rather, a caterpillar.

More important than any cause, Mr. de Gryse said, is the fact that the numbers soar into the billions. Nature has a startling way of the power of multiplication which "controls" (keeps down) forty per cent) is beyond the effort of man to control, and which cannot be coped with by its natural parasitic enemies.

Mr. de Gryse pointed to the devastation that has occurred in certain areas as a result of the cut-and-run tactics of the budworm and the grave menace for the future. He thought that there should be a shift of emphasis from control to prevention. Natural forests not infected should be protected before beginning salvage of those that have been damaged. Excess balsam should be removed and new uses for balsam should be developed. The forests should be managed and cropped on scientific principles, and the examples offered by the Scandinavian countries should be studied and applied because as they are practicable and advisable in this country.

Wise Mules

A horse will work himself to death for a fool boss. R. T. Dempsey's writes in the Ottawa Citizen, but when a mule thinks he's done all he can safely do, he just sits down and quits—and so it ready for another day's work tomorrow. At one of the highest-ranking staff at a recount army post what wins wars for us, and he'll tell you, "Mules, every family: "Jughead. Hardtails. Mules."

Everyone knows that mules won in the Philippines in 1898 and in Cuba and, before that, in Mexico. And mules got food and guns and ammunition to the Yanks when trucks and tractors bogged down in French mud in 1918—and did it again in North Africa and India and Burma and a lot of other advance.

WEDDING ANNIVERSARIES

The practice of giving peculiar gifts on various wedding anniversaries dates from the celebrated Middle Ages.

Among the medieval Germans it was customary for friends to present the wife with a piece of silver when she had lived with her husband 25 years. The silver symbolized the harmony that was assumed to be characteristic of long years of matrimony possible.

On the 50th anniversary of the wedding the wife was presented with a wreath of gold. Since even the lustre of gold cannot last forever, the gift was considered a fitting one.

This idea, originally borrowed from the Germans, has been elaborated upon in modern times, and we now have a long list of wedding anniversaries that most people think should be observed with peculiar gifts.

Thus we have the cotton wedding, the wooden wedding, the tin wedding, and many others.

There is some difference of opinion and practice as to the proper names and the appropriate materials of the gifts for the various wedding anniversaries.

The following are the most widely accepted: first, cotton; second, paper; third, leather; fourth, fruit and flower; fifth, wooden; sixth, candy; seventh, woolen; eighth, rubber(?); ninth, willow; tenth, tin; eleventh, steel; twelfth, silk and linen; thirteenth, lace; fourteenth, ivory; fifteenth, crystal; twentieth, china; twenty-fifth, silver; thirtieth, pearl; thirty-fifth, coral (or sapphire); fortieth, ruby (or emerald); fiftieth, golden, and seventy-fifth, diamond.

A generation ago it was quite common in America to observe the practice of giving peculiar gifts on wedding anniversaries.

The practice had been gradually growing less common up until the present war, but the present war gave it a further check.

However, many continued to observe it have substituted available materials in place of the critical war materials in the customary and somewhat list of wedding anniversary gifts.

NAVY OFFICER MAKES INVASION LOOK EASY

Syracuse, Sicily, March 30—(CP)—They tell a story now about a beach officer who landed with invasion troops at Licata on the southern coast of Sicily and had to go to Syracuse 200 miles away. All railway traffic had stopped because the line ran too close to the fighting front. So the officer borrowed a train from the local stationmaster and ran his own "special".

The officer was Lieut. O. S. Ritchie, D.S.O., Royal Navy, of Aberdeen. He had several railroad men and some gear so, he said, "to go by train was the simplest way."

Beauty-Wrecking Activity

Lorraine Day believes rest is essential for beauty

BY HELEN FOLLETT

WE ought to be living in that delirium of activity always found among people who are out to make the most of their daily duties, there are other beauty-wrecking influences at work; noise, traffic hurry, tension, worry, all become incorporated into a force that makes women's faces look drawn, dulls the eyes, starts wrinkles growing.

"I'm going to rest." You hear that on ever hand. But if one doesn't rest, one can't work. There must be a balance between activity and relaxation. The latter season gets us down. Conditions for health will be better if we have more outdoor life, warm our weary bones with sunlight. Even the children seem to be occupied every minute and that's not right during the period of growth. Good Looks Foundation

Good looks are built upon a foundation of physical and mental health. Burn the candle at both ends and you'll both feel and look a wreck. Some of those over-enthusiastic cocktail party - goers should sit up and take notice. We don't need much stimulation these days; life is more stimulating than it should be.

The woman who is always tired is not the balance wheel of the domestic machine, she is what she should be. Children catch her gloomy moods. The pays has his troubles, too—should come home to peppy, smiling mama.

Perhaps during the day, you "driving" women can manage to work forty winks. Don't fall to do it, if the possibility comes. Do a complete job. Close your eyes. Relax to the ends of your fingers and toes. Clear the door of your mind, think about nothing at all.

A half hour nap will recharge weary motors, condition a tired nervous system, erase weary lines from the face. This indulgence is your due. When the over-worked mama feels over, there is panic in the home.

Cooking Meat The Modern Way

The keynote of modern meat cookery is moderate heat. By keeping the cooking heat low, this method gives a more juicy, tender and nutritious product. Meat is a protein food and too much heat makes the protein shrink and toughen. Within the past few years we have realized that protein and other important food values are wasted through out-of-date cookmethods.

The quality of the meat ranges from toughness to tenderness according to the part of the animal from which it came. How you cook any piece of meat must depend on the cut.

During wartime we are especially interested in the economy of heat. If you're planning a whole evencooked meal, roasting meat is the most economical method because your oven is already heated. However, top-of-stove cooking is a quick, easy method which makes it popular for busy war workers who have little time for preparing meals. The small and more tender cuts, such as steaks, chops and cutlets are willing subjects for panbroiling. Other pan-broiling meat, place it in a hot uncovered pan, and brown on both sides. Reduce the heat and cook to the desired degree of doneness.

The tough and cheapest cuts of meat are tasty when they are properly cooked. And stewing beef and veal meat, brisket, shank, or lamb shoulder, neck, or shank bring the best quality. Usually this meat is cut in small pieces and browned in a hot frying pan. Then the water should be added and the meat cooked slowly until tender enough to cut with a fork. The best time to add vegetables is just before the meat is done.

Pork shoulder and spareribs, lamb shoulder and breast make excellent roasts. Always start the meat with the fat side up. Then turn it from time to time so that all parts will cook evenly. When roasting meat do not add water and do not cover. Although you can determine the approximate cooking time for a roast by its weight, the accurate way is to use a meat thermometer.

When chops or steaks are very lean, it is better to braise them. Braising is a good way to cook all less tender meat. The main problem is to get rid of the tough connective tissues. These tissues can be broken by pounding the meat with a meat tenderizer, saucer, or cut knife, or they can be dissolved with water. To braise, the meat is cooked in a tightly covered pan, and browning is combined with stewing. Swiss steak, beef or veal birds and stuffed flank steak are some of the main cuts that should be braised.

AUSSIE FLYING FISHERMEN

Darwin, Australia.—(CP)—Fifteen Royal Australian Air Force units in Northwest Australia formed their own fishing fleet to supply a variety in their menu. Each unit nominates its own fishermen and the team is led by a keen amateur angler.

FARTHING NOT POPULAR

Canberra—(CP)—Controlled prices for milk has brought the farthing (½ cent) on to the Australian milk bill and a court has declared the little coin to be legal tender. But large-scale introduction would prove unpopular.

Questions and Answers

This column is sponsored by the Regional Office, Wartime Prices and Trade Board. Questions on price control, ration regulations and other Wartime Prices and Trade Board rulings should be mailed to the Information Service, Wartime Prices and Trade Board, Victoria Building, Brockville, Ont.

Q.—Where do I go to convert my preserves coupons into vouchers to buy maple syrup by mail?

A.—You should apply to your Local Ration Board and take your ration book with you.

Q.—When I went to the grocer's to buy canned blueberries he refused me to surrender preserves coupons for them. I thought that blueberries were off the ration. Is that not correct?

A.—Yes; canned blueberries are temporarily off the ration until next July 1.

Q.—I dislike entrusting my ration books to the children and when I gave them two loose coupons to buy a pound of butter, the dealer refused to accept them. Was he right in doing so?

A.—He was perfectly right. He would have broken the law if he had accepted them and you also violated the ration regulations by having them presented to him. Practising in loose ration coupons is forbidden.

Q.—My cousin in the country wants to make me a present of a gallon of maple syrup if she can procure it. Can he legally do so?

A.—Canned gifts of rationed foods are permissible.

Q.—Why are we asked to save the No. 4 ration books even after the No. 4 books have been issued?

A.—They contain spare P coupons, the first 10 of which will become valid for the purchase of sugar for home canning, and they also contain meat coupons beyond No. 40 which will be valid for the purchase of meat when the temporary suspension of its rationing is lifted.

Q.—Is tinned baby fruit rationed? A.—Yes, tinned baby fruit is rationed at the same value as tinned fruit, that is, 20 pts. per D coupon.

Q.—Since canned rhubarb and canned crabapples are off the rationed list does that mean that rhubarb jam and crabapple jelly are off, too?

A.—No, rhubarb jam and crabapple jelly are still rationed.

Q.—I understand that canned blueberries are off the list. Does that include blueberry pie filler?

A.—Blueberry pie filler as well as canned blueberries is off the ration until June 30.

Q.—Once I get my new ration book may I destroy my old one?

A.—By no means destroy ration book 3 or you will not have your P coupons for canning sugar.

WOMEN PLAN, NOVEL HOMES

London, March 30—(CP)—English women, demonstrated what type of homes they want for post-war living when members of a federation of Women's Institutes submitted house designs for a competition.

Many women planned houses of glass to catch the illusive English sunbeam. Several of them added an outhouse where the working man (instead could leave his bike, dirty boots, and clean himself before entering the house. Most of the women in their designs favored the combined living room and kitchen.

Foxboro and District Farmers' Co-operative Club Holds First Annual Banquet, Social Evening

Dr. G. E. Reaman, O.A.C., Addresses Gathering on Subject "What Makes Us So Queer?"

MUSICAL PROGRAM

"The true spirit of co-operative organization was exemplified by members of the Foxboro and District Farmers' Co-operative Club on Wednesday evening when in the Foxboro United Church Sunday School Room they met in their first annual banquet to enjoy a bountiful repast and a pleasant social evening together.

Despite adverse weather conditions, the Sunday School room was filled almost to capacity for the occasion as district associates, members and their wives, with friends from a distance were present. Chairman of the evening was the president of the organization, Mr. Mosier Hoe, 5th concession Ridley township, while the guest speaker for the occasion was Dr. G. E. Reaman, Professor of English at the Ontario Agricultural College at Guelph.

Although attending the function primarily to hear Dr. Creelman, principal of the O.A.C., expound some of his beliefs on agriculture members of the co-operative association nevertheless were not disappointed in the substitute as with as rare touch of humor Dr. Reaman presented his arguments as a psychologist choosing as the topic of his address "What Makes Us Seem So Queer, Comprehension of Human Nature.

"Human nature," said Dr. Reaman, "is made up of two minds and these urges—the conscious and the sub-conscious mind, with the desire to live, to love and to achieve being the three urges."

The sub-conscious mind was termed by the speaker as possibly being the more important in that it is the seat of all emotions and "that which plays the devil with us." There was one outstanding phase of the working of the sub-conscious mind and were termed as unified wishes. "Our dreams really make sense, if we can make sense of our dreams," he stated.

This business of living was a vastly different procedure than that at the time of Christ, according to Dr. Reaman. It was about then that man began to find in itself to the fore shoving the philosophies of life into the background, science now finding that its has made rather a mess of things is asking for a return of the philosophies of life.

Development Clear

The truths of this statement were illustrated by the speaker through his citing of developments in medicine, in education and in religion. The family doctor with his philosophies of life is again coming to the forefront with the realization that the specialist is lacking in some needed quantity; educational authorities are again realizing discipline has its place in schools, and the polished theologians of city churches are finding they have not the friendly contact with their congregation, that is enjoyed by the country preacher.

Continuing his discussion of the human urges Dr. Reaman stated the speaker traced the development of a child from the time of its birth until maturity and demonstrating himself as a real philosopher of life indicated the plausible mistakes, which parents are prone to make in the upbringing of their children.

The urge to achieve should be prominent in every adolescent child but this urge is often partially defeated by an inferiority complex that is difficult to overcome. When a child is afflicted by an inferiority complex everything should be done to bring out the thing that he does well.

Attended At Gathering.

The speaker intimated, that he was astounded at the rural awakening which is taking place in the country and which is shown through attempts to organize on a co-operative basis. "Then," he said "we give them a diploma and send them out into the world and tell them to co-operate. They don't even know what the word means."

Well-known artists from Belleville, Mr. James Bankier and Mr. Alec Gordon provided the entertainment for the evening, the former being heard in several much-appreciated solos and the latter in two humorous readings. Mr. Gordon acted as song leader with Mr. Gordon at the piano.

Welcome Extended.

Mer. E. R. Cook, of Foxboro, extended the welcome to the guests of the evening, indicating that the banquet was a wonderful example of co-operation among the farmers. He held the church also as a splendid example of voluntary co-operation, indicating that no other organization had done as much good through voluntary effort. He expressed a feeling that further advancement could be made in co-operation among the farmers and indicated that church organizations should lend themselves to the furtherance of this effort.

Tribute to the boys overseas was paid by W. E. Tummon in a brief address with the entire assembly standing in a moment's silence in their honor. After the singing of "God Save the King" Rev. Cook, Rev. Cook led in brief prayer.

Mr. Sine closed the proceedings of the Foxboro co-operative from its birth 12 years ago, until four years ago, while Frank Tummon as the association's present secretary-treasurer indicated that a $30,000 purchasing business had been carried on by the club during the past year. The guest speaker was introduced by Mr. Lynn Pair, county agricultural representative, while group-singing was expressed

Col. Roscoe Vanderwater, who voiced club members' appreciation to the guest artists and to the ladies of the Foxboro United Church W. A. who catered to the supper.

PROROGATION OF LEGISLATURE EXPECTED APR. 6

House Now in Consideration of Budget Estimates for the Year

WANT MORE PICTURES

Toronto, March 30 — (CP)—The Ontario Legislature, well into its last major task of consideration of administration of budget estimates, will sit today and tonight as it resumes its deliberations, expected April 6 at the latest.

The house passed a total of $2,131,000 in estimates for the Treasury and Mines Departments, the chief of forest, legislation and miscellaneous purposes yesterday as well as debate on the budget got under way.

Included among measures put through committee stage was the government's amended bill banning slot machines in Ontario, which would further define "slot machine" more closely and provides an appeal procedure.

During discussion of mining settlements, J. R. Baldwin (Lab.-Prog., Toronto St. Andrew) asked the government what was being done about the mining camp at Cobalt, which he described as a "ghost town." C. Lefaive (Lib., Temiskaming), also referred to Cobalt and said a survey should be made as to the possibilities of African cobalt "could not profitably pay a little more for Canadian production."

Hon. Peter Heenan, Minister of Mines, said the government was considering a survey as to what materials could be found for the many piles of the strategic metal at Cobalt.

However, he said, cobalt imported from Africa was superior in that it did not contain the percentage of arsenic found in the Canadian product. This arsenic content made it impossible to refine Canadian cobalt except at four widely-separated refineries on the North American continent.

Premier Drew told the legislature he did not listen "to submit to blackmail by individuals, corporations, or others" as he tabled a report on a Royal Commission's findings into charges of neglect and improper supervision in the provincial treasury department.

The report was the outcome of a story made by the commission into charges by Ernest Lawrie and Mrs. Marie Thompson, suspended civil servants of the treasury department against certain department officials. The personal report said the charges against the officials were found totally without foundation in any particular" by the commission, headed by Grant Potter of the Ontario Civil Service Association.

The commission recommended that Lawrie be released from the civil service and that Mrs. Thompson be retained in some department of the government outside the parliament buildings provided she agreed to comply with provisions of the Public Service Act because she had done good work in the treasury department for a number of years, Secretary Hon. Gordon Given.

Second reading was given bills respecting the Capuchin Fathers of the Belgian Province in Canada; the Corporation of North York, the City of London and the City of Oshawa.

Only one vote was taken in the House yesterday. The C.C.F. amendment was defeated 77-30 and the main motion to go into committee of supply was endorsed by the same count by agreement of the House.

Mr. Frost said the government does not intend to be caught napping by an unexpected drop in gold and a subsequent flow of capital into Canada and that a $30,000 increase in the printing vote for civic publicity and tourist bureau to $60,000 was to take care of this responsibility.

Hon. Frost was questioned by Mrs. M. M. Lockrick (OCF—Toronto Riverdale) and C. F. Stevens (COF—Brantford) regarding copies of films for children. C.C.F. leader Jolliffe, brought up the question of more educational war pictures, mentioning an American series "Why We Fight."

Premier Drew said he was in sympathy with the belief more such pictures should be shown. He also told the C.C.F. leader he would inquire about the series mentioned.

Order Required

The provincial treasurer also said he would be glad to receive recommendations from members regarding close control of children's films by the Ontario Film Censorship Board, even to having of a child psychologist on the board if necessary.

A number of opposition members brought up the question of the legislature's new stenographic record of "Baby Hansard." They supplied copies be made available to every member of the House, instead of just to party leaders and the legislative library.

Mr. Frost said though nothing could be done this late in the session, the government would be considered the request at the next session.

Britain May Have General Election End of September

London, March 30. (CP Cable)—Britain may have a general election at the end of September or early in October, the Daily Mirror's political correspondent suggested in a story today.

The correspondent said he regarded plans being made in constituencies where general organizations were required as indicating an election at that time and added that arrangements would be made by which servicemen could vote.

The last general election in Britain was in Novver, 1935.

The normal life-time of British administrations is five years but with the outbreak of war caused the life of the present administration to be extended.

Members Protest Employment Judges on Non-Judicial Work

T. L. Church Obtains First Sitting Re Bill Making It Illegal

PREPARE FOR EASTER

By FRANK FLAHERTY
(Canadian Press Staff Writer.)

Ottawa, March 30 (CP)—Protests against the employment of judges on Royal Commissions and other non-judicial work, heard previously during the present session reached a high level in the House of Commons yesterday.

On a bill to enlarge the exchequer court of Canada from two to three judges John Diefenbaker (PC-Lake Centre) said to Justice Minister St. Laurent:

"I suggest to the minister that he give consideration to the suggestion that judges be used only in the judiciary and in no way on commissions, particularly when controversial questions are involved."

Just before this T. L. Church (PC-Toronto-Broadview) a lawyer in private life as is Mr. Diefenbaker, obtained first reading for a bill to amend the Judges Act which would make the employment of judges on non-judicial work illegal. It was not his first effort. Mr. Church introduced a bill to the same effect last other sessions it has not been passed.

House Co-Operates

The House co-operated with the government in dealing with legislative matters in preparation for the Easter recess by approving the payment of votes of $600,000,000 on account of next year's estimates.

The fiscal year 1943-44 ends Friday, the day the House adjourns for two weeks. The financial supervisions for the new fiscal year, provide $702,000,000 for non-war purposes, and $3,850,000,000 for war expenditures, are to be sought for approval.

To enable the government to meet its operating expenses in April and May the House approved the voting of a total of close to $900,000,000 on account of the two months' supply. This made $48,000,000 for non-war account and $850,000,000 for war account.

It passed the annual routine borrowing powers bill authorizing the government to raise up to $1,000,000,000 by way of loan to meet current expenses and repayment of existing obligations. It also gave first reading to a bill to authorize the issue of government-guaranteed securities of the Canadian National Railways up to a maximum of $300,000,000.

Amend Exchequer Court Act.

The bill to amend the exchequer Court Act providing for an additional judge also passed third reading. Justice Minister St. Laurent said he could not recall any instance in which a judge of the exchequer court had been asked to sit on a royal commission.

He said the experience in the last few years showed that the work of the court was such that two judges could not handle it to the satisfaction of the litigants before the court.

Replying to a suggestion from Mr. Church that fees charge by the exchequer court be increased, Mr. St. Laurent said many cases were brought by subjects against the crown and he would like to leave the fees in these cases. There were other cases which might be different, and he would bring Mr. Church's suggestion to the attention of the law officers.

The sitting brought forth a reserved joint warning from Defence Minister Ralston and Gordon Graydon, Progressive Conservative House Leader, that the war is not nearly over and Canadians should concentrate on the war effort.

WITH PACIFIC FORCES

Ottawa, March 30—(CP)—Defence Headquarters announced last night that 30 Canadian officers who left this country several months ago have are on attachment to Empire and United States forces. Among them is Major J. G. Leahy, Port Hope.

EMPIRE NATIONS AND FREE PRESS IN FREE WORLD

Col. J. J. Astor of London Times Speaks at Anniversary of Empire Press Union

Toronto, March 30—Men who are "loud in truth," and newspapers of know the truth, and newspapers of the British Empire have brought the truth to their people in this war, Col. J. J. Astor, M. P., Proprietor of the London Times, and chairman of the Empire Press Union Council, told 300 Canadian publishers and editors last night at a dinner marking the 35th anniversary of the union's Canadian section.

"If the postwar world is to be a better world, Col. Astor also declared, the Empire countries will have an essential part to play. And then again the Empire will need its free, honest and honest press, for that press, he declared, the members of the Empire Press Union should be pledged to loyalty and devoted service.

Freedom Vital Factor

"This was bound to be a war of opinion, in which moral support would be a vital, probably decisive, factor," said Col. Astor, and it was well Germany to be kept in a world of ignorance—now, I hope, with an increasing sense of impending disaster. But I shall be surprised if Goebbels and his sycophants ever celebrate the 35th anniversary or their seat of power."

The continual efforts of the union, Col. Astor told the gathering, has been directed toward keeping the newspapers of the Empire in touch with each other, and had been a positive contribution to Commonwealth solidarity.

The union had worked to ensure that war news should reach the various parts of the Empire fully, accurately, and swiftly. It had successfully resisted unnecessary censorship, brought about introduction of an Empire press rate for cabled news, which it was hoped could be retained after the war, and now was working on further improvement of communications.

Serves Afterwar World

"If this is to be a better world after the war the Empire countries will have an essential part to play," he said. "Call it commonwealth, call it what you will, I refer to that wonderful partnership of great nations which frees the most stabilizing factor in the world. Whatever developments come, these countries will need their free, informed and honest press. To that press we of this union should surely pledge loyal and devoted service."

Senator W. Rupert Davies, publisher of the Kingston Whig-Standard and chairman of the Canadian section of the E.P.U., was chairman of the dinner which honored three charter members of the section: J. E. Atkinson of the Toronto Star, F. O. Ross of the Ottawa Citizen, and M. E. Nichols of the Vancouver Province. Scrolls commemorating the work of the veteran newspapermen for the E. P. U. and expressing appreciation of their contribution to the Canadian press were presented. Scrolls were presented.

Each dominion and some colonies were represented at the gathering. Government representatives included Sir Patrick Duff, Deputy High Commissioner for the United Kingdom; Sir William Glasgow, Australian High Commissioner; Hon. M. Firth, acting New Zealand High Commissioner; Hon. Vincent Meyer, representative of the Union of South Africa in Ottawa; G. Rae Stollmeyer, British West Indies Trade Commissioner and M. R. Li-Cai, The Hon. J. J. Astor, M.P., publisher of the London Times, who was chief speaker at the dinner in Toronto to Canadian publishers, marking the 35th anniversary of the founding of the Empire Press Union, of which Col. Astor has been president. He has been Unionist M.P. for Dorset Division of East since 1922; Chairman of The Times Publishing Company; President of the Empire Press Union; born May 30, 1886, youngest son of 1st Viscount Astor; married 1916 Lady Violet Mary Elliot, youngest daughter of the 4th Earl of Minto and widow of Major Lord Charles Mercer Nairne, son of 5th Marquess of Lansdowne.

Finland Making Another Effort To Cease War

Stockholm, March 30—(AP)—Finland's veteran peace emissary, Juho K. Paasikivi, was reported off on a new mission today for another try at arranging a Finnish-Russian armistice.

Reliable reports filtering through the tight Finnish censorship said Paasikivi already have made contact with Russian representatives, possibly during the current efforts to locate him either in Finland or in Stockholm in the past few days have failed.

It was in Stockholm that Paasikivi who negotiated the peace that ended the Finnish-Soviet war in 1940, first met Russian diplomats in Feb. 16 to hear Moscow's six points for getting out of this war. Premier Edwin Linkomies' government informed Moscow two weeks ago that it not accept the terms, but it is known that peace feelers have remained active in Helsinki.

Toronto, March 30 — (CP) — A publisher who started as the "cub" at a gun reporter on a small town newspaper is the new president of The Canadian Press. He is Senator W. A. Buchanan, managing director of the Lethbridge Herald who began his career as a boy of 16 on the Peterboro Examiner. He has been close to the smell of printer's ink ever since.

Senator Buchanan was elected president of the CP at the annual meeting of the Canadian Co-Operative News-Gathering Association yesterday when member newspaper representatives concluded their annual meeting.

Senator W. A. Buchanan, president and managing director of the Lethbridge Herald, who was elected president of The Canadian Press, Canada's national newsgathering organization on Wednesday. Arthur R. Ford, editor-in-chief of the London, Ont., Free Press and retiring after two years as CP president, said in his annual address that CP's post-war job will be to cover the nations as it has covered the politicians in Canada — "fairly and without bias." The Canadian Press management, looking to the future, was preparing for covering of the political and economic problems which is bound to follow peace in Europe."

J. A. McNeil, general manager, said in his report that "the general news service has been kept well up to the requirements of member newspapers by the ingenious methods limitations imposed upon them by staff shortages, space restrictions and other handicaps on publication."

The Vancouver News-Herald, a morning paper, was admitted as a membership in The Canadian Press, bringing the total number of daily newspapers in the co-operative to 90. The News-Herald is represented by C. B. Lindsay, publisher.

Later he worked for four years on the Toronto Telegram, first as city editor and then as news editor, and was closely associated with its publisher, the late John Ross Robertson.

At 27 he moved to St. Thomas to become managing editor of the Journal and went west two years later to join the Herald as owner, weekly, and convert it into a daily in 1907.

Elected to Legislature

Senator Buchanan's political career began two years later when he was elected to the Alberta Legislature and for a time was a minister in the Liberal government. In 1911 he was elected Member of Parliament for Medicine Hat and represented that constituency at Ottawa until 1921. He was appointed to the Senate in 1925.

N. Z. Premier A Wise Leader In War Effort

Peter Fraser One-Time Rectifier Emigrant to Represent the Smallest Dominion at Empire Conference

BY ROSS MUDRO

(Canadian Press Staff Writer)

LONDON—(CP)—A J. Munnings well-known painter of horses, has been elected president of the Royal Academy.

London, March 30.—(CP)—Rt. Hon. Peter Fraser, as head of the government of New Zealand, will represent the smallest Dominion at the conference of Empire prime ministers here.

Since the spring of 1940, he has been prime minister and has wisely guided the war effort of New Zealand which has been an example of self-sacrifice and gallantry to the United Nations.

In October, 1939, Fraser was in London and said then: "In New Zealand every man and every lady of the productive capacity and the general resources of the country are at the disposal of the British Commonwealth and her Allies in the struggle to curb aggression."

New Zealand has honored this pledge completely. Her soldiers have fought in the Western Desert, in Greece and Crete, in Italy and in the Southwest Pacific. Her airmen and sailors are serving in practically every war theatre. War production in the Dominion has been impressive.

He described the war spirit of New Zealand when he said: "Objectives and principles to which we attach the highest importance in times of peace must give place to those aimed solely at the utmost war production. The spirit of democracy demands that everyone must sacrifice gains, deny himself cherished right, and devote all his labor and valor to serve the common cause."

For Social Betterment

Yet throughout his life, this war premier has labored for the betterment of mankind in things remote from war and destruction.

While Fraser was health minister in the labor government elected in 1935 the great social security schemes of New Zealand were introduced guaranteeing security for New Zealanders against contingencies like old age, sickness, and unemployment.

Fraser is a Scot, born in Ross and Cromarty but in 1910 he went to New Zealand. He worked as a waterside laborer and joined the New Zealand social democratic party, becoming one of its industrious propagandists. He became president of the Auckland General Laborers' Union and in 1918 was elected to parliament. In the 1925 election he obtained a greater number of votes than any other candidate had ever obtained in the Dominion.

For 17 years he sat on the opposition benches and in 1935 labor came into power. In the first cabinet the portfolios of Education, Health and Marine went to Fraser.

Several times since then he has made trips to Britain and he will be no stranger when he arrives for the conference.

Old Sol Distant 93,005,000 Miles

Astronomers Hold

Accurate Computation Is Result of Observations Taken In 1931 Settles Historic Problem

By ALAN RANDAL
Canadian Press Staff Writer

London, March 30 — (CP) — Sir Harold Spencer Jones, Astronomer Royal and the man who determined the sun is 93,005,000 miles from the earth holds that this distance, commonly termed "astronomical unit of the earth's orbit," is the most important research in astronomy.

This distance determines the scale not merely of the solar system but also of the whole universe, and now, in Sir Harold's latest figure, the error cannot be greater than one part in 10,000.

This uncertainty, says Sir Harold, "corresponds to the apparent breadth of a human hair at 10 yards."

He did it by the geometrical method, of which expands upon direct measurement though there are two other methods. As high hopes had—parallactional methods and methods involving the velocity of light. "They do not so accurate as the geometrical system.

Measurement of Angles

The geometrical method, says Sir Harold, depends on the measurements of angles in essentially the same manner as a surveyor uses when he fixes the surface by triangulation. You start with an accurately measured base line; then you find the distance of a far point by measuring from each end of the base line in turn the angle between the baseline and the direction to the far point. This enables calculation of the distance of the point from each end of the baseline.

In the case of the sun the angle to be measured is what is called the "horizontal parallax of the sun" or, more briefly, the solar parallax. It is the amount by which the sun at rising or setting is apparently moved, to an observer on the rotating earth, from its true place in the heavens. This angle of parallax, about 8.8 degrees, is the angle subtended by the radius of the earth as seen from the sun; and is about equal to the diameter of a half-dollar as seen 200 feet away.

Because of its size and the effect of its heat on instruments the sun is difficult to measure but astronomers have been able to get to work on Mars and Venus for the direct observation and via these two planets calculate accurately the sun's distance. Venus comes comparatively close to earth — 24,000,000 miles and Mars gets around to 34,500,000.

But Eros, one of the Asteroids, is even better than Venus or Mars. The last time the astronomers could draw a good bead on Venus was Dec. 6, 1882, and the next time will be June 8, 2004 but Eros got to 14,300,000 miles as recently as 1931.

Astronomers were able to get photographs observations with 30 telescopes at 24 observatories in England, Russia, Germany, Belgium, Czecho-Slovakia, Italy, Spain, Algeria, the United States, Chile, Japan, South Africa, Australia and the Argentine. They used 2,847 plates and then went into a session of highly mathematics which lasted some years.

Final results, which Sir Harold made known only last January, showed the sun's distance from the earth, or the solar parallax from the Eros observations, is 93,005,000 miles.

Said Sir Harold: "The assigned probable error is based on the internal accordance of the observations. It is so small that the sun's distance is derived with an exactness adequate for all purposes unless there be some systematic error affecting all the observations. The goal for which astronomers have so long striven, of 1/10,000 of the sun's distance, has been measured with all the accuracy that is needed.

MAJOR MANAGERS MOANING OVER SPRING TRAINING

Many Players Training Inside but Results Not the Same

BASEBALL ROUNDUP

New York, March 30 — (AP) — While major baseball managers are moaning "Who said ball teams have still train pa- ticipation games again?" President Ford Frick of the National League is basking in the little sunshine in the clouds.

Stopping off in a snowstorm at Mendo, Tex., to visit Pittsburgh Pirates, Frick pointed out that all clubs were suffering equally from bad weather.

"The players are deriving certain physical benefits by holding indoor exercises and hooting for a streak of sunshine," he commented. "I realize, however, I myself cannot play ball at the athletes do to bolster up their weak spots in the gym just how they will stack up in the actual competitions."

Pirate Manager Frankie Frisch might have been inclined to ask what good these physical benefits" as he cancelled today's scheduled exhibition with the Fredman Field team and prepared to head for Louisville, Ky., for a day of practice sessions before the exhibitions against Chicago White Sox.

DETROIT TIGERS HAVE 34 PLAYERS IN ARMED FORCES

Club Will Have Battle to Keep Out of Cellar This Year

INFIELD WEAK

By WATSON SPOELSTRA
(Associated Press Sport Writer)

Evansville, Ind., March 30—(AP)—Detroit Tigers won the 1940 American League pennant with "nine old men," and if they finish one to this season it again will have to be something better than green hands.

The Army has drafted 34 players from Detroit, only major league club that had such a heavy hand in club never to have finished last, the Tigers are in the cellar.

You don't have to look far for an answer. The club has 34 players in the armed forces.

"We aren't making any excuse by a season where you don't know how you stand from one day to the next," says Manager Steve O'Neill, who is starting his second season with the tigers. "But right now it looks like we are as well off as anybody."

At all positions but the infield, the Tigers are reasonably well fixed from a pool of 15 draft-exempt players. Rudy York, Don Heffner, Jimmy Outlaw and Pinky Higgins, who are O'Neill's choices as the infield starters, are back from camp opener April 18 against St. Louis Browns, are all 1-A in Selective line ups ready for reclassification.

Detroit has a promising 4-7 pitching staff in Paul Trout, Hal Newhouser, Frank Overmire and Dizzy Trout, who all 20 years old in July, is back in centrefield. Don Ross and Joe Wood are fighting it out in right field.

Other pitchers are Jimmy Gorsica, 40-year-old Stan (Chief) Hogsett, 17-year-old Emery Hresko, Virgil Trucks, Orv Tuttle, Stubby Overmire and Zeb Eaton and Walter (Boom Boom) Beck.

Paul Richards, who caught 100 games last season, is expected back as Hutt's aide.

What's Doing in Sport

New York, March 30—(AP)—Carl Hubbell is being rumored as likely manager of the Giants if Mel Ott goes into the armed services. It is possible of course that Ott might be "promoted." But if he is replaced by Hubbell it is expected King Carl will also do manual duty.

Baltimore, March 30 —(AP)— A total of 131 horses was named by the Maryland Jockey Club yesterday as eligible for the 1944 renewals for older stars to be renewed during the 28-day combined Pimlico meeting which will open in two weeks.

Doswell, Va., March 30 —(AP)—Stan Musial, the 18-year-old throwback to the home brew who had earned $376,744 for his owner, the late Willie Sharpe Kilmer of Binghamton, N. Y., died yesterday at Meadow farm.

Miami, Fla., March 30 — (AP) — Fans at Tropical Park have started throwing away form sheets and buying tickets on the names ridden by 20-year-old apprentice Jockey Bobby Permane. The jockey from Camden, N. J., has 28 wins for the 21 days of the inaugural season and rode the winners yesterday.

New York, March 30 — (AP) — Three former members of the New York Rangers, Frank Boucher, traded last in the National Hockey League this season, were placed on the all-star team picked by managers of the N. H. L. clubs for the National Hockey game. The ex-Rangers are defensemen Earl Seibert, Chicago, and Babe Pratt, Toronto, and Lorne Carr, Toronto right winger. Completing the list are goalie Bill Durnan, Montreal Canadiens, center Bill Cowley, Boston, and left winger Doug Bentley, Chicago.

RUGGED OSHAWA GENERALS BEAT OTTAWA BY 10-3

Second Game of Series Will be Played In Oshawa Friday Night

EZINICKI STARS

Toronto, March 30.—The big, rugged Oshawa Junior Generals were well on their way to the Canadian Junior Hockey finals today, after pounding Ottawa Rideau University 10-3 at Maple Leaf Gardens last night. The game was the opener of a best-of-three series for the right to meet Montreal Royals. Second game of the series will be played at Oshawa Friday night.

Generals completely outclassed their rivals from the Canadian capital as they ran up six goals in the opening period and held a decided edge throughout the game. The second period saw the Ottawa City Six in the seventh-to win the Ontario Hockey Association title. In 1939 and 1940 the Generals were the champions of what last year were beaten in the finals by Winnipeg Rangers, the Western Champions.

Oshawa won last night without Lorne Carr, who was out because of displacements that Coach Charlie Conacher had announced prior to the game. Bill Ezinicki, Ken Smith and Floyd Curry were the scorers for Oshawa.

Ezinicki, a slim eighteen year old winger from Winnipeg playing his second season with the Generals, scored three goals. Smith scored twice and Curry, Conacher and Carr each had two goals and two assists.

Oshawa rapped in two quick goals early in the first frame, but Ottawa came back with a fluke shot that rolled in off Jack Hedley's pads, behind goalie Bill Durnan. In succession Bob Dawes, Ken Smith, Barker and Curry scored for the Generals.

In the second frame, scoring honors were evenly divided, with Oshawa scoring twice in the middle 12 minutes—11:36 with Ezinicki and Dawes serving penalties for Oshawa, Conacher went to the box on a combination. Bob Pepin scored for Ottawa with Oshawa playing short handed.

The third period was listless with Ezinicki netting his third marker for the night and Smith making it 9-2 with less than half a minute to go.

CHICAGO HAWKS NEED ONE WIN

Not Likely Mosienko or March Will be in the Lineup

Detroit, March 30 — (AP) — Chicago Black Hawks and the Detroit Red Wings, shift to Detroit tonight for the fifth game of their Stanley cup playoff duel with the change of scenery perfectly comes the last for the Wings, trailing three games to one in the best-o-seven series.

Beaten down twice straight in Chicago Stadium, the latest a 7-1 shellacking Tuesday — Detroit must win three in a row to gain the right to meet Montreal in the Cup final against the Montreal-Toronto winner.

The Red Wings, sadly weak on defense but the best set of attack will be strengthened by the return tonight of defenseman Earl Seibert, who was missed both games at Chicago because of a knee injury.

On the other hand, the Hawks may be forced to get along without Bill Mosienko and Max Marchi (Muff) March. Mosienko came out of the Tuesday game with a charley-horse and March with an ailing knee.

Absence of Mosienko would break up Chicago's No. 1 forward line for the first time in the series and force the Hawks to lean more heavily on the offensive stickwork of Doug Bentley and Clint Smith who between them have accounted for 7 of their team's goals and a total of 15 assists, in the first four games.

NAVY TEAM WINS

Ayr, Scotland, March 29—(CP)—Wardroom officers of Royal Navy team swept to the coastal hockey championship of the Canadian services in Scotland by beating a Royal Canadian Air Force team 4-3 tonight in the second of a two-game, total-goal series. The Navy took the first game, 5-2.

Nearly 4,000 district residents watched the lively action.

Power-house for the winners was Stoker H. Hall of Winnipeg whose eyeativeness and speed accounted for four goals and assisted on four others. An Ontario Airman Cpl. J. Cullen of Cobourg assisted on one Air Force goal.

Knew Exactly

Mrs. Hobson was going away for the weekend.

"Do you remember what time my train leaves tomorrow?" she asked her husband.

"Between hours, seventeen minutes and thirty seconds from now, dear," he replied.

(A Real Thrill.)

The other afternoon, while viewing a news reel picture at a local theatre, Mr. and Mrs. R. M. Mitchell, 14 Bellevue Apts., observed their son, Captain Murray Mitchell, acting adjutant headquarters staff Canadian army in England, sitting in White's Stadium taking in the Canadian-American football game against Notre Dame. Quality is enough a thrill or Mr. and Mrs. Mitchell.

(Just Squawking.)

Referees in the current Stanley Cup series are coming in for a heavy amount of verbal abuse. Hardest that goes the rounds in the N.H.L. sanctuary at the time, Toronto is up in arms with verbal protests against Referee Bill Chadwick of New York, while (King) Clancy and Dit Clapper, two of stars during the first four games in the Detroit-Chicago series.

Even when President Bill Tobin raced to the Black Hawks' bench after the other night in an effort to deprive finger at Clancy and to insist that Referee Chadwick was right, Tobin even tried to crash the sanctum of the club's dressing room from behind periods in protest.

At Toronto Coach Hap Day called Chadwick "weak-kneed" the other night and Referee Bill went out that night and made an official thumb for 18 penalties, which left Day scratching his noggin.

(Hard to analyze.)

If major league baseball moguls poked their noses into the officiating of a world series in the same manner that big-wig intimidate referees they would be barred from the park. Case in point: At one hockey mentors desire good officiating and close-to-the-knit interpretations of the rules the only sound method is to employ referees who have proven they know the rules and let these officials handle the situation without continued over-loading by the Board of Governors and Managers.

Another good suggestion would be to draft a set of referees and stable by them. Don't change the playing rules every 60 minutes or so that fans, players and even sometimes officials can't agree as to the proper interpretations.

The same thing holds good in amateur hockey circles where all that is necessary to have a good referee lined from six months in advance is to have local-mashed executive protest to the powers-to-be and in order to appease the official is changed, usually for no good reason whatsoever. Yes, the solution is simple—put the game first and the fans, players, officials and close tip the squawkers once and for all.

(Persistent) fellow.)

During the early years with the Yeanks, Bill Dickey was catching Burleigh Grimes, once a wizard with the spitball, observed Dick Young in the New York Daily News.

Hetzie Adams reached first base, and Dickey signalled for the spitter. Grimes delivered to the batter. Grimes fondly sprinkled a gooey coat of tobacco juice over the ball and let fly. The ground ball whipped past the plate, squirted out of Dickey's mitt, and Hamash scooped haphazardly down to second.

Obviously, Bill again called for the spitter. Once more the ball followed the glove, and Hamash stalled to third.

With the tolerant air of a father trying to reason with his children, Grimes tapped the rubber with his toe and delivered to the ground with a come-here-Index finger.

"Well, Bill," Grimes queried sarcastically, "what'll it be this time?"

"Let's have that damned spitball again," answered the determined Dickey, "and don't forget to cover it with tobacco."

(Sun Beau dies.)

The world's greatest money-winning thoroughbred from 1931 to 1940, Sun Beau, died suddenly yesterday at Doswell, Va. With winnings of $376,744 under the silks of the late Willis S. Kilmer, of Binghampton, he was standing at stud there with his owner's farm. The 18-year-old bay horse, by Sun Beau—Marguerite Lady, retired in 1931 and was noted passed in turf annals when Jim Rieault turned the trick in 1940.

(Remember when)

Rookie Ingle (Yep) Kelly aided and abetted 2 goals as Toronto Maples won over the Boston Bruins nine years ago tonight, 4-2, in the fifth and deciding game of Hockey League title. With the Bruins leading 1-0 and less than three minutes to play Kelly evened the count. His second and winning tally came shortly after the overtime period got under way.

LESSON NO. 241

By SAM GORDON

The bidding of a feeble hand requires no show of class. It takes no class, fighting and you simply have to pass. But with a holding that is stout, you really have your work cut out.

You may know there is a slam in your partnership. Its safety may depend on knowing what trump suit is best. Or on how many aces and kings are held by your pals; for a slam is a

The contract may get too high before you pick up both kinds of information. By the time you find out what's trump, it may be too late to ask about aces and kings. Or the other way around.

If you decide the slam is safe at a no-trump bid, you may ignore such information. Instead, you may concentrate on making sure there are enough aces and kings.

Very setting this pair of partnership hands:

NORTH	SOUTH
♠ A	♠ K Q J 10 9
♥ K Q 8 4 3	♥ A X 10 5 4
♦ A K Q 8 3	♦ 4 4
♣ K 10 9	♣ 5

The bidding gets this far:

SOUTH	NORTH
1 S	3 D
3 H	4 C
4 H

North could now bid five clubs and order south to show choice for either clubs or diamonds. But north knows there is a slam in notrump, if south's opening was honest. How does he know?

An opening bid of one shows, among other things, four bad cards. There are only 12 high cards (aces, kings, queens) in a pack. North, has eight of them. South must have the other four if he did not 3x.

How can north make sure? By bidding four no-trump; the ace and king asking signal. When south replies, north will know all he will need to know for a grand slam bid in no-trump.

Combine this no-trump trick with counting sheep.

AT THE CAPITOL

"The Bugle Sounds"

The U.S. Army plays a spectacular starring role in "The Bugle Sounds," story of the new mechanized force.

The result is a picture of realistic action with the regular army enacting its stirring role in the contemporary plan of defense. Thousands of tanks, stimulating wartime conditions, plumes across the screen. Five bombers drop their "eggs" and foldout rim, ride and crawl for cover. The shots were filmed under supervision of army officers assigned for the purpose.

The picture presents Berry as a veteran cavalry sergeant, thoroughly disgusted when horses are displaced in favor of tanks. His objections amount to insubordination when a tank runs wild in flames, crashing through a stable to mortally injure his faithful horse. His colonel and friend, Lewis Stone, attempts to pacify him, but the sergeant balks until he is given a court's martial discharge.

Then, however, turns out to be a ruse arranged in order that the sergeant may work his way into the good graces of a band of saboteurs. When they plan to wreck a shipment of tanks, he captures them and is rewarded with two medals for the collection already gleaming on his broad chest.

AT THE CAPITOL — Wallace Beery is dishonorably discharged from the army, and his wife, Marjorie Main, tells him she never wants to see him again. The scene is from "The Bugle Sounds" opening at the Capitol Theatre. On the same program "Cowboy in the Clouds" starring Charles Starrett.

Charles Starrett, Dub Taylor, Julie Bishop and Cowboy Hardy and his Saddle Pals will once again ride the air and sing their way across the screen of the Capitol Theatre in Cowboy in the Clouds," opening tonight.

Starrett is starred in the role of Steve Kendall, ranch owner who goes to the aid of the Civil Air Patrol under the Texan, the richest man in the state. The story carries Steve and his friends through the dangers of a counterfeit bonds gang, thrilling airplane exploits and the musical antics of Cowboy Hardy and his pals.

The new serial, "The Masked Marvel," also beginning tonight, is short subject as well as a colored cartoon.

AT THE McCARTHY

"Mr. Smith Goes To Washington"

Jimmy Stewart's perfection tonight seem an impossibility, but Frank Capra has been doing just that for so long the fact is no longer news. Director of "It Happened One Night," "Lost Horizon," "Mr. Deeds Goes to Town", "Lost Weekend" and "You Can't Take It With You," Capra's skilled today to the McCarthy Theatre screen version of Lewis Foster's ultimate in screen entertainment, "Mr. Smith Goes to Washington".

Apparently, three of his brightest personalities are exposed in "You Can't Take It With You" are reunited in "Mr. Smith Goes to Washington". They are Jean Arthur, James Stewart, and Mc-Ward Arnold, the first two co-starred in the romantic leads, and Arnold as part of a truly distinguished supporting cast which includes genial Guy Kibbee, Thomas Mitchell, Claude Rains, Guy Kibbee, Ruth Donnelly, Beulah Bondi, Harry Bond, and Astrid Allwyn, to name only a few. Porter Hall, Mitchell Kibbee, and Miss Donelly, have delightful previous Capra roles to their credit.

Like the others, they were personally chosen by the director as the perfect players for their particular part.

James Stewart plays the title role in "Mr. Smith Goes to Washington," and the youthful charm, earnestness and idealism with which he invests the young, inexperienced senator is the picture's appeal. Young Jeff Smith is head of the state's Boy Rangers when Senator Paine of the United States Senate has to be filled. Jeff's name comes to the attention of the ruling political forces who want his appointee to be a harmless and inexperienced tool.

Jeff goes to Washington uncomprehensive of the fact that he is being used as a tool by the bosses who dear. Miss Arthur, his secretary, is a pal at first, but she falls in love with the human, honest youth. Little by little she learns that he is being victimized. Climaxing scenes, a filibuster, goes to Washington", flowering out of rich antecedent material, reveal Capra and his cast at their best.

As Stewart revolt, the party machine fights back and the boss behind the scenes takes a hand in the proceedings. The picture is one to truly memorable heights.

"Twinkle Twinkle"

Beauteous Rosemary La Planche, who was crowned Miss America 1941, plays the leading female role opposite Jimmy Rogers, Noah Beery Jr., and Marjorie Weaver, in the new Hal Roach streamliner, "Twinkle Twinkle Kid," comedy filled with mirth, girls, gags and romance, which today at the McCarthy Theatre.

The boys and girls into high gear when their car blows up and they are rescued by the millionaire's chauffeur. Being of a romantic inclined frenzy, they are mistaken for celebrities and given a royal welcome by the townspeople while the real celebrities are entertained in neighborhood saloons. The boat is finally exposed, the boys tie up with a bevy of college queens, escape to the ranch and stumble over a deadly plot to doublecross the rich man. Emerging as heroes, they decide to continue their trek and to find real jobs.

AT THE BELLE

"Dr. Gillespie's Crime Case"

Veteran Dr. Gillespie, in the person of Lionel Barrymore, is kidnapped by escaping convicts in a prison break, battles, dramatically with his two assistants to conquer a children's epidemic, and figures in other spine-tingling, dramatic episodes in "Dr. Gillespie's Criminal Case," currently at the Belle Theatre.

The story carries on Donna Reed's adventures with Roy Todwell, demented killer, who engineers the prison break and is killed by guards. Little Margaret O'Brien figures in poignant scenes with Barrymore and his assistants, Van Johnson and Keye Luke in the children's ward.

Willis Goldbeck directed with the same deft handling that marked "Dr. Gillespie's New Assistant." Donna Reed is beautiful and effective as Marcia Bradbury, and Cowan menacing as the feared killer. Other players include William Lynn, Glegan, Walter Kingsford, Michael Duane, Nat Pendleton, Alma Kruger, Marie Blake, Bill Craig and Henry O'Neill.

"Battle of Russia," Great Drama

That campaigns are won by gunpowder and wars are won by people is the striking truth brought home by incontestable evidence in "The Battle of Russia," which is the 2nd full-length feature attraction.

The picture is presented dramatically throughout the thrilling feature-length film, which tells the story of the gallant people whose flesh and blood stalled the blitz and turned the tide of battle from the beginning. In its front-line shots of the Russian fighting men in the great victory at Stalingrad, generals are shown only briefly. Here is the real, one brief shot of Stalin, Molotov, King other Soviet leaders. Their efforts are seen at all, it is only incidentally, and while in action. For the rest, the people who are shown at length are just that—ordinary people.

A new Community Sing film will be presented on the same program.

The Miners, making the most of the breaks and helped by the luck which rods on the stick of slim Bill Lahti, scored three goals to take the third game of the series, scheduled to be resumed in Toronto Saturday, before 3,000 fans who saw the 4-4 after the first ended in a 4-4 tie.

"Lahti fired three of his teams' goals, one on a rebound and the other on breaks which could have gone to either team. Sudbury's other goals were scored by Alfred Webster and Cezar Clouthier. Stu Smith and Archie Creighton collected the Hull tallies.

The game's first goal was scored by Lahti at the 13-minute mark of the first period when he drove one shot that caromed off a player's leg into the Hull net.

Smith got the goal back for Hull half way through the second period, but the Miners quickly stepped ahead seconds before the bell ended the session. Webster flipped home the goal after picking up a relay from Rolly McLenahan.

Clouthier's goal came 10 seconds after the start of the third period, and it was followed by Lahti's second goal. Lahti was near the Hull goal mouth when his team mate Bill Houghton drifted a shot from the homesters' blueline.

The puck bounded off Lahti's skate into the net and he was credited with the goal. The shirley winger's third goal came at the 9-minute mark, when he slipped in behind Hull's defence to bang a shot unassisted.

The Volants made a desperate attempt to get back in the running, but their best efforts produced only a single goal, fired by Creighton after a passing attack with Dune Cheyne and Jeffre Sparks.

BUFFALO BISONS REACH FINALS OF A.H.L. PLAYOFFS

Defeat Indianapolis Capitals 4-2 to Win the Series Four Games to One

ALWAYS IN LEAD

By The Associated Press

Finishing first of the American Hockey League play-offs last night was reached Buffalo Bisons who whipped Indianapolis Capitals 4-2 for the fourth time in five games of a best-of-seven semi-final series. A crowd of 8,214 saw the game at Buffalo.

Bisons, always in the lead, built up a 2-0 lead in the first period on goals by Larry Thibeault and Roger Leger, and added another in the second by Max Kaminsky. Hymie Buller then counted twice for the Bisons. His first came from the blueline and his second with the Bisons playing shorthanded. Walter Atanas' breakaway in the third provided an insurance marker.

Capitals took out in the 2nd period, for which Moose Sherritt and Stanley Waldrift drew makers. Leger joined them shortly and Buller made his second goal of the conjuncture.

The Bisons played under protest because of the presence in the Capitals' lineup of Bill Thomson, who had played with Cleveland in the Stanley Cup series Tuesday night. Manager Eddie Shore alleged this constituted a violation of league rules, and Maurice Podoloff, president of the American League, announced he would fine the Cap management.

Podoloff also stated that, in the event Cleveland eliminates Hershey tonight, the final series for the Calder Cup and the league championship will get under way in Cleveland Saturday. Remaining dates would be: Buffalo, Sunday; Cleveland, Wednesday; Buffalo, Thursday; Cleveland, Saturday and Buffalo, Sunday. In the event of a 7th game it would be played the following Wednesday in Cleveland.

TORONTO LEAFS NOW ON 'SPOT'

Montreal, March 30 — (CP) — It will be Lady Luck all over tonight for Toronto Maple Leafs on the brink of elimination in their Stanley Cup semi-final series with Montreal Canadiens.

Canadiens, leading 3-1 in the series, and back on home ice after two wins in Toronto, are in the driver's seat to close out the proceedings tonight in readiness for taking on the Chicago Black Hawks-Detroit Red Wings in the finals.

The Leafs arrived this morning in fighting mood and full of determination to pull out a win that would give them a chance to tie up the series in Toronto Saturday night. They have won once already here, a 3-1 victory in the opening game. They are the underdogs in the betting for tonight, but they have undergone in that first game too.

The game is expected to produce some more of the brilliant goal-keeping that has featured the series throughout, with Bill Durnan, the Canadiens' Vezina Trophy winner, and Paul Bibeault, the tall, lean rookie of the Canuck's nets, hooking up in another duel.

THE LITTLE DOG BARKED by ANNE ROWE

CHAPTER 36

"I mean just that," I assured him. "If you're not what's good for you, you go to the Inspector right now and tell him she was murdered and you're afraid you did it. Tell him you got mad at her and you slugged her with your shillelagh that usually took Scotch but ran to Smack Hunks!!"

"Why why no" Paulsen still looked puzzled, but rather as if something were dawning on him. "The left se—no see—oh, fifteen or twenty minutes before Sadd he'd bolter got back to his flat and scrambled up one of the small bottles by the door. Why, I don't think I could pull out whith one. There are so many. But I was quite a way down toward the cove, and I was in a hurry to get back. And then Sondra and I walked back. At a snail's pace. She kept begging me not to give her away and—" he broke off and gave me a worried glance. "You—you don't mean—"

"On the contrary; I do mean and very much so," I told him, briefly and flatly.

Paulsen followed me out: then heaved: "Then I run away, please! You've got me all muddled and just have to straighten me out. I can see you suspect Linwood. He's a slippery customer all right, but can be reasonable! Why should he side with a bunch of has-beens against an important producer like McVane and writers like Stuart Anderson and you? It would be professional suicide, wouldn't it?"

My answer was a noncommittal shrug. But something in my face must have given me away, for Paulsen suddenly whistled and said: "Or am I an idiot? Is the alder-thicket pleh, so-called, smoke screen for something else? Good grief it must be! Only a lunatic would go around murdering people when attacking them and burning up little dogs, to spoil a gunman's pursuit!"

I shrugged again and he said understandingly: "Okay, so you won't tell me, of course you've got your orders and can't. Thanks just the same. You've been a great help. This is where little Orne runs to Inspector Petten!! and makes a clean breast of yesterday's consolations. And—and you! Or do you? I never and don't get myself into this than you can help. I don't know—but after talking with you I'm not sure.

"I have a feeling it isn't over. So please be careful. I don't want you to be among the casualties."

My embarrassed host had done me a world of good and my talk with Orne Paulsen had helped even more. I patted Paulsen's arm and walked back to the inn. Proud of my successful sleuthing, I was impatient to hear what Inspector Petten[ill] would say to Paulsen's amendment of his last night's statement.

I'd better write all he'd said down, in addition to Burns Lorhig's story which I had promised the Inspector. And went to the desk for my key.

Just as the clerk was handing it to me I heard Sondra's voice behind me, saying in her most affected Southern drawl: "Mrs. Turner, honey—don't you have a drink with you?"

Sondra looked very beautiful—all in her usual white, a woolly knitted suit that emphasized but not like her expression. She was smiling, with her lips only—her eyes were actually haunted and showed she had come for a purpose—to find out more about the investigation, or to take me to task for my forceful talk with her "Honeyboy" Linwood.

I had no wish to discuss either, but I hid my dismay as best I could and said: "Certainly. Let's go upstairs." Presently we were sitting in my room, each looking at the other warily.

"I—I came to tell you how desperately sorry I am about your little dog," Sondra opened the conversation.

"Thank you," I said conventionally.

"And that dreadful attack on Linda! Your nerves must be all shot to pieces. I'm sure I would have died in your place!" The words carried no affectation. I was most fainted when that policeman came and dragged us all over here for questioning. The very idea that anybody could have been another murder was making me ill." And Sondra looked it.

Her voice trailed off—she's probably not used to talking about herself and she glanced at us in her most plaintive manner.

I caught the glance. Then Sondra observed a light and said brightly: "Why don't you have a drink, honey? You know I'm here to help you in any way I can. Linda's all right, isn't she? Not—not dead on the cove shore—you know?"

So Sondra had heard. I had not seen her since Mother she now Linwood had given a sign.

"Linda's all right," I told her. "But she made a helpless gesture. "Oh, she made a helpless gesture. "Oh, nothing. I reckon it was fate. No other explanation for it. I believe. My mother—being it. And you found us right away."

"Intensely trying," I assured her.

Sondra sighed again. "That makes it all the more horrible—more—

"Foreordained?" I helped her out. She nodded. "Yes." I reckon that's what I mean. Had you been there you know I heard you—go away? Long enough to learn that you intend marrying Burns Loring—it was just—just—just—" Sondra's voice trailed off. "Just—Tom! Now he'll have nothing. He had a row with his other side too. And the way things—aren't—between Burns and Linda—more—

STATE DEMANDS DEATH PENALTY FOR W. LONERGAN

District Attorney Claims His Wife Killed "in Cold-Blooded Murder"

DEFENCE HEARD

By JAMES H. PORTERFIELD
(Associated Press Staff Writer)
New York, March 30 (AP)—Declaring the death penalty for Wayne Lonergan, Assistant District Attorney Jacob J. Grumet charged today the young Canadian killed his wealthy wife "in cold-blooded murder" because he "wanted to get rid of her money."

Grumet summed up for the state after Defence Attorney Edward V. Broderick had declared in his final defence argument that Lonergan had been provoked by members of the District Attorney's office and police.

Court then was adjourned until tomorrow when general sessions Judge James Garrett Wallace will send the case to the all-male jury.

Picturing the 29-year-old defendant as a "fearless country boy who found himself in the big town," Broderick declared Lonergan was compelled with liquor for hours to get his confession. "He was drugged, choked his wife, Patricia, to death last Oct. 24.

"He was not only drunk when he was brought into the district attorney's office but he was 'high as a kite' on marijuana," the defence attorney shouted. "That's no defence cast. Sheets be in Frisco!"

"Gentlemen, it's a terrible indictment when I say that when this is over four men should be in state prison — District Attorney Frank Hogan, Assistant District Attorney Grumet, Assistant District Attorney John Leahr, who perjured himself on the witness stand, and Police Capt. Daniel Mahoney."

Broderick, whose opening summation lasted for about an hour and 40 minutes, charged also that Assistant District Attorney Grumet "bought" Lonergan on a promise to keep secret his abnormal sexual habits in the grand jury.

"This country boy from the far reaches of Canada," the attorney said, "was cheated by the city slickers of the District Attorney's staff."

Declaring that the state had failed to prove that Lonergan was the killer, Broderick suggested two other ways in which the heiress might have met her death.

"First, at the hands of a burglar, and second, at the hands of Mark Gabellini, who escorted her to night club just before the slaying.

"I say it significant," the defence attorney demanded, "that the district attorney did not rule out the possibility of burglary or that Mrs. Lonergan died at the hands of Mark Gabellini? Isn't it important to know how much money she had as the staggered into her home on the night? Isn't it important to know how much jewelry she had as she staggered into her home?

Possibility Not Ruled Out.

"The district attorney hasn't ruled out the possibility that Gabellini grabbed the jewelry and murdered her".

Broderick asserted that Gabellini, whom he described as "sophisticated and slippery", was in competition with Lonergan for the affection of the heiress and that Lonergan, "fascinated by the glamor and glitter" of the life he was living, found himself "in the grip of this gigolo".

From now, the defence attorney attacked the testimony of Gabellini as witnesses, charging the State deliberately kept certain police officials off the stand because they were afraid to subject them to cross-examination.

"This case has smelled from its originations," Broderick declared, "and I could detect the stench getting stronger when the medical examiner was on the stand. The doctor didn't tell the truth".

The examiner, Dr. Milton Helpern, testified Mrs. Lonergan's death was caused by a fractured skull, lacerations on the head, and strangulation. He said the fracture could have been caused by such an instrument as the brass candle sticks with which the slayer contended Lonergan beat his wife.

He Bled on Clothes

Broderick said that while Mrs. Lonergan bled so much that even the bedclothes were soaked, there was not a drop of blood on the candlesticks.

"I say to you", he added, "that candlesticks were placed in that room and under the bed after Mrs. Lonergan received a beating."

Broderick charged there was "something strange" about the testimony of a nurse who was employed in an apartment above the Lonergans and who said she heard screams but didn't investigate or advise the police.

Had Fun For Love

Lee testified that Skinner had a car in which he said was going to take a train at Thurso the morning of July 4, 1945, to go to Lee and his three children, whom Lee undertook to adopt till.

"He had my permission to stay in Thurso overnight only because if he went to Camp 17 (where the prisoners were housed) he might not be able to get out for three days", Lee told the Court.

He said he gave Skinner his pass at about 9 p.m. March 15 and at about 11 p.m. asked him to take guard duty because he was tired.

Read Orders of Day.

Questioned concerning standing orders relating to guarding of prisoners, said Skinner had read the orders at the camp. They were kept in a locked box under lock and key because there was no office. He said the orders could be posted without being seen by the prisoners.

Lee was preceded to the witness stand by Morris Rose, 21-year-old son of several Buckingham girls who took part in an alleged love affair and dancing party with the German prisoners at Thurso March 15. She testified briefly.

Skinners trial had been expected to conclude this morning.

Pte. Skinner previously pleaded guilty to charges of allowing a German of the war to fraternize in public with civilians and carrying out his duties improperly.

Regina Chenier, 16, of Buckingham, testified yesterday that she had seen Skinner, that she had seen two of the prisoners in a Thurso restaurant, and that he had been drinking rye whisky in the kitchen of the Civic Lunch restaurant the afternoon of March 15.

Girl, Prisoner Found in Room Soldier Testifies

Buckingham, Que., March 30.—(CP)—Cpl. William Lee of Montreal, testified today at the court martial of Pte. Nelson Skinner of Orangy, Que., charged with misconduct with a girl and allowing German prisoners of war, that he had found a girl and a prisoner in bed in a room in a hotel at nearby Thurso the evening of March 15.

"Get out of here; how did you get up here anyway", Lee said he had also had faced trial before the court martial on three charges of improper conduct while in charge of the prisoners. He was found not held judgement on the three other charges, pending his good behaviour.

Lee, another member of the Veterans' Guard of Canada, pleaded guilty yesterday after his lawyer began to lay out the six charges facing him—all arising from incidents that the prisoners, who had been taken from a lumber camp for medical treatment, had been permitted to fraternize with civilians and drink intoxicating beverages.

NUREMBERG, NAZI TRANSPORT CITY, BLASTED

Allied Air Fleet Has Heaviest Loss In Single Operation

96 Aircraft Lost When 1,000 Planes Drop 2,000 Tons of Bombs on Target

SOFIA HEAVILY HIT

By STUART HEATHCOTE
Associated Press Staff Writer

London, March 31 — (AP) — A great armada of R.A.F. and R.C.A.F. bombers numbering probably more than 1,000 smashed at the southern German industrial city of Nazi congress city of Nuremberg and other points in the Reich last night in a test of 96 planes—the heaviest toll ever taken of the Allied air fleet in a single operation.

The R. C. A. F. which made a big contribution to the blasting attack lost 13 bombers.

The Canadian bomber group loss was five less than the record of 18 lost by the R. C. A. F. in the heavy attack on Berlin on the night of Feb. 19-20. Thirteen R. C. A. F. bombers failed to return after the last heavy night attack on Berlin on March 24-25.

The record loss was announced just as the continuing battering of Germany by widely dispersed attacks with the exception of Vienna in Austria, shut down for the night shortly after the morning that "enemy planes are approaching."

The first German attacks said the daylight raiders were over Hesdin-Nemour-Pontoise-Dreux area which Flight Alert is situated.

The announced loss last night, which did not include claims of those having suffered the greatest degree of damage, was 7½ per cent of the shooting down of 132 four-engined bombers in the operation in the 11th month of the R.A.F.'s sky fleets.

The fact air ministry communique made no reference to the bomb load but in the case of Berlin it was great strength," suggesting that probably 2,000 tons of bomb load were dropped, despite the distance involved.

The big attack force, probably one of the largest ever sent out; the defiant daylight attack on Hesdin; the Reich; and a huge fleet—largest group of heavy bombers ever to strike at Italy—over the Mediterranean which raided Sofia in Bulgaria yesterday were the biggest month yet in the European air war.

Hurl De Airfields

The air ministry also announced that R.A.F. and R.C.A.F. fighters flew offensive patrols over Northern France yesterday and last night during the night intruder planes ranged over every continent, blasting up airfields in France, the low countries and Germany itself.

One fighter and one intruder were missing from these operations.

Mindful of the U-boat menace in waters during the night by R.A.F. bombers.

The attack on Nuremberg—the scene of Adolf Hitler's pre-war Nazi party rallies and the peacetime centre of the Nazi party—it was the ninth of the war on that city.

Previous blows had devastated 106 acres of Nuremberg's built-up area. The last blow before the attack on Aug. 10/11 when the city was hit by 574 forces.

The city is one of the most important railway and industrial centres of Southern Germany. It is the site of many factories such as the M.A.N. Diesel Engine Works, the Siemen Motor Works, the Siemens-Schuckert Electrical Works and other plants turning out tanks, armoured vehicles, aircraft components, searchlights and other frontline equipment.

It is the junction of railway lines leading to the Baltic and Northern Germany and from Berlin to Munich. Its normal pre-war population was 450,000.

Nuremberg, Bavaria is chiefly in the southern outskirts which extend to suburban Furth where is the Messerschmitt factory is located.

The record loss suffered by the R.A.F.—which its Commander-in-Chief stated to their fighters rather than to their government—was announced as stated that Goering's air force still has a potent striking force on occasions when it cares to take the field.

It served as a reminder of the statement of Air Secretary Sir Archibald Sinclair this week that the German fighter force is massed in Western Europe and has not suffered any loss battles in its system yet.

While the loss was considerably above the average the R.A.F. previously had suffered—the previous top loss was 94 bombers in the raid on Leipzig on Feb. 19—and also beyond the record United States bomber loss of 60 in the daylight raid on Berlin March 6, it fallen in appearance numerically with the 185 planes which the Germans lost in the biggest day over British on Sept. 15, 1940.

U. S. Bombers Remain at Home

The attack followed a day in which British-based American fighter-bombers struck at enemy airfields near the Belgian-German border, American heavy bombers remained at home, but an official announcement in London last night said United States heavy, weights, in the largest force ever sent against a single target from Mediterranean bases, struck blasted Sofia, Bulgaria's capital, yesterday while it was still smoking from a smashing R.A.F. night attack.

The Nuremberg foray, involving round-trip flights of more than 1,000 miles for the four-engined bombers, constituted a thrust into Germany by night which according to neutral reports, Hitler has moved some of his war industry from the more accessible areas in the west.

Last night's attack was the 11th large-scale night blow against targets in Germany since mid-January by the R.A.F. and R.C.A.F. bombers blasted Berlin and other German targets with more than 2,000 tons of explosives.

The R.A.F. and R.C.A.F. last night announced in force the night of March 30 when formations penetrated Germany to the Nuremberg area of explosives on Essen and Hanover and Berlin. Twenty-four of the bombers were lost that night.

London had announced early alert last night but no official announcement said scattered bombs caused slight damage and a small number of casualties.

London's anti-aircraft defences spoke with semi-action, including the rocket batteries which have been employed against women this week. During the demonstration, Air Frederick Pile, Chief of Britain's ti-aircraft Command, predicted that rocketry eventually will replace heavy anti-aircraft guns altogether.

The American communique announced that attacked Sofia encountered 40 German planes and shot down eight of them, the total falling prey to the fighters.

Flying in strength with the big Sofia attack, the main central railroad yards received many hits. Direct hits were well covered, and that repair sheds were damaged and warehouses afire.

500,000 Children Said Undernourished

Ottawa, March 31 — (CP) — A recent investigation to determine the number of undernourished children in Canada has been made by Parliamentary assistant to Labor Minister Mitchell, Hon. Speculates on Course of Events Going on Inside Germany

By WILLIAM STEWART
(Canadian Press Staff Writer)

London, March 31. (C.P. Cable)—There has been considerable speculation in the British press about what is going on inside Germany and why military reversals in the east, increasing air attacks and difficulties do not produce a crack-up.

It is thought possible the German propaganda machine and leadership may be able to bring about a peace-offering better prospects of acceptance than surrender which at present is the only way out.

Writing in the Daily Mail, Beverbrook's Daily Express, said that the German people are holding their strength through fear. Allied leaflet raids over Germany indicate that final retreat has started but that the process must be slow as the people must be given realties, too, that there is no alibi for defeat this time, Holy added.

Meanwhile, David Walker, Labour member of parliament for Dudley Mirror, said that despite the loss of 1,000 bombers and although their diet is meagre, the Germans will have just enough to eat to keep going until some time, particularly now that the Winter is over.

AIR OPERATIONS OVERSHADOW GROUND FIGHTING

German Troops Move Into Two Positions Recently Evacuated By British Troops

NAZIS BOMB HOSPITAL

By LYNN HEINZERLING
Associated Press War Correspondent

Naples, March 31 — (AP) — German troops have moved into two positions on Monastery Hill evacuated several days ago by British and New Zealand troops and small enemy ground forces attacked Italian positions, it was announced today, but air operations again overshadowed ground activities.

On the Anzio beachhead, 65 casualties were suffered when German planes bombed an Allied hospital area, headquarters said.

Fifth Army forces clinging to positions inside battered Cassino reported that German artillery and mortar fire had immediately brought them under heavy fire.

Artillery alone was active in the snowbound mountains north of Cassino.

Patrol Activity Only

Ground activity elsewhere along the Italian front was confined to patrol skirmishes, a communique said, but in the air Allied planes attacked targets as widely separated as Austria.

In addition to the assaults on rail communication targets in Italy, Allied warplanes, including bombers, other than bombers hit the German airdrome at Zagreb, Yugoslavia.

Fifteen enemy aircraft were shot down, the air and two destroyed on the ground in all operations over the Mediterranean, Allied planes were said from approximately 1,500 sorties flown. Thirty-two Allied planes were lost in the battle area.

Simultaneously with the heavy bombing operations, medium and fighter-bombers struck up the west coast of Italy and attacked shipping and rail centre installations at Leghorn. Fighter-bombers also attacked German motor transport and rail targets near the Anzio beachhead and Cassino sectors.

Occupy Two Hills

Fighting before the two positions reoccupied by the Germans were with No. 2 New Zealand Corps, whether they also sent troops to Hangmarsh Hill higher up the slope of Monastery Hill, looked for nearly two weeks.

It was announced that shell fragments found on the bridgehead have been identified as those from shells of 280 or 305 millimetre calibre, possibly huge Italian guns.

Northeast of Cassino Allied forces repulsed two small enemy counter-attacks in the Atina area, artillery engaged small enemy forces in the vicinity of Carocoto.

14,000-Ton German Troopship Torpedoed By R.A.F. Beaufighters

London, March 31 — (CP) — A 14,000-ton German troopship was torpedoed by R.A.F. and R.C.A.F. attacks on a convoy off Norway, it was announced today.

The announcement said the troopship, the former liner Monte Rosa of the Hamburg-South American line, was hit twice by torpedoes from R.A.F. Beaufighters which were able to observe the results because of intense flak; Canadian Beaufighters were among the force making the first attacks.

"Two of the escorting ships were also believed damaged and an M.E. 110 was shot down to the loss of two British planes, the announcement said.

Berlin claimed seven out of 18 attacking British planes were shot down by the convoy's guns and according planes. It termed the attack unsuccessful.

"It was the strongest escort we have met on that part of the coast," said P/O. Arthur Hall, Toronto, Ont. "I took on one Messerschmitt and saw him go down in flames."

Epic Battle With Crocodile Fought In Jungle by U.S. Army Scientist

(The following story was written by Staff Sergeant Ward Walker of Chicago, a United States Marine Corps combat correspondent, formerly a Chicago Tribune reporter and attached to The Canadian Press).

Cape Gloucester, New Britain, March 31 — In the murky depths of a jungle pool, a U.S. Army scientist waged a barehanded fight for his life with a huge, 20-foot crocodile—and won.

Pfc. Jack Darlington, 39, of Cambridge, Mass., managed to subdue his wily opponent, then collapsed in a field hospital.

As entomologist of a United States Army research unit working with the Marines, Darlington was hunting for insect specimens when he came to a stagnant jungle pool. He carefully worked his way out on the middle on a log submerged about two feet under the surface. As he reached for a new tube of the thick green water, he saw the giant crocodile rise from the depths.

Darlington started edging toward the jungle wall. He lost his footing on the slimy log just as the reptile struck him.

As he rose to the top of the water, the crocodile's huge jaws, mouth gaping wide and huge fangs showing.

He tried to grasp the beast's jaws, but one got away. Then he turned and struck as they wrestled.

The reptile's jaws closed on Darlington's right arm. He rolled over, tossing the six-foot-two-inch, 200-pound captain in through the water's edge. Then it carried him to the bottom.

Within few seconds seemed hours, Darlington said.

Darlington said he said, "and it was like trying to kick in a sea of molasses. I was completely under water and it was hard to force my muscles to respond."

He must have landed on the reptile's soft belly for it opened its jaws. Desperately, Darlington threw his way to the surface and despite his torn arm, swam to the jungle edge.

NAVAL ASSAULT OPENED AGAINST JAPANESE PALAU

Central Pacific Naval Base on Approaches To Philippines Hit By Large Task Force

JAP NAVY FLEES

By LEIF ERICKSON
Associated Press Staff Writer

Pearl Harbor, T. H., March 31. (AP)—Operating within 600 statute miles of the Philippines, American warships opened the war's first attack on Palau, one of the former great Japanese Central Pacific Naval Bases of Palau, and Nipponese naval units fled, apparently without a fight.

Tokyo radio announced that the Armada's approach, deserted the area in 1942.

"Our attacks continue," announced Admiral Chester W. Nimitz, commander of the United States Pacific Fleet.

It is considered likely that this deepest penetration on the road back to the Philippines was made by American carrier task forces at least equal in size to those which dealt such heavy blows to Japan at Rabaul and Truk.

A Navy communique yesterday said the attack began "early Wednesday at dawn Wednesday, March 29, (Island) Palau Island."

Observed Fleeing Area

Heavy carrier warships at Palau, at the west end of the Carolines, were observed fleeing the area, Nimitz said. The attacking Armada was of immense size.

Admiral Mitsilis said Japanese Admiral Koga's Combined Fleet sailed spot the task force's approach, which may be taken to mean the fleet was in the area of the Carolines to get at Palau. That would put the task forces in waters adjacent to the Southwest Pacific command of Gen. Douglas MacArthur.

The scores of small islands making up Palau have been transformed into "Japan's Singapore" since they, the rest of the Carolines and all of the Marshalls were taken over by Japan from the League of Nations after the First World War, in 1914.

The town of Koror, to the south of the Palau group Island of Babelthuap, is the enemy's administrative centre for the Carolines and Palau's southernmost island of Angaur is one huge phosphate mine, eight square miles in area, and its phosphates are shipped to Japan for munitions use.

6th VICTORY LOAN TO THE FORE

Although the opening of Canada's 6th Victory Loan campaign is still more than three weeks away, committees of the Belleville County organization are leaving no stone unturned in the matter of Belleville that again their purchases of Victory Bonds will be the proud record of the materials of war which Canadian farmers have to smash their way through to victory. In the city hall last night, meeting during Mine assigned for the distribution of No. 4 ration books, the Victory Loan committee had had a young lady stationed in the building handing out cards to all seekers of ration books. The card reminded of the proud record achieved in the past and of the fact that an even greater test lies in the coming venture. "Put Victory First—Invest to Invade" reads the campaign slogan.

PEDESTRIANS SPLASHED BY DRIPPING AWNINGS

Vagaries of the weather, combining with apparent unthinking on the part of local business men and property owners was the cause and contributing justified agitation on the part of Front Street pedestrians around the noon hour today as dripping awnings exasperatingly deluged sidewalk users. Yesterday afternoon's downpour, following a night with snow and today's milder temperatures, have had their effect with the result that pedestrians were forced to walk in the gutter or underneath. Just what the stores proprietors could do to alleviate the trouble does have to be figured out by themselves.

15,000 Ration Books Distributed In Three Days

Approximately 15,000 ration books have been distributed in the city during the three days since their distribution began on Tuesday afternoon, it was reported Thursday evening by Mr. Harold Bateman, city comptroller, who acts as chairman of the Local Ration Board. Of this number approximately 3,000 had been distributed at the city hall and another 2,000 at several of the larger factories where arrangements had been made to give the books out to workers.

Greater convenience in handling the crowds in the butter market than was the case in the city hall auditorium was stated by Mr. Bateman to be a factor in the speedy distribution of the books and the comparative absence of any sizeable lineups at the various doors opened at two o'clock has there been any assistance of a line-up of persons waiting to get their ration books.

At the time of the distribution of No. 3 ration books slightly over 18,000 were given out in the city. Assuming that a comparable number will be distributed today, those in charge expected a rather easy day at the city hall during the last day, for getting their ration books today will have to wait until mid-April, it was indicated.

Kinsmen Show Well Patronized On Second Night

Funds for nourishing health-giving milk for the babies of Belleville and district, assets cigarettes for Belleville boys serving overseas and many other worthy causes got the patronage of the second night of the Kinsmen "Monte Carlo" carnival at the Armouries Thursday evening. The carnival will continue on the night's stage shows and entertainment of pleasant and friendly character, while the gay casinos continues tonight and Saturday afternoon and evening and will be concluded on a full night's program, Saturday night, it was stated Morey, "Again it was a splendid night's entertainment provided by Phil Gilbert and his orchestra, Morey declared.

Lieut. Tommy Mason, of the Canadian Army and a former Belleville entertainer in his own right, acted as master-of-ceremonies and added much to the show in his own inimitable manner. Mason has a hitchhiker's knowledge of community singing, which tended to help the success of the evening and was subsequently proven in the enthusiastic response of the audience to acts in succession. Lieut. Mason also brought with him a group of the Royal Canadian Regiment of Kinsmanship in such efforts as Sergt. Bert Smith and Pte. Fagg funds.

Impersonations Given.

Last night's crowd was in excess to that of opening night which was considered quite mitigated attendance. With an appreciative audience, Gordon Walden gave impersonations of Martha Raye "Mrs. Roosevelt Goes to a Prize Fight Day No," and for an encore presented a true Gracie Fields type song "Sing As We Go, How I Cried." However by crowning success was the singing that they render, "Oh, Johnnie, Oh, Johnnie," to Kin Mcdonald, who, in a costume appeared on the stage as Miss Morey assisted in the singing of the song and substituting the name Johnnie Mcdonald much to the amusement of the crowd, and especially appreciation of Kin Mcdonald. Pete Madeline Walden's Hillbilly dance was met with appreciation and applause as was Jimmie Goodell's blackface monologue. Walden also sang "In Der Fuehrer's Face" and added to the stage previous to a concluding tap dance.

The entire program will be changed for tonight's show when all of the conventional Kinsmen carnival program will be again presented with proceeds going to their Milk for Britain and Fag fund.

Cartoonist Will Feature Show

Jack Booth, well known Toronto cartoonist and caricaturist whose sketches are seen daily in Toronto newspapers, will be featured in a complete change of program tonight for the Kinsmen "Monte Carlo" carnival at the Armouries on the city's night. Also on the stage will be seen the Grant Family of Belleville in their song and dancing act that has brought them high acclaim as entertainers. Then Miss Ethel Smith, another local radio and stage entertainer, will be featured in a soprano solo to round out a perfect night's entertainment.

Booth, a cartoonist of repute, Mr. Booth's monologues during his appearance here tonight will be internationally known entertainer. He sketches with pencil and crayon and creates and explains the humor and crevices of the human head, particularly as applied to the noted paperhanger, one Adolf Shickelgruber.

For the further benefit of the Saturday night patrons at the Kinsmen carnival Mr. Booth will select at random several guests and draw their caricatures following which the model will be given the sketching gratis. Then, there will be the dancing Kinsmen games of skill and the draw for a crisp new one hundred dollar bill, concluding the four-night indoor mardi gras.

Hear T. Bata.

Thomas J. Bata of the Bata Shoe Co., Batawa, gave an interesting account of the history of his native land, Czecho-Slovakia, at Picton Rotary Club this week. Original plans called for the showing of 1,000 feet of film but 1914 when the people had the opportunity to over throw a regime oppression to them, from 1918 the Allies recognized the Czecho-Slovakian claim for separate existence as a nation. Mr. Bata said: In the period of reconstruction following the last war, great estate was broken up into small farms. Taxes were brought up into small land holdings. Hospital, old age and accident insurance were introduced. Hospitals and sanatoria were built and there was a period of activity in the building trades.

Compulsory military training had been carried out previous to this war, but unfortunately, said Mr. Bata, men and supplies for 35 divisions had been lost in the Allies.

Aided by the government the Bata Co. has opened branches in several parts of the world. That Frankford now has 70 per cent mechanical production and only 15 percent on footwear. This makes necessary the opening of other branches to manufacture shoes, such as that in Picton, Mr. Bata said.

"Nothing Beyond Attainment" With National Unity

Toronto, March 30 —(CP)— A plea to French Canadians and Canadians of Anglo-Saxon extraction to "dedicate a portion of our energy to fradication" of what they may delay Canada's oneness of soul," was made today by Gaspard Dumoulin, Liberal member of the Quebec legislature for Quebec Montmorency.

"What with the sorrie my people may have, what with your great qualities, your practical soundness, virile outlook, generosity of mind and that inimitable English trait you possibly don't even suspect, a compelling inclination to lend assistance, to extend kindness and the most winning amibility, nothing seems beyond attainment if we make proper use of these precious materials," he said in an address to the Empire Club of Toronto.

He described two former premiers of Ontario—the Rt. Hon. G. Howard Ferguson and Mitchell F. Hepburn—as nation-building builders "in their endeavors for the just recognition of minority rights."

Western Canada Farmers Anxious For Spring Rain

(By The Canadian Press)

Fall and winter moisture stored in the western grain belt was below normal in all provinces except the southern portion of Saskatchewan, Prairie province farmers are anxiously awaiting spring rains which they hope will make up in whole or in part the moisture deficiency.

Manitoba's average decrease from normal is 25 per cent, Saskatchewan's 31 per cent, Alberta's 21 per cent and Saskatchewan's 13 per cent.

Official figures issued by the meteorological division of the federal department of transport covering the period between Aug. 15, 1943, to Feb. 20, 1943, revealed the largest average decrease below the normal of 25 per cent to 31 per cent occurred in Manitoba and in southern Saskatchewan. Alberta showed a slightly smaller deficiency in southern districts, although in northern Alberta precipitation was less than 10 per cent below normal. Only the southern and the northern portion of Saskatchewan's precipitation was above the normal, excess of less than five per cent.

The heaviest precipitation was recorded in all three provinces during the March. It was stated unofficially that precipitation was negligible early in March but towards the end of the month reports showed a slight improvement.

An example of the sub-normal moisture conditions was found in the stream run of the Assiniboine River, which flows through Saskatchewan and Manitoba. This was only 75 per cent normal.

Monthly Review

Of the six months under official review, August was about the best from a precipitation point of view, as northern Alberta scenes during the month averaged nearly 50 per cent. Smaller gains of 22 per cent to 30 per cent occurred in southeastern Saskatchewan and throughout the agricultural area of Manitoba. August rainfall was practically normal in northern Saskatchewan and 10 per cent above normal in central Alberta. However in southern Alberta only about half the normal fall was recorded and in southern Saskatchewan there was a 30 per cent deficiency.

September rainfall generally was light over the entire prairie grain region with losses as high as 50 per cent in some sections. In October precipitation was variable with more than twice the normal fall being recorded in northern Saskatchewan and 75 per cent above the normal hitting southwestern sections of the province.... Below normal figures, however, were still reported for southern and central Alberta.

Practically normal rainfall was reported from northern Saskatchewan in November but deficiencies were noted elsewhere. In December, January and February deficiencies ranged from 10 per cent to 85 per cent below normal.

King of Pathfinders Given Bar to D.S.O.

By ALAN RANDALL
Canadian Press Staff Writer

London, March 30 — (CP Cable) —There is a new name now in Johnny Faquier of Ottawa and Toronto, one of "Canada's bomber aces. It is "King of the Pathfinders."

This is something special here in the home of the R.A.F. which developed the pathfinder technique for lighting up the targets for night bombers, and was the title used by the Press Association in announcing the award of a Bar to Faquier's D.S.O.

Now Acting Group Captain, Faquier frequently has been to distant targets himself—defended enemy targets including several trips to Berlin.

The Canadian squadron, formerly of anti-U-boat duty, now locates targets for the bombers that follow on raids.

Faquier acts as "master of ceremonies" on distant targets. He flies high above the target watching over the flare-dropping pathfinders.

The citation for the new award called him "a forceful gallant leader of whose outstanding ability and unswerving devotion to duty has been reflected in the operational work of his squadron."

No Confirmation of Raid On Italian Capital

New York, March 30 (AP)—The German-controlled Rome radio said that "enemy air formations" had attacked Rome's outskirts this morning. The broadcast was recorded by the U.S. foreign broadcast intelligence service.

Allied headquarters in Naples announced tonight it had hit the Rome area yesterday, presumably in another attack on the capital's rail yards and outlying airfields, but there was no Allied confirmation of a raid on the capital today.

TITLE CONFERRED

New York, March 30—(AP)—A Russian home broadcast reported today by U. S. government monitors said the title "hero of socialist labor" has been conferred on President M. I. Kalinin of the Soviet Union by the presidium of the supreme council. The award was made to Kalinin on the 20th anniversary of his election to the host of chairman of the all-Russian Central Executive Committee of the Soviets.

Uses His Knowledge Of Animal Habitats

Buffalo, N.Y., March 30 (AP)—Sportsman's parents, with the air of R. Martin Perkins, Buffalo Zoo curator, are finding the animals' pieces to the jig-saw puzzles millionaire sportsman makes of their sons' letters.

Perkins put his knowledge of the habitants of animals and birds to deduce the whereabouts of men overseas for their mail.

Here's how Perkins describes one of his deductions from letters' mystery:

"A man called me on the telephone recently, and said, 'my son is somewhere overseas. He says where he is because the censor chops holes whenever my son mentions the name. However, he has carved the outlines of an animal on a piece of wood and sent it to me. Now, if you could tell me where this animal is usually found, perhaps I'll have a good idea where my boy is'.

"He described the animal to me and I knew it was a hyrax, an animal mostly found in North Africa."

Faith in Canada Urged Upon Youth

Montreal, March 30—(CP)— Pfc. L. J. James Duff, youngest member of parliament for Vancouver North, told a combined meeting of youth organizations last night that Canada's faith in our country should be the backbone of our citizenship. "We should give us the same strength that so many young heroes of this war have demonstrated at Dunkirk and Dieppe.

He urged the youth of Canada to advocate the continuation of international co-operation "as we have because it now is "a vital force in the preservation of freedom," and said, "may it also become a definite force of peace and may youth play a very important part as guardian of this peace."

THE MILDEST CIGARETTE YOU CAN SMOKE

because they're BLENDED from COOL-BURNING TOBACCOS

ANY tobacco expert will tell you that Burley tobacco is a cool-burning, cool-smoking tobacco. Nature made it that way. In Buckingham, a proportion of Burley is scientifically blended with Virginia and Turkish tobaccos in such a way that the entire blend of tobaccos is cool-burning, cool-smoking.

That is why a blended Buckingham is cool-burning, cool-smoking, and more pleasant to the taste. That is why a Buckingham is definitely milder.

Smoke a Buckingham and enjoy a mild cigarette—a cigarette that is "Throat Easy". You will find it the most satisfying cigarette you ever smoked.

Russians Take Balkan Gateway

Another major blow has fallen heavily upon the Germans with the carrying by storm of Csernowitz, the "gateway of the Balkans," by the Russians. Hitler reported the Germans evacuated this important centre, the capital of Bucovina, but Premier Stalin announced that the city had been stormed, and thereby gave denial to the German assertion.

Germany can ill afford to lose from their supply bases in pre-war Poland and in central and eastern Ukraine the Germans are in a sad plight because they have been split off from the southern German armies.

Csernowitz is in Stalin's words, "an important economic and political centre of northern Bucovina and a powerful strong point of German defences on the river Prut, covering the approaches to the frontiers of Hungary and Rumania."

Nazi Church Plans Fail

The Nazis in Norway are renewing their effort to smash the Church Front and to create a Nazified "church" to aid in spreading Nazi doctrines. A few weeks ago the one remaining independent theological school in Norway, the Congregational Faculty of Oslo, was ordered closed by the Nazi department of church and educational affairs. The same department intensified its high-pressure campaign to enlist students for a new "lighting course" in theology designed to produce pro-Nazi clergymen in record time. But in spite of glittering assurances that all expenses—tuition, board and room—would be paid by the state and that "graduates" would have equal standing with the regularly trained clergy, there has been no sign of interest on the part of the youth of Norway.

The Nazi department is intensifying its efforts to install Norway's clergy to rejoin the Nazified state church. It will be remembered that all except a handful of Norway's clergy resigned from the state church on Easter two years ago.

The Congregational Faculty, socialled because it has been maintained by contributions from individual congregations, was shut down on March 10th because clergymen invited there have refused to apply for positions as pastors of the controlled state church.

The Quisling church department stands no chance of attracting students to its "elite" courses although the Nazis have virtually eliminated academic standards.

The Norwegian Church has stood solid together against the German aggression and the treachery of the Quislingites.

Planks From Cathedral

Nine chestnut planks from the Basilica of St. Thomas the Apostle, protector of the Abruzzi, in Ortona, the ancient Italian port, will be used in the nine provinces of Canada in the Canadian Red Cross Sixth Victory Loan Campaign, says an article written by Douglas Amaron and sent from the front with the Canadian Corps in Italy.

It was this famous old Cathedral and shrine of Roman Catholicism which the Germans blew up last December 21st., the feast day of St. Thomas, the day on which pilgrims pilgrimage to the Apostle's crypt so that their subsequent journey to Rome might be safe, says The Canadian Press writer.

This temple was built on the stones of an old Roman heathen temple to the god Janus, after which the month January was named.

Mr. Amaron explains that when the Canadian Army public relations unit was asked for the wood, the request stipulated only that it be obtained from the battle front on which the Canadians had fought, from a building damaged by enemy action. So the planking has come from a bench in the crypt of the Basilica.

These pieces of wood from one of the oldest churches will have especial appeal to Canadians for Canadian soldiers at Ortona fought one of their greatest battles in this war.

The Germans in the devastation with which they endeavor to sweep away everything of value have committed many acts which cause such a revulsion of sentiment against the Huns that their deeds of evil will react upon their own heads. To the first Great War the Germans trained their artillery upon the shrines of the Allies as witness the cathedrals in France.

In the present conflict the same principle animates the vandal forces of Germany.

Nemesis and the Japanese

(The London Times)

It can be only a reasonable hope that the publication of their shame to the world will avail, where all else has failed, to recall the Japanese Government to a sense of decent behaviour to the helpless men whom the fortune of war has placed at their mercy. Certainly the only final remedy lies in eradicating for ever a regime that is capable of these infamies. The Japanese cruelties have now for long revealed lend a new meaning to the word "liberation" as it is applied to the reconquest of the Far Eastern lands. Owing to the strategic plan which, with full calculation of all the factors, the Allied leaders have adopted, the war in the Pacific can seldom be in the forefront of the news as yet; but the urgent task of freeing the regions in which such sufferings can be inflicted upon our kindred and our friends is ever present to the public mind. The fight there goes on with steady determination. Its successes, seldom spectacular, are month by month securing and consolidating the ground from which the decisive advance will one day be launched. It adds to the nation's resolution to overthrow Nazism at the earliest possible date that this is the direct and only way to the destruction of the dominion that has been responsible for the abominations in the East.

Crime Clinics Coming

Crime clinics are to be established all over Great Britain by local authorities for the revolutionary treatment of crime and criminals. This epoch-making reform is foreshadowed in a report of experts presented to the Home Secretary in London. Twelve years ago, Dr. E. T. Jensen, a noted psychologist, with the backing of the Home Office and the Medical Research Council, established the Psychopathic Clinic in Halloway Jail. The result was the Institute for the Scientific Treatment of Delinquency established in 1932. Fred, Jung and Adler psychologists are consulted but many eminent doctors and lawyers are associated with it. Its records give abundant evidence that criminal tendencies of many types can be cured.

Bible in Schools

(Vancouver Sun)

It may be true, as charged, that home and church have failed, or partly failed, to fulfill their duties for teaching the Bible to children; but does that altogether excuse the schools?

Isn't it the highest form of good citizenship to know and appreciate the fundamentals of religious living?

To cloister off applied religion inside home and church exclusively is a denial of the universality of all Christian doctrine and practice.

THE UNKNOWN SOLDIER

Old Crankmire heard a woman say:
"We have no son to march away.
Our windows mere blank spaces are,
Without a single service star.
Secure from war's consuming fear,
The Lord has left us childless here;
Safe from the dread all parents know,
Unworried we may come and go.
There is no battle, I am sure,
In which a boy of ours might be!"

Said Crankmire gently: "Someone's son
Sleeps with the dead at Arlington.
One lad of many brave to fall.
The unknown soldier of us all!
There's none to say with eyes ashine,
'This boy who died for truth was mine!'
Son of his country, now he sleeps
Where love a constant vigil keeps.
For him a nation's prayers are said:
The unknown soldier of the dead!

"Well, somewhere, though to you unknown,
In many a dreadful battle zone
Is living soldiery, staunch and true,
Fights against evil might for you.
In jungle, foxhole, sky and sea,
Now several million strong is he.
You share his fight, you've to do it!
And we shall mourn him should he die.
That boy is your son; yes, and mine!
The unknown soldier of the line."

Men From the Ranks of Death

From the New York Herald Tribune

The marine sergeant furloughed upstairs after two years in the South Pacific, his debut, Guadalcanal; the Flying Fortress gunner at the Army Air Forces redistribution station in Atlantic City; the field service captain, two years out in Africa and, like the others, wounded, decorated and furloughed after two years of it—what he does, once aged from twenty-one to forty-eight conditioned by facing death as part of it to the Stint dentist appointment, think of our civilian life and ways? That depends somewhat on the temperament of the sergeant, the gunner, the ambulance man, no doubt. But reports begin to come in from intermediaries between the veteran who has been there again and again and the civilian population for whom he has stood ill; reports of Red Cross workers at home for instance, that compose a picture of the veteran's view of the civilian, not altogether flattering to the latter.

There is no help for this, it may be, Unitialized in the freemasonry to the ranks of death.

of combat, complacently ineligible; unchastened by the terrible experience that is necessarily as much strangers and outsiders to the combat veteran. There are two worlds during a war. They cannot communicate. They do not speak the same language, think the same thoughts, feel the same emotions. Understanding the one soldier often views the civilian with impatience and contempt, even. How can this life the soldier left go on unchanged, except that his friends is heightened, its cynicism deepened, its pace accelerate, while the soldier's life has undergone rages throughout the world?

The eternal pursuit of happiness, the struggle to maintain merely a decent standard of living—these also seem cheap and childish to him, as, indeed, in the circumstances they may be. His own ambitions are spoken for the greater part, but audible to anyone sympathetic to imagination. Set up yonder it in the form of a white cross, for the grace of God, go I, back to sea, back to the lines, back to the mission, back to the ranks of death.

SCOTT'S SCRAP BOOK

Orlen, instead of going to a store for rice, the settlers bought it from Indians paddling from cabin to cabin. The aborigines collected the wild rice in September, with the heads of grain are several feet above the surface of quiet water. They placed their canoes under the side of the canoe by the paddle, while the grain, stripped off, fell with a stick. The rice was dried on bear or moose skins where it was fried, then reduced to glowing coals. Then the husk was winnowed in birch bark trays, tossed in the wind. The parched rice was heated in pots, ready for use until it burnt. It was then ready for use.

The Indians.....and the "yeleface" pioneers, too.....lived until this rice along on hunting trips. A handful of the kernels kept body and soul together. Then there was a time to stop for a regular meal. The Indians carried their supply sewed up in mats.

1894 is the earliest year in which it is known that cultivated rice was grown in Canada. Since that while man. Canada rice, the wild rice of the Indians, has been a curse from the true rice, and of a different genus. The flowers has not the husk. The seeds shatter and an inch long and give a very good meal.

THAT BODY OF YOURS

JAMES W. BARTON, M.D.

The Anxiety State

A patient consults his physician because he has suffered tiredness, unable to sleep, no appetite, unable to concentrate. He feels that there must be something wrong but in spite of these feelings, nevertheless they do not take time to follow the case through to a final examination. Physicals no cause for the symptoms described by the patient. Nevertheless, he cannot be anything serious present the physician is apt to have the patient believe, had the physician more time to investigate. Is what is called the anxiety neurosis. There is something on the patient's mind and until that something is brought out into the light of day so that it can be dealt with, it is no amount of drugs will bring relief.

What is an anxiety state? In the University of Minnesota Medical Journal, a student publication, Stanley Wilkinson points out that the anxiety state is really an outward sign of an inward conflict. Behind every conflict that, in its own way, is as real as the physical symptoms of the every day life. The conflict consists of a battle between the primitive instincts of the body on the one hand and the dictates and demands of civilization on the other. The conflict or tussle is always one of the individual versus that of us—but that normal state of mind was disturbed and the individual unconsciously following a policy of appeasement and compromise in an effort to satisfy the warring elements within us. In the individual affected by this anxiety state, there has been no compromise, appeasement or adjustment and in the battle between his unsocial and social instincts neurosis results. The result is the smooth or natural workings of the body and the mechanism of adjustment becomes, indigestion, loss of appetite, backache, loss of sleep, headache, sure, frequent desire to urinate, headache, diarrhoea or vomiting.

The treatment consists in (a) letting the patient tell his "whole" story even if long, (b) making a thorough physical examination to find no organic disease is present, and (c) explaining to the patient how his unsettled conflict is causing the symptoms.

Peter Lorre

Peter Lorre, soft-spoken arch villain of the screen, is prevented from entering the United States and in Nazi social circles, because he once refereed Adolf Hitler's amateur imitation to make films in Germany, says a Berlin dispatch to the New York Herald Tribune.

The Hungarian-born actor made some pictures in Germany before Hitler came to power, and his work there is known in many parts of the world famed "M." Apparently Hitler saw that picture and thought he was playing Mr. Lorre's acting as a murderer. At any rate, he had his head-quarters invited Mr. Lorre to invite Mr. Lorre then in England, to come back to Germany. Such was Mr. Lorre's reply:

"Thank you, but I think Germany has room for only one mass murderer of my ability and yours."

DIFFICULT TO OBTAIN STAFFS

Ottawa, March 31 — (CP)—Revenue Minister Gibson said yesterday in the Commons it was very difficult to obtain accountants and staff for any new income tax branch offices or even for existing branch offices.

Subject to that he said he would consider a suggestion from Gordon Fraser (PC—Peterborough west) that a branch office be opened in Peterboro.

Whitehall Notebook

London, March 30. — (CP)— The argument that the post-conference system in Washington closely parallels the place of the quadrangle in the House of Commons and the quizzing opposition leaders give the Australian-New Zealand-British King government at each daily official meeting of the House is being raised in Congress here by Representative Clarence Cannon.

The Missouri Democrat was opposing a move to have administrative officials of the United States government make themselves available periodically for questioning by committees of Congress.

President Roosevelt's bi-weekly press conferences and those held by his Cabinet colleagues, serve to meet all the requirements which might be obtained through adoption of the Cannon proposal, he told a parliamentary question periods, he said. "The average American reporter has no peer as a questioner and can be depended upon to extract information where others would fail. Our parliamentary potentate would fall ingloriously," Cannon declared.

But he was not absolutely correct. Without questioning the ability of Washington correspondents to get all the facts from the president, it is certain they do not do it, and for a good reason.

Those correspondents, no matter how able and discerning, and no matter how many press conferences may be of Mr. Roosevelt, have too much respect for the office of President and too much decency to press him or insist when he does not answer. Such is the British question. All they try to take up as little as possible of his time and to ask questions for each conference unless he holds them over from the day before the quizzing at White House conference is not at all like that which takes place in the House of Commons.

LOOKING AHEAD: American Intelligence officers are reported to have obtained the complete plans of German war lords prepared for officers of the armed forces instructing them how to lay plans for the next attempt at Germany's world domination. Hitler's teachings, marked by Satanic realism, accept the hopelessness of conquering Europe now but order the murder or starvation of people in occupied countries, particularly the youth, so that those of fighting age in a generation will be weak and ineffective. A startling release on this story may be forthcoming soon.

NEW PLANE DEVELOPED

The Missouri Democrat was opposing a move to have administrative officials of the United States government make themselves available periodically for questioning by committees of Congress.

President Roosevelt's bi-weekly press conferences and those held by his Cabinet colleagues, serve to meet all the information which might be obtained through adoption of the Cannon proposal, he told a parliamentary question periods, he said. "The average American reporter has no peer as a questioner and can be depended upon to extract information where others would fail. Our parliamentary potentate would fall ingloriously," Cannon declared.

But he was not absolutely correct. Without questioning the ability of Washington correspondents to get all the facts from the president, it is certain they do not do it, and for a good reason.

Those correspondents, no matter how able and discerning, and no matter how many press conferences may be of Mr. Roosevelt, have too much respect for the office of President and too much decency to press him or insist when he does not answer. Such is the British question. All they try to take up as little as possible of his time and to ask questions for each conference unless he holds them over from the day before the quizzing at White House conference is not at all like that which takes place in the House of Commons.

LOOKING AHEAD: American Intelligence officers are reported to have obtained the complete plans of German war lords prepared for officers of the armed forces instructing them how to lay plans for the next attempt at Germany's world domination. Hitler's teachings, marked by Satanic realism, accept the hopelessness of conquering Europe now but order the murder or starvation of people in occupied countries, particularly the youth, so that those of fighting age in a generation will be weak and ineffective. A startling release on this story may be forthcoming soon.

Hawaii in Danger Of Jap Invasion Say U.S. Officers

Pearl Harbor, March 31 — (AP)— Admiral Chester W. Nimitz and Admiral Robert C. Richardson jointly declared in affidavits filed in Federal District Court here that the territory of Hawaii "now is in imminent danger of invasion" by Japanese armed forces and has been in such danger since the attack on Pearl Harbor Dec. 7, 1941.

The affidavits were filed with their answer to a habeas corpus petition challenging the necessity and validity of continuing martial law in Hawaii.

Nimitz is commander-in-chief of the Pacific Ocean Areas and Richardson commands United States army forces in the Central Pacific and is military governor of Hawaii.

VINE AND FIG TREE

Several of the prophets employed the vine and fig tree as a symbol of peace.

Zechariah 3:10 says: "And I will remove the iniquity of that land in one day in that day, saith the Lord of hosts, shall ye call every man his neighbour under the vine and under the fig tree."

And Micah 4:4 says: "But they shall sit every man under his vine and under his fig tree; and none shall make them afraid: for the mouth of the Lord of hosts hath spoken it."

Lord, and Isaiah:ux use virtually the same figure in reverse.

"The vine is dried up," says Joel 1:12, "and the fig tree languisheth; the pomegranate tree, the palm tree also, and the apple tree, even all the trees of the field, are withered: because joy is withered away from the sons of men."

Habakkuk 3:17 says: "Although the fig tree shall not blossom, neither shall fruit be in the vines; the labour of the olive shall fail, and the fields shall yield no meat; the flock shall be cut off from the fold, and there shall be no herd in the stalls."

Casualties' Belongings Sent to Kin With Tact

Kansas City—Every week or so, a switch engine shoves a couple of boxcars up to a big white 11-story building, once a national mail order house but now the Kansas City Quartermaster Depot, with two floors devoted to the army's personal effects bureau. The boxcars bring here, for distribution to relatives, the personal effects of United States soldiers who have died or been killed, captured or listed as missing—the trinkets they treasured, their letters, their money.

Six Months to Year

Lt.-Col. John R. Murphy who is under Col. C. J. Blake, the depot's commanding officer, has been in charge of the bureau through the two years of existence, says it takes six months to a year—and three carloads of the files—to complete the final records on many soldiers' deaths. Money usually arrives first; next may be the billfolds, pictures and letters they had with them when they died; finally comes the articles left in their quarters when they went out to their last battle.

The bureau has had to feel out its way along, it is without precedent, so far as Col. Murphy knows. During the last year, however, some effects were cleared through Robertson, Mo., Army Air Field and some of the difficulties encountered almost were as great as the problem of settling a soldier's estate. This time it, was decided to have one district bring points together and clear.

Most cases cause little trouble. Every property is returned to next of kin is found, and the effects are sent on by mail, express or freight. The average person who went overseas, for instance, left about four pounds, the post office department carries it.

All this would be as cold and as impersonal as a catalog, Col. Murphy didn't believe that this bureau should utilize something approaching "mass production" methods. As he wrote to a congressman who inquired about the bureau: "I am ever conscious that we here at the bureau are handling the effects of mothers and fathers who have made, through the loss of their husband, the supreme sacrifice."

Complaints and Thanks

Letters to the bureau display a cross-section of life.

Some of a son's belongings have arrived yet, so a father demands: "I want to know what has been done about the property stolen from my son's footlocker. The government should state half his cheque, now all his effects. Nothing could be lower than this."

A mother, who has received her son's effects, writes, "I know, dear sir, that you have to follow routine work your job to you, but it's very special and wonderful to us. God bless you all."

And then there are the problems which make filling out an income tax blank seem easy. A fairly common one: a soldier marries, doesn't tell his mother. To whom shall the effects be sent?

A father writes that he is sure his son had much more money than was returned, and will the army please hurry the rest along immediately. An investigation discloses that the soldier neglected neither wife, women nor creditors. Each one is given his due in full, and the father is absent without leave, that the surprising thing is that he had any left at all. Should the mail news be broken to the father?

Test on Executive

A girl who wrote to inquire what had been done with her brother's belongings. She knew exactly where everything should go, she said, for she had packed them. She was not sending them. Queer, thought the bureau. Then it found the reason: his number was up? The answer was simple, but shocking. The girl had been absent without leave, that the surprising thing is that he had any left at all. Should the mail news be broken to the father?

Florida's 'Lean Time'

(By Howard Vincent O'Brien in the Chicago Daily News)

From a young relative who, not long ago, was catching salt-fish in the Gulf (Pensacola) I received a series tournaments at the Everglades, and whose parents are visiting Mrs. P. somewhere in the vicinity of Anna, comes a letter which fires sympathetic words: "Life must be pretty dull in Florida these days. I imagine you're having a rather lean time of it."

Well, I wouldn't say that "lean" was exactly the word for life in Florida. As a matter of fact, Florida was never fatter. In West Palm Beach, yesterday, I saw a line, two abreast, extending for a full block, people waiting for places in a cafeteria.

Six hundred guests jammed the once-exclusive Everglades Club for a fashion show and a buffet lunch of lobster, oysters and other delicate victuals. At the Beach Club—Mr. Hedley Donovan's remote domain—customers stood three deep, waiting for seats at the roulette tables. I saw one woman lose $3,000 from France—drop $3,000 in a few minutes.

Furs and pearls are as common as cosmetics, and the prices of both are soaring. The proprietor of an establishment dealing in silver tells me that his one line is a gentle stuff to sell.

No, life isn't so very lean, hereabouts.

A haberdashery on Worth Avenue displays a hand-painted necktie—price $150. Rents are fantastic.

One citizen I know gets $50 a week for the rental of his garage, exclusive of kitchen. A smallish house, remote from the ocean, fetches $4,500 for the season. And for kitchenette apartments near the sea, people are glad to pay $1,000 a month.

Among the regulars—those who own their homes—life is far from being all surf and champagne. Many of the women are in Red Cross uniform—nearly all are busy with some form of war work. I myself am employed at night at an airfield, serving coffee to artillery officers. Yesterday I drove another who spends her days driving a truck.

An interesting place is the ticket office of the Florida East Coast Railroad. It is jammed all day with people trying to get reservations home—for anything, as one put it, "from a stateroom to a boxcar."

Next to me, yesterday, pushed a heavy-jowled, cigar-smoking citizen—the aggressive type which always gets what it wants. He was trying to get four lowers for the first of April.

A young clerk—a patient and courteous woman—said nothing was available. She added that to keep in daily touch with the office—and in person, because the telephone lines were jammed.

At this the cigar in his mouth took on a belligerent angle. He scribbled something on a piece of paper and slipped it toward her.

She glanced at it and her lips formed a straight line. "That kind of thing," I do not do business," she said. "I don't like it." Whereupon the bull-necked gent slunk off like a whipped spaniel.

I asked what was in the note. She showed it to me. It said: "There's a half dozen pairs of nylon stockings in it for you if you fix me up."

The point is that this smart guy is going to be a long, long time getting out of Florida. And he can spend his extra time meditating on the extraordinary fact that there are still honest, self-respecting people in the world.

NAVAL ASSAULT

There was strong suggestion that the arrows of MacArthur and Nimitz acted in co-ordination to shatter possible enemy plans to interpose along the route to Palau.

Japanese strongholds in the Carolines were hit for the first time on Tuesday and Wednesday by Allied bombers operating from bases recently won from the enemy in the Bismarck sea.

A special communique from Southwest Pacific headquarters said heavy bombs blasted Truk Wednesday leaving 49 Japanese planes wrecked on the ground and smoke rising from shop and hangar areas on the island. On the still, several intercepting planes were shot down.

United States Navy planes the same day hit the Japack of Japanese fighters attempted interception, harassing the bombers on their homeward flight. The communique said five to 20 of the interceptors were destroyed, while the bombers lost but one plane, with others damaged.

In the blow at Hollandia, west of New Guinea, bombers smashed 16 enemy planes on the ground, the communique said.

The attackers dropped 15,600 fragmentation bombs on the heavy dispersal area of the Japanese plane, and the last wave over the base Wednesday fought off 40 enemy interceptors, shooting down at least 10. Allied losses were described as "negligible."

Mr. William Woodcock returned to his home in Cobourg on Wednesday much improved in health, after his recent operation in Belleville General Hospital.

Mrs. J. M. Tufts, 103 Cedar St., is progressing favorably after being a patient in the Belleville General Hospital for the past week.

Care of Rayon Fabrics Demonstrated

The correct and incorrect care of rayon fabrics has been shown and discussed this week, beginning Monday and ending Saturday at the Belleville C.D.S. at a special demonstration given by Miss June Reid, Lux Washability Expert. These demonstrations, sponsored by the Lever Brothers of Canada, Ltd., are for the sole purpose of instructing women on how to handle rayon fabrics in laundering, drying, ironing and pressing them. When a rayon garment or fabric may be washed, satisfactorily by following the Lever Brothers, Ltd., is trying to prove to the women that when washed in rich, creamy Lux flakes, rayon can be a beautiful fabric. It will give lasting wear and look like new longer.

Miss Reid, who is on tour across Canada, in a most charming and informative manner, based most of her demonstrations on the care of lingerie and woollen sweaters and received a great many enthusiastic applauses from the ladies present who are showing their wholehearted concern regarding the importance of conserving rayon fabrics. Place of China In History And Post-War Era

Tabernacle Young Women's Guild Holds Important Meeting

The March meeting of Tabernacle Young Women's Guild was held on the evening of the twenty-seventh at Miss Rachael Fox's home; Mrs. Donald St. A long business meeting was necessary as many important items for the month were included. Included in reports was one from the Belleville Red Cross Citizens' War Services Committee's meeting.

The committee was formed which will be in charge of the fund to be spent for the social needs which might be met in Belleville by this group.

Miss Marjorie Lashbrook presented the Easter offering, from the Sunday school and later from "The Unknown Disciple." A short prayer service filled with love and understanding, fellowship and service for others, closed a lovely worship period.

The subject of the evening was China, led by Miss Frances Bell, who pointed out its close neighborliness due to the new northern air routes. One would do well to study a culture which was in existence when European tribes were painted savages, she said.

Miss Bell gave a resume of the geography and history of China as a background study. She pointed out that one-fifth of the world's population is Chinese as well as one-fourth of the world's 560,000,000 souls. It was this great country which first gave to the world porcelain, paper, ink, lacquer, gun powder and other important articles. I use it?

Confucius, born 550 B.C., gave the Chinese a religion based on practical morality with respect for parents and a responsibility to the state.

The dynasties were enumerated, beginning with the Chow dynasty, 1150 B.C.-200 B.C., when the nation was changed from nomadic to more settled living. The fifth dynasty followed, lasting only 30 years, but in that time the famous Great Wall was built which extends as far as from Montreal to Winnipeg. Printing came during this period and also the fashion of binding the feet of young girls.

The invasion by the Mongols, which covers the period through Marco Polo's travels and the names of Genghis and Kubla Khan took place about 1300 A.D.

In 1643, the Manchurians were invited to come to help repel the Tartars but they took possession instead.

The Chinese Republic was formed in 1911, under the leadership of Sun Yat Sen. During the World War, they were an Allied nation and participated by sending workers to France but no soldiers; and yet at the peace table, Shantung peninsula was given to the Japanese.

Chinese Post-War Plans

Miss Rachael Fox presented a paper describing the Chinese post-war plans which are mainly explanation of those outlined by Sun Yat Sen. For a place in the sun, or on China's relation to Canada, she pointed out that they are urging a duration of Canada's immigration policy, a yearly quota of 100 would satisfy them; of all the Chinese in Canada came during a period of railroad building.

There is strong feeling in China about Hong Kong and Shantung and even towards American and British forces as the money values of the army pay are so different. Under the leadership of General Chiang Kai-Shek, the great land of China is being led to look forward greater international understanding and co-operation.

Plans were discussed to close an interesting evening's study.

Advice to the Lovelorn

Don't Spend Your Easily-Earned Dollars At Gadsby

We're had the Stone Age, the Bronze Age, the Iron Age, and this seems to be the Age of War and bigger and better squandering. What are we doing with these dollars left over after we've paid our taxes and bought bonds?

I can hear the contemptuous snort that goes up after this inquiry. "What do you mean, isn't over?"

Nevertheless there is something left over; I, don't know what it is something unnecessary.

You don't have to be a Mathuselah to remember that a month's wage all along the line (sales persons in department stores, and collar folk generally speaking, and some who require no collars at all) was no more than a week's wage is today.

You must know, if you use your head at all, that these wages cannot continue. Hitting it a little, even though it means no more than fifteen or twenty cents a day, may keep you out of the bread-line in future. Here's a letter full of good, sound sense:

"Dear Miss Fairfax:

I've been married 30 years to the kindest hearted spend-thrift in the world. He always had good jobs but we never had enough money to last any one of our four children to college. Two of the boys in the service are getting the equivalent of a college education in the instruction the government offers. The girls are married.

"My husband and I have never had a home of our own, there's a pretty substantial mortgage on our home. When his salary was cut on account of the war, our war conditions, I asked for more money for household expenses, as of course he realizes food is more expensive.

"Now here's mother's little secret. Every quarter I receive in change at the store, I save. When I have $5 worth of quarters I put them in a savings bank. In this bank I have already a little more than $100. There's a note among my effects telling of this secret hoard, if I die, so a family we've all turned in and done our duty buying bonds. Now, Miss Fairfax, the time I tell in confidence to you is that I'm in love with Ted, nothing has ever happened so happy as this little savings secret.

Cards for a Graduate

Dear Mrs. Beeckman,

I am going to graduate from High School in June, and as one of my graduation presents, my mother is giving me some personal cards. My first use for these cards will be in enclosing with my graduation invitations. Will you please answer three questions about them?

1. My name is Margaret, but I'm always called "Peggy", and this is the name I prefer. Could I use "Peggy" on my cards?

2. Also I don't like my middle name, and I'm going to drop it. I use it?

3. Should I use "Miss" before my name?

Peggy

1. It isn't permissible to use a nickname on your cards. These cards are formal items, and to use a nickname is incorrect. Informality. You must use "Margaret."

2. But not certainly may drop your middle name if you don't like it, and if your parents don't object ... and I hope they don't.

3. Yes, use the "Miss."

Writing to a Rabbi

Dear Mrs. Beeckman:

When writing to a rabbi, just how should the envelope be addressed?

R.T.

Address the envelope to Rabbi Stephen Simon, or if he holds a doctor's degree, Dr. Stephen Simon.

Acknowledge Birthday Greetings

Dear Mrs. Beeckman: .....

To settle an argument, will you please answer the question: Should a birthday greeting card be acknowledged?

Flo.

Yes. It is a courteous gesture ... and a courteous gesture should always be thanked for. It is a gift-thought, and it is only important to thank for a thought-gift as it is for a material gift.

Tip On Leaving

When you start to leave a party or a call . . . GO, and go at once. You "linger" at the going-away party be the end-of-the-chapter. Don't when you reach the door, keep toeing off one remark after another, making your departure become an endurance test for the hostess and her patience.

Women Urged To Make Over Old Clothes

Girls Model Remade Clothing at Demonstration at Q. A. S.

A Remade Demonstration, with the purpose of inspiring women to make new articles of clothing from old ones, was given in the auditorium of Queen Alexandra School on Thursday afternoon. The War Time Prices and Trade Board Consumers' Branch is sponsoring these demonstrations, this particular one being brought to Belleville by the combined Home and School Association in the interests of the mothers of the city. Mrs. T. L. Harker, who is acting as demonstrator, and who is the representative of the Eastern Ontario Branch with headquarters at Ottawa, stressed the importance to the women of conserving on materials today.

"The War Time Prices and Trade Board Consumers' Branch," said Mrs. Harker, "is trying to control inflation in regards to material which there would be too much money in circulation and not sufficient material to meet the demands." A great deal of our woollen material is going to the armed forces, as it requires 60,000 miles of material to cover the men in the services. Where it takes nine pounds of wool to meet a man's needs in civilian life, it requires 108 pounds in army life. "Not only does this apply to wool, but also to our cotton materials," continued Mrs. Harker. Twenty percent of our cotton coming into Canada goes into war equipment—it requires 26,000 feet of cotton to provide for the covering of one boat. Silk, too, is being used in the war effort. Because of this great shortage of material, we are urged to save material by remaking new items of clothing from old ones.

Mrs. Harker at the present time 14-000 voluntary workers in the Consumer Branch of Canada working in these interests, and the women who come to these volunteer clinics have not experienced dressmakers nor learning to sew perhaps for the first time. The Patient Consumers have co-operated wonderfully with the demonstrations this project for the first time," stated Mrs. Harker, "I urge you to choose your pattern carefully, and be sure that you have enough material to make the article which you plan to turn. In concluding she said, "In our program, we have tried to stress the conservation of the clothes we already have."

With the assistance of a number of models from Belleville, Mrs. Harker was able to show more clearly to the women the attractive articles of clothing which can be made from old. All this clothing, remodelled by Mrs. Harker, has been made by amateur dressmakers at volunteer sewing clinics, and all are simplified by emphasizing what can be accomplished by a little time and effort.

Modelling clothes during the show were Judy Aselstine, Elinor Clarke, Bobby Fraser, Beverley Paquin, Alice Vandervoort, Betty Johns, Eleanor Davidson, Jean Diamond, Peter Miller, David Scott, Laurie Ann Barclay and Mrs. Edgar Buchanan.

The guests, who were welcomed to the demonstration by Mrs. J. A. Hanley, were extended a vote of thanks at the close of the program by Mrs. M. Ward.

HAND LOTION PROTECTS FACE

In the next few months, Milady is going to encounter strong spring breezes that will roughen tender skin. Fresh, Lake Placid, year-round sports playground, comes to the rescue now to protect your complexion from changeable weather. Begin the day, they tell us, with your favorite whipped cream lather facial, following with a generous application of soothing hand lotion. The lotion penetrates the pores, and protects delicate complexions from chapping. And with an eye to the new backless, sleeveless fashions don't forget to use a good lubricating cream on face, neck and shoulders as well, after exposure to wind and sun. If the skin is not clear as you'd like, waken it to a smooth glow with a brisk back brush tingling, as part of your daily routine.

TRY A COLOURFUL HAIR NET

When spring demands something little different in hair-dress, why not try a smart coloured hair net? These nets may be shown in a variety of colours and add the final touch to last year's hat, or your brand-new Easter bonnet. Just push your curls in and, presto, pick and perch your hat on top. You'll find the coloured net on the latest, at the beach, or at parties with or without a hat. Inexpensively knit with fine cord, both fine mesh and sturdier shood net. They suit all hair styles—whether short or long bob, chignon or upswept hair-do. Prettiness is assured, see that hair is shining and smooth, and keep nets fresh with frequent washing, and a gentle fabric suds. Instead of using combs to restrain unruly strands of hair, tuck your net up high, trimly behind with pins. Flowers or jewelled clips, for the last word in a sleek, pretty coiffure.

MAKE YOUR OWN BATH CURTAINS

Probably the easiest bit of home-sewing Milady can turn her hand to—is curtains! And with the wide choice of materials available, any woman can make smarter, prettier ones than she can buy these days. Start with a simple bath curtain. Many large stores carry curtaining with a waterproof back for curtain rings about eight inches apart. For that different look—buy one in coloured curtain rings, for sale in any notions department.

TO CLEAN EYE-GLASSES

Here's a tip for girls who wear glasses—to keep them really clear and shining, try rubbing with a cloth dipped in rich, grease-dissolving suds to which a teaspoonful of ammonia powder has been added. You'll find the mixture of suds and ammonia does wonders for completely removing the dull film that clings to lenses. Rinse, and polish even the hardest rubbing with a dry cloth will not remove.

Hair and Hat Important

Jinx Falkenburg wears a hat that becomes her hair-do

By HELEN FOLLETT

THERE ARE certain fundamentals of good appearance that every woman should keep in mind. Most important details are the hair and the hat. A coiffure that is outmoded puts a woman in the "don't-belong" class and there is no sense in it, anyhow. A new arrangement can be tried out; if the woman doesn't like it, she doesn't have to live with it the rest of her life. The frumps are those who have fixed ideas, won't give them up.

Frimly hair, hair that has little shags sticking out here and there, will make any woman look frowzy. Locks that are not shampooed frequently and that take on an oily appearance, suggest lack of neatness, and never fail to annoy. Considering the splendid work now done by permanent wave operators and hair stylists, there is no reason why any woman, even one of limited means, can't sport a hair-do that is smart and becoming.

And the hat! Some women never make a mistake in choosing millinery; others seem to pick out the darndest things that were ever designed and put together. The wrong hat—or the right hat worn at the wrong angle—can make even a pretty girl look like a caricature. Millinery isn't as goofy as it has been; it is more conservative, smarter, more becoming.

Good Taste

It isn't necessary to have a fat balance in the checkbook to be smartly dressed. What is necessary is good taste, and an appreciation of line and color. Simple attire makes one more distinguished looking than fussy clothes. The fewer decorations the better.

The War Today—
Fighting in Burma Spade-Work For Ultimate Invasion

By DeWITT MACKENZIE
Associated Press War Analyst

The strange medley of fighting in the Jungles of Burma is taking on a very definite pattern in which we can recognize the broad outlines of a second spade-work for the ultimate amphibious invasion of that country when we hit the final stretch of trail for Tokyo.

It is a sometimes Asia's counterpart of the Allied preparatory work in the Pacific. We have a fine example of the latter in today's news of the trio of attacks on important Japanese bases — the bombardment of the island of Paluo, only 550 miles from the Philippines, by an American fleet; the first aerial attack on the great enemy base of Truk from southwest Pacific bases, and the bombing of Hollandia, an enemy stronghold on New Guinea.

What is the lure which draws Lt.-Gen. Joseph Stilwell deeply into the steaming Burmese hell? or British mystery soldier, Maj.-Gen. Orde Wingate — jungle specialist extraordinary when he is leading Wingate raiders in their sensational invasion of Burma a year ago?

Well, these fights are a overt in Burma because of any special new thrust from the enemy. This assemblage of the chiefs of the jungle fighting can means Burma is being prepared for the day when a water-borne invasion will sweep into it from the Bay of Bengal.

These are Allied operations (or at least part of them) had their birth as I understand it, at the Quebec conference in the Quebec last August. Wingate's amazing and useful adventure with his columns of raiders among the Japanese of Burma had attracted Churchill's particular attention and the jungle-fighter was invited to Quebec.

There it was decided Wingate should head another expedition of the one now in operation behind the Japanese lines. Gen. George Marshall, U. S. Chief of Staff, it is said to have promised Wingate American air support (which he is getting) and also sent to India the men now serving as marauders under Brig.-Gen. Frank Merrill. Incidentally, Charles J. Rolo, British author of "Wingate's Raiders," tells that both Wingate's present expedition and Merrill's men were given a post-graduate course in central India's fiercest jungle for fighting in preparation for the present job.

Fierce and bloody fighting is in progress in northern Burma.

The Allied offensive is aimed at driving the enemy, this season's battle ground of the chiefs of the jungle fighting can means Burma is being prepared for the day when a water-established.

Today the Members meet for a short sitting before dispersing for a two-weeks' Easter adjournment and then will not sit again until the aviation estimates.

CHICAGO HAWKS WALLOP DETROIT TO WIN SERIES

Defeat Wings 5-2 and Will Now Meet Canadiens for Stanley Cup

BENTLEY STARS

Detroit, March 31. (CP)—Chicago Black Hawks beat upset-wise Detroit to-day here, 5-2, in the deciding game of the Stanley Cup final when they walloped the Wings 5-2 in the fifth game of their best-of-seven series. Chicago took the series 4-1 and will enter the final straight against Montreal Canadiens who eliminated Toronto Maple Leafs last night.

Doug Bentley again held the stellar role, netting three of the five tallies while Johnny Goldsby and George Allen contributed one goal each. Bentley's tallies came on the sticks of Bill Quackenbush and Joe Carveth.

A crowd of 12,791 saw Quackenbush lift the Red Wings into a 1-0 lead in the first period which he converted and Bruneteau's pass. Detroit took the lead after the end of the frame, when Bentley drove his first goal with Allen and Reid Gilbert drawing assists.

The game deadlocked throughout the second stanza but early in the last period Goldsby headed in Reid and Bentley and Art Wiebe to send the Black Hawks ahead. Bentley added his second goal with Virgil Johnson assisting before Carveth took Murray Armstrong's pass to beat Mike Karakas down to the second Detroit counter.

Bentley's third came on a pass from Smith and Allen was assisted by Cliff Pennys and Cully Dahlstrom.

Second on Detroit Ice.

The victory was the second for Chicago on Detroit ice during the play-off series. Hawks won the first game of the semi-final at Detroit with the Red Wings winning the second. Chicago took both games played on home ice and completed the series last night.

Before the current play-off series, the Hawks had been without a Detroit victory in four years in their last visit to this city in the first game.

The Hawks played last night's game without the services of two right wingers, Both Bill Mosienko and Mush March suffered injuries in Tuesday night's encounter. Mosienko suffered a shoulder injury and March a belly-band.

Both probably will be back in the playing line-up for the final game of the series with Montreal which opens in the Canadian city next Tuesday.

SIXTH VICTORY

Highland Park, N.J., March 31—(CP)—Jerry Courcol, 138, Valley Stream, N.Y., registered his sixth consecutive victory in a bowling card here last night, knocking out Johnny Pompoda, 135, New York, in 44 seconds of the second of a scheduled six-round bout.

Courcol will leave for Canada Saturday at the expiration of his visa to visit the United States.

Toronto, March 30 — (CP) — Basketball in Canada has fewer lived up to its promise and the court game has lagged far behind its counterpart in the United States both in player interest and crowd appeal, that is one of 10,000 or more are not uncommon to the south. Contributing causes are the stiff competition from hockey, lack of proper playing facilities, and the senior semi-final. But he didn't make any predictions when he arrived at Toronto with the team last night. Sudbury has won three two games with one tied in the best-of-five series. The tie game went to overtime. Two overtime periods were necessary in the second game, won by Sudbury 5-4. The next game is Saturday at Toronto.

The possibility of the United States drafting 5-F but physically essential workers was cited by Brandt Richey, president of the Brooklyn Dodgers, baseball club, at Bear Mountain, N.Y., last night that major league clubs pool their players to keep baseball alive. But there's a catch. Rickey said: "I would be willing to do it but say 30 of our available men into a pool for distribution among all other major league clubs for the duration."

Army Boxing Championships Narrowing Down to Finals

By The Canadian Press

The Canadian Army boxing championships in Canada have been under way for some time now, principally monitored by the general public and the Defence Department at Ottawa last night revealed that the eliminations have narrowed down to district finals in most centres.

The schedule should be completed in the east and west by the end of April, with the winners meeting for Canadian titles in Ottawa on May 4.

The final round in the east opens at Petawawa camp, Ont., April 28, and continues for five days. The final western round has been set for Winnipeg in the week ending April 30.

Coach Bob Guertin of the Hull Volants thinks his hockey team is still defeat Sudbury Cub Wolves for Pte. Allaers in the Eastern Canadian senior semi-final. But he didn't make any predictions when he arrived at Toronto with the team last night. Sudbury has won three two games with one tied in the best-of-five series. The tie game went to overtime. Two overtime periods were necessary in the second game, won by Sudbury 5-4. The next game is Saturday at Toronto.

Canadian Sport Snapshots

By SYD THOMAS

Toronto, March 31 — (CP)—The situation on the junior hockey front is clearing up. The Trail Smoke Eaters look tough enough to keep up with it all. The Trail Smoke Eaters decided was the most serious because the player involved was a title too aged to play junior. But the player legal transfer of players from club to club has many strings attached and this was one of them parts of the country.

Chelsea Gaudreault of St. Michael's and then by the rules were allowed to take four of their men to Trail with them as they went along the playoff trail. Similar transfers have been made before and this is the last one, deep, dark mutterings of "professionalism replacing true amateur sport" are heard from different sport writers.

The truth is that everything, the juniors and juveniles have been getting for their hockey, Gaudreault, Catharins and other centres, where boys play for a time then are cited to other towns and then switch back to another. It's got so now the fan doesn't know if the boy is the team or not, and perhaps when things get back to normal again, everything will be changed. But thinking it over, that Gaudreault deal is a good idea, because the present system certainly makes for better hockey and that is what John Fan wants. Hang the ethics and let the stars fall where the Montreal Herald plump for Maurice Richard, with Gorman competing with Howie Morenz.

Ebbie Goodfellow picks Doug Bentley of Chicago as the best left-winger he ever saw . . . just wait awhile, there'll be others.

NOT FULL RECOGNITION

Moscow, March 30 — (AP) — A front-page editorial in the government newspaper Izvestia explained today that the current state of affairs with the Italian regime of Marshal Pietro Badoglio did not mean full recognition of his government and its efforts to enlist the help of the United States for a change in the government in Italy.

The Italian question is one of the important problems confronting the Allied coalition, it was pointed out, and must be settled as soon as possible to help hasten the defeat over Germany," the editorial said.

BASEBALL ROUNDUP

By FRITZ HOWELL

(Associated Press Sports Writer)

New York, March 31. (AP)—He brought along his own bat to training home this year—did Roberto (Bobby) Estalella, Philadelphia Athletics outfielder who hit a rousing .259 last season.

And don't laugh at that .259, for it was tops for the team's regulars. And Roberto wants to improve that—that's why he brought along the war club with which he bludgeoned his way this winter to a .336 average in the Cuban League.

At that, the weapon must be easier to wield than it is to pronounce, for it is made of Majaguawood, which comes from the tropical Hyatt Tillandsia tree.

We'd like to be there the day the A's play Washington, and Estalella swings his Partil Tillacusm limb at some pumpling pitch from Alexander Carrasquel.

The Brooklyn-Phillies Red Cross game, scheduled for today at Ebbets Field, has been postponed to April 13, and the Dodgers will try to get in their two-game series here with West Point this afternoon.

A quick look at the Training Camps:—

AMERICAN LEAGUE

Washington— Cuban Luis Aloes looks like winner of third base sweepstakes, although Skipper Ossie Vitt isn't ready to call the hitting.

Chicago — Hal Trosky, who quit two years ago because of dizzy spells and hitting 216 homes in nine years with Cleveland Indians, is under Jimmy Dykes Saturday as White Sox meet Cincinnati at Pasadena.

NATIONAL LEAGUE

Philadelphia— Outfielder Coaker Triplett, convalescing from flu, now has heavy chest cold. Pitcher Hugh Mulcahy, Dale Matthewson, in hospital and bronchitis, under observation for pneumonia.

St. Louis—Big Mort Cooper has slim chance to regain pitching form or will erase kinks. Team worked outside in 41-degree temperature.

TIMOR ISLAND BOMBED

New York, March 30. (AP) — Australian Overseas Dienst Agency, in an English-language wireless dispatch broadcast to United States, was recorded by government monitors, said today 17 more Japanese bombers" raided Kupang, Timor Island, Thursday.

The broadcast said one of the attacking planes was shot down.

DIES ON ACTIVE SERVICE

Gibraltar, March 30 — (CP Cable) — Rear-Admiral Edye Kington Boddam-Whetham, 57, has died on active service here, it was announced today. Admiral Boddam-Whetham was last placed on the retired list in 1929, returned to active service to carry out convoy duties in 1942.

In the First Great War he was commander of the Q ship Penshurst, command of a destroyer off the Belgian coast in 1917.

Pedestrian Killed, 2 Injured by Car

Hull, Que., March 30. (CP)—One pedestrian was killed and two others injured when they were struck by a motor car on Chelsea Road, the district of Hull, early this morning during a snowstorm.

Dead is Alice Deschenes, 17, while Denise Deschaine is suffering from a skull fracture and possible internal injuries and Jean Deschenes is suffering minor face lacerations.

LESSON NO. 342

By SAM GORDON
The Ribbon

Shades of Mystic Maisie! Good bidding saves you from losing into a crystal ball. Just use your rules and your noodle and you never fail.

You don't have to go into a trance over this pair of hands:

SOUTH	NORTH
♠K Q J 7 3 0 9	♠ 2
♥A K 10 5 4	♥ J C
♦ 8	♦ 10 7
♣ 8	♣ A K T

The four no-trump bid by north is the convention signal for asking someone how many aces they have. he held. If north had faith in the south opening, this question would be superfluous.

You see, an opening bid of one shows, among other things, four high cards (aces, kings, queens). North has eight of the possible 12. North must have the remaining four; so two, two pairs, a queen.

But now this deal was played, north feared that south may have opened light, and he used that method of confirming the fact that south held an ace and exactly two kings.

Fortified with that information, north is now encouraged. He has not been able to determine what trump suit is best. But he can be confident that there is a slam in no-trump.

Now assuming that south had his four high cards, north takes it for granted that south has the queen of spades. And when this ace was played, north went to seven no-trump.

East led a heart. How should

AT THE McCARTHY

"Beautiful But Broke"

Practically everyone admits that as a comedienne, Joan Davis is the screamingest on the air waves. However, she has a rival on the screen who matches her air antics laugh for laugh. It is Joan Davis herself.

Opening next in Columbia's daffy musical, "Beautiful But Broke," at the McCarthy Theatre, Joan is equalling, if not bettering the best in her other history. Besides her accustomed expert timing, there is a flavor of gag which her fans cherish in her radio performances, patrons of the McCarthy Theatre are seeing her. And seeing Joan is something out of this world.

But although Joan is the star of "Beautiful But Broke" and is really enough for anyone's complete entertainment, Columbia has added a dozen more cast of titillating players who give even Joan a run for her money.

There's Jane Frazee, sweeter than ever in the love-groove; Judy Clark, a jumpin' jivin' joy of beauty and song; Bob Haynes, the sensational star of radio and screen; John Hubbard, tall, dark and handsome, plus Willie, West and McGinty, famous vaudeville headliners.

The story of "Beautiful But Broke" is one of those hectic minute affairs streamlined for laughs and music. It has Joan taking over the office of an orchestra agent, and with the aid of Jane Frazee, Judy Clarke and Jane Fraze forming a girl's band.

The complications come thick and fast, but Joan meets them in her inimitable fashion with the theatre patrons splitting their sides with guffaws.

There are seven new song hits in "Beautiful But Broke," including "Mr. Jive Has Gone to War" and "Keeping It Private."

AT THE ELLIS

A super de luxe western loaded with adventure, romance, thrills and high-powered action, opens next at the Ellis, McCarthy Theatre through United Artists release, "I'm The Kansan," adapted from Stuart N. Lake's thrilling novel, "Peace Marshall" and stars Richard Dix, Jane Wyatt and Albert Dekker. Also prominent in the cast are such Hollywood screen luminaries as Eugene Pallette, Victor Jory and Robert Armstrong.

The story concerns John Bonnivell (Richard Dix), who arrives in the frontier town of Kansas City, Kansas, just in time to quell, single handed, a gang of train robbers led by the notorious Jesse Starbird (Victor Jory). Also on hand is Stephen Barat (Albert Dekker), intrigued by Bonnivell's dexterity at getting into and out of such a fight with such courage, induces Bonnivell to stay on in Peace Lance as Marshall. Bonnivell, intrigued in turn by the lovely face of Eleanor Sager (Jane Wyatt) who owns the town's one big hotel, agrees to stay.

AT THE BELLE

"Dr. Gillespie's Criminal Case"

The inside of a great penitentiary forms the background for a major thrill in "Dr. Gillespie Criminal Case", latest in the series now closing at the Belle Theatre. Lionel Barrymore and Van Johnson are kidnapped by a criminal killer they try to aid. Another dramatic episode is the battle against an epidemic in a children's ward.

Barrymore plays the veteran Dr. Gillespie, Johnson and Keye Luke his assistants, and Donna Reed the heroine of the grand cast. Actress Margaret O'Brien figures dramatically in the epidemic sequence, Wilma Goldbeck directed with a worthy cast that includes John Craven, William Lanigan and other favorites in the series.

"Battle of Russia", Outstanding

Blazing with the drama and excitement of the greatest battle in the world history-brining over with unrelenting might of the courage and fury of a defiant people caught in the path of the Nazi blitz juggernaut—the new War Department presented on the same program, a motion picture, "Battle of Russia" filmed by anything which has yet come to the screen.

For this feature-length, authentic story of the titanic battle that shattered once and for all the Nazi myth of invincibility, and turned the hurricane of unbroken German advance into an unprecedented rout, is factually authentic as it can be stranger— more absorbing and thrilling— than any drama could possibly contrive to be.

"The Battle of Russia" is the latest of a series of films produced by the Special Service Division, U.S. Army Service of War Information, in co-operation with the U.S. Army Signal Corps. It is an essential part of the basic training course given to all members of the armed forces. As it stands, it is a film that any citizen in uniform or out—should miss.

A Community Sing film completes the program.

"Princess O'Rourke", Romantic Comedy

A fresh and charming picture that hits just the right note of relief from the stresses of these times is the new Warner Bros. comedy, "Princess O'Rourke", which begins its local engagement this weekend at the Belle Theatre.

Directed by Norman Krasna, one of Hollywood's top flight scenarists, "Princess O'Rourke" marks that writer's initial bow as a director. And adding to the general prolitousness of the occasion, Krasna has written a gem of original solo.

"This compound probably can be adapted somewhat to the types of outdoor athletic playgrounds," Marvin suggested, "but it would hardly be suitable for race tracks. What would the mudders do?"

Powder Makes Sail Waterproof

St. Louis, March 31 — (AP) — Ozone postponed, by wet ground, a planned flight from baseball language if a chemically-treated rain suit demonstration by a powder company performs as well on the baseball diamond as it has on the armed forces.

It makes sail waterproof. Theodore Marvin, of the Hercules Powder Company, thinks it will do the same thing for baseballs, pitchers' mounds and batters' faces.

"Of course we can't tell for certain how the substance will work in ball parks because we've been busy developing it for the army, but we'll soon know," Marvin said in an interview.

"The Wilmington, Del., park of the inter-state league is being treated this week. Judging from the rain the Phillies encountered in spring training there, our powder should get a rigid test."

This rain combination is a dry powder which is mixed into previously pulverized soil. The soil is then rolled, resulting in a waterproof surface retaining the same characteristics as the original soil.

Toronto Defence Cracks Wide Open and Canadiens Race to 11-0 Victory to Win Series

Largest Crowd in 20-Year History of Forum on Hand for Tilt

DURNAN OUTSTANDING

By HAROLD FREEMAN
(Canadian Press Staff Writer)

Montreal, March 31. (CP)—Montreal Canadiens went from near slightly berserk in the third period last night, and rattled home seven goals that gave them an 11-0 victory over Toronto Maple Leafs and a green light into the Stanley Cup finals.

A crowd of 13,215, largest hockey crowd in the 20-year history of the Forum, saw a game that was fat from one-sided throughout the first two periods, despite the four goals Canadiens pushed past Paul Bibeault, but which degenerated into a scoring parade in the third.

The crack-up of the Toronto defence, a feature of the first four games of the best-of-seven series, was sudden and complete near the halfway mark in the period. Canadiens rapped home five goals in three minutes and 36 seconds as they rode in on Bibeault almost all way.

Ray Getliffe, Maurice Richard, Murdy Chamberlain and Toe Blake led the Canadien snipers with two goals each, while Phil Watson, Butch Bouchard and Buddy O'Connor bagged the others. At the other end of the rink, Bill Durnan was outstanding on the few occasions he was under pressure to chalk up the first play-off shutout of his N.H.L. career.

With Chicago Black Hawks winding up their series against Detroit Red Wings at the same time, the first game of the finals was set for Montreal next Tuesday night, with the second and third games in Chicago Thursday and Sunday. After that the best-of-seven series will be played to a finish in Montreal.

Pat Drumm Breaks Alley Record With 427

A new bowling record was established at the Recreation Alleys last night when Pat Drumm, bowling with the Belleville Golf team of the Major "A" league, rolled a torrid 427 over a single game. The Golf quintette was playing a league match with the Kinsmen team when Mr. Drumm established an alley record. The previous high for a single game had been held by Dell Pelster with a score of 425.

In establishing his bowling record Mr. Drumm rolled ten straight strikes before getting the five and three pin to his eleventh frame and a fourteen count in the final frame. The accomplishment of ten consecutive strikes in itself is considered a rarity in bowling circles.

Getliffe Hero

Getliffe and Watson sent Canadiens off along victory trail in the first period, and Richard and Chamberlain raised the count to 4-0 in the second. It was still a hockey game when Bouchard made it 5-0 early in the third.

Then the Toronto defence cracked wide open. Blake scored one at 7.38 and added another at 8.39. Richard legged another at 9.17, Getliffe followed with one at 10.33 and O'Connor put the finishing touches on the rout at 11.34. After that, Canadiens counter at 13.41 was strictly anti-climax.

HERSHEY BEARS TIE WITH BARONS

By the Canadian Press

The American Hockey League semi-finals between Hershey Bears and Cleveland will be decided at Hershey Wednesday night following Hershey's 5-3 victory last night which tied up the series at three games each.

For a time last night it looked as if the Bears were going to clinch the series when Pete Horeck tallied in the initial frame and Earl Bartholomew added another at the beginning of the second. Then the Bears launched a four-goal rally, rapping home tallies by Prentice, Pozzo, Harma and Lauzon, the latter's counter a deciding lead.

Pozzo made the issue final by firing a goal at the start of the third period, though Barons' desperate offensive efforts netted them another tally late in the third by Lou Trudel.

NEW MODERN RECORD

Montreal, March 31—(CP)— The 11-6 score which last night enabled Montreal Canadiens to capture their Stanley Cup semi-final series with Toronto Maple Leafs was unofficially labelled a new modern record for Stanley Cup playoffs.

The 11-point margin had never been even remotely reached in any Stanley Cup playoff series. Closest appeared to be a 9-4 score during the 1936 Stanley Cup finals series between Detroit Red Wings and Toronto Maple Leafs.

New York, March 31 — (AP) — Major League managers have good reason to mean about their player fines in spring, but how would they like to lose Phil Rizzuto, Benny McCoy, Vince Smith, Don Padgett, Don DiMaggio, Tom Yeardley and Charley Wagner off one club between seasons? . . . THE LITTLE DOG BARKED

by ANNE ROWE

CHAPTER XI

She really was the star witness and proved herself a first-rate actress all over again (I thought). A dramatic account of the weird noises she had heard coming from the locked door on that awful murder night, between the deafening flow of thunder. And when she added her testimony with a graphic duplication of Sibby's howl, following the escape of the mysterious slayer, she had the jury gasping with horror and admiration.

The corner, in consequence, had their prompt verdict: the habitual phrase of "Murder by a person or persons unknown" tempered by the evidence to "Murder by a man unknown." And the inquest was over.

The mining labor out-slay in North Harbor was over, too. And those ten minutes had been almost enough to satisfy even the town's gee-gnatterer. Or, more specifically, in the case of hopeless boobs of the one gnatterer, from which first I, and then Linda, had ordered a dose for old Mack's funeral.

The task completed, we were ready to return to Fern Cove, expecting, of course, to go back the way we came. But to our surprise, the driving arrangements had been altered.

Two cars were waiting for us in front of the Town Hall, instead of one. We learned that Sergeant Hatch had driven Linda down, having chugged off with her father, one of the jurors and a deputy besides—all to be the In-spector's companion.

"In taking you visiting," Pettengill told me jovially when he had started the car, "I hope," he asked: "Anything happen since I saw you? You talked some more into Miss Linda, regard to her Pa?"

I said I had tried during lunch, without much success. And produced my brief report of Linda's strange visit. Jane Welland's extraordinary behavior and talk with Orne Paulsen, besides the account of Corney Loring's disclosures.

Pettengill put them in his pocket and nodded thanks, until I had finished the contents of the notes for him.

"I knew about Paulsen," he vouchsafed when I was through. "Come to me and talked with me. Went back the night before. But that Miss Welland's talk all! Huh! Her brother-in-law's alibi! Had to be corrected.

"The Inspector didn't agree, "No, no! They's nothing in Jane's story, her. She's scared sick. Wants to tell me something and don't quite dare. Scared Miss Welland—like-wood's wife. Only, she runs over to the cottage every couple days—and Miss Welland does—asking haven't I got the manager yet, and pray-ing for protection—guard at her house. Pfeund talks so much she's begging the murderer for attention. While Miss Marshall now keeps quiet a house, and stays away from me all she can, seems like for both suspicion and danger, and likely it's two people. Me, I'd fix on Miss Marshall myself, only right one, and am glad she let down her hair a little. Will have you notice it all down. Will have to guard her special from now on."

"Shall we?" she broke in with the murderer is," I pointed out. "Only that the murderer might think I know what—I don't know."

The Inspector grinned, and said: "Same thing." Then exclaimed: "Good! Here's the road! Thought I'd missed it again!"

The almost missed road turned out to be the one leading to old Mack's farm house, which certainly looked deserted when we drew up at the door.

But I decided Constable Corey must be somewhere inside. For the door wasn't locked—and when I readily when the Inspector pushed against it, politely stepping aside to let me go in first.

The large room looked just as it had the previous time I'd seen it: neat and clean and comfortable. And it was flooded with late afternoon sunshine.

It made old Mack's pots and pans glitter, but it blurred the details of the other objects at the far end, so that, at first, I thought I was mistaken—that I was imagining when I caught sight of Corey moving moving in the solar radiance, close to the floor. Something white and shiny. The ghost of a small dog.

But I knew I didn't imagine the sound that went with the movement: a glad, eager whining.

Stray! Not burnt to death—alive —coming toward me!

He was making slow progress, hampered by the stiff bandage into which he was still strapped. High-stepping and prancing like a miniature horse, his plumy tail waving a frantic welcome, the white in his throat and muzzle in happy little yelps.

Behind him Inspector Pettengill was talking. But I didn't hear what he said. I was in a heap on the floor, waiting for Stray to reach us. Drawing him into my arms and holding him close.

The Inspector had dropped into a convenient chair, was patiently waiting for me to return to normal. At last he cleared his throat, noisily.

"Glad you be hadn't suffered any," he said—gruffly. "Gosh, I hated letting you think he was burnt up! But I had to do it. It's my one chance to catch the murderer off guard, with thinking he my only reliable witness against him dead. And I told you the truth, all but—when others think your dog was dead—we—you—don't so much watch. Would be more happy and given the show away."

"Perhaps," I conceded, still with Stray's loving pink tongue. "But it was cruelly just the same. Not to say that Linda is heartbroken about it."

"Was cruel," the Inspector cut-into my protests. "Cruel but necessary. Had to let the murderer know I'd make the pooch identify him the moment he'd recovered and more. Now: that he's sure Stray's dead—will be get a surprise!"

"You mean—you still want Stray —to go for him and get tricked again?" I asked warily.

"No, no! I won't let him get hurt," the Inspector promised solemnly. "I'll hold him in my arms—or Sergeant Hatch will—when we take him to the theatre tomorrow morning. He best don't—and scratched Stray's ears the way he had me do. Telling the dog to go: 'I'm relying on you, pup! Be sure Stray's dead—will be get a surprise!'

"Then the identification will be over with. Now: that he's sure Stray's dead—will be get a surprise!

"You mean—you still want Stray —to go for him and get tricked again?" I asked warily.

"No, no! I won't let him get hurt," the Inspector promised solemnly. "I'll hold him in my arms—or Sergeant Hatch will—when we take him to the theatre tomorrow morning. He best don't—and scratched Stray's ears the way he had me do. Telling the dog to go: 'I'm relying on you, pup! Be sure Stray's dead—will be get a surprise!' Straightening up with a chuckle. "Only wish it could be tomorrow. Right now! Can't do that first! But they's something I'm waiting for—something else to do first."

The Inspector suddenly shouted: "Corey — hey, Corey! Call Doc Gates!"

With the immediate result of the two men bursting through the door to the kitchen.

"Were here all the time. Did when they heard our car, so you could meet your friend Stray in peace," the Inspector explained.

Other explanations followed: Doc Gates had transferred his activities inflame here, for the time being. Ousting the chickens to make room for his patients; the sister family and Stray.

Inspector Pettengill told the veterinary how he had been made a present of "murderer's alee," and that he and Constable Corey would take turns guarding old Mack's house and the dog in it.

After a while, the Inspector asked: "Stray all right, Doc? But if not, I'll be satisfied with one thing: Ousting the murderer's arms. Inspector. Not when he sees the man' killed old Mack and most kicked him to death. He's spunky, is Stray. He'll wriggle free, no matter what and clamp his teeth where they'll do the most good," the Doc prophesied.

I fought down a sudden impulse to shut out—"Oh, for heaven's sake, take Stray now and get it over with. Don't wait for—wait—ever it is you are waiting for!"

But the Inspector had a very good reason for waiting. I found out the next day. But—if only he'd said it! And if only he hadn't taken Stray to Fern Cove that afternoon!

I woke early the next morning, with a feeling that this was the day the murderer would be caught. Convinced of it—convinced practically by the barking of a small dog. That is: if Inspector Pettengill were right.

The only flaw in my contentment was the fact that Stray hadn't something tangible from the Inspector about the case. Not even suspicions.

I certainly had tried hard, on our ride back from old Mack's farm, but with no luck.

Pettengill's questions had been answered by amused smiles and silence. My more subtle approaches with adroit evasions.

When I had voiced my admiration for the vet's fortitude and cheerfulness in the face of disaster in hoping to work around from there to the possible identity of the fiendish slayer, the Inspector had chuckled and told me I was all wrong: "He's likely pleased as Punch, Doc Gates is. He was in need of money and now he's got a new dog hospital for nothing."

Pettengill had said he'd bring Stray to the theatre around ten, when rehearsal was in full swing. Which would make sure the murderer would be on stage and was likely to turn on Tom Linwood.

Linwood, I was sure. Everything pointed to him, now that I knew of his scheme to annex part of the Eureka money through Sondra's marriage to my ex-friend—Tom. Everything, including Sondra's: "He would kill me if he found out I'd told Burns about him," and her other ambiguous remarks about my being in danger, because of something imagining I knew things. The "someone" being, of course, Tom Linwood . . . .

If Linwood were guilty and were arrested, who'd direct my play? Would Jane Welland step into the breach herself, after a week's postponement? Or would the uproar be abandoned?

Personally, I was for calling the whole thing off. Not only for the uproar, for good. "Against All Comers" would always be linked in my mind with murder and Linda's fear.

Rehearsal had been over when I had come back to Fern Cove yesterday. But Linda had told me she had been "not-so-good."

"You really couldn't call it rehearsal," she said. "It was just a succession of fights. Everybody was nervous as a cat and had so many words to say to me, I got all mix-ed. He bawled out Sondra, imitated her—Gerald Knowles—and Mrs. Turner. And Lee Welland threw another fit. Said she was too scared to work and couldn't go on—section." It only meant she wanted to resort for the evening. She asked me would I mind sending Stray to her. She was afraid of driving through the woods all alone and of course she wouldn't ask her husband! I told her to help herself that I had no strings on him. And he said: 'You don't want me to go out with just one person. I'd like to stay here and have dinner with you!'"

That idea was as welcome as unexpected. Inspector Pettengill had urged me not to let Linda out of my sight and I'd been cudgeling my brain how to prevent her from running off at once.

The result of her offer had been a pleasant, quiet dinner party. Not at the noisy Snack Hutch, but at Jim-Jim's, when most of the guests had gone to the theatre. With Wella Colby and Bill Parris waiting on us. Linda, the conversation strictly limited to the play.

Linda's voice in the outer hall, exchanging "good mornings" with our guardian of the night, told me she'd left for the theatre, and so I had to get busy with my answer. Still thinking of last night.

If I were wrong, and Bill Parris was the murderer after all, it would be a dreadful blow to Linda. She'd fallen thoroughly in love with him.

Our talk, before going to bed last night, hadn't—as I'd feared—a double. Or rather, my talk to her, about her father.

She'd listened politely, brushing her hair. Too politely. I'd known from the way she was brushing that I wasn't making a dent with my arguments in Loring's behalf. And I'd blurted out: "Don't be so stubborn, Linda! Put yourself in his place, but in your mother's. If you had just married the man you loved and had ugly stories about him, would you believe them? Would you leave him, on the say-so of your family, and go to hiding thousands of miles away, so that he couldn't find you and present his side?"

"I don't know." She'd gone on brushing her cloudy mane into backfish rhythm. "Maybe, sometimes. Girls were different, twenty-one years ago."

"Like fun they were!" I'd snapped. "You talk as though twenty-one years were as many centuries! And you seem to forget that your mother wouldn't exactly be in her dotage, if she'd lived. How old would she be?"

"Forty. Almost forty-one," Linda said after a little thought.

"Two and a half years older than I?" I'd scoffed. "And I can bet myself, twenty years back, letting my family part me from my husband—if he'd been a husband then. No, Linda, no! There was some-thing wrong on your mother's side too. Undue influence of some kind—as you should understand, if you take yourself as an example. You were all ready to hang Bill Parris. You only went out with him to find a peg to hang him on. And now you're sure of his total innocence, you're ready to scratch and bite when the possibility of his guilt is mentioned."

Linda dropped her hairbrush. "Perhaps it was mother's health. She never was well after I was born," she offered.

"She never was well again, perhaps because you were born to some out-of-the-way place where she couldn't get the proper care," I'd told her. "Where exactly?"

"At Hazelle, on the Silvers. I've taken the name of my birthplace for a stage name."

"And whatever heard of Barelle?" I prodded. "Bet it's a hamlet back of nowhere, without a hospital, a decent doctor or trained nurse. Oh, Linda, please! Don't take your mother's mistakes out on your fa-ther—why! Then, a little afraid of having gone too far, I'd told her to "sleep on it" and said good night.

And—all she'd answered was: "But you don't really believe Bill is the murderer?"

I'd only seen a girl hard hit! It was nine-thirty when I stepped out of the Inn, after a hasty breakfast, into the most perfect summer morning—anything but an indictment for any one like a black dark theatre to watch a murderer being caught. But, when I was putting my foot on the bottom step of Linda House porch, I simply couldn't go on. It must have been a kind of sixth sense.

There was really not nothing very unusual in what was happening around me: Young Hallet, the Inspector's stenographer, driving toward the entrance post-haste and several men—obviously natives and probably deputies—running toward the private end of the shore road. But somehow I felt the urge to join them. And when I caught sight of Conant's car appeared, speeding in the same direction, the urge became action, and I found myself running with the others.

To my surprise it turned into the Alden-Vickery grounds where I'd once stood at the gate as if guarding it and, deeper among the trees a larger group was milling around a rickety summer house.

Alden and Vickery themselves—and the two young men I'd seen in Loring's workroom?—and Sheriff Gross and Sergeant Hatch among about inside the small open structure.

It was all strange and ominous. I stood in the road, not knowing what to do until one of the men at the gate recognized me and said dolefully: "Terrible, ain't it? Inspector Pettengill's with the corpse. Guess they want you. Go right in, Mrs. Turner."

Another thrilling . . . Linda? It wasn't that. Just that the pitchfork conviction that the murderer had succeeded with a third attempt on Stray.

The men standing before the entrance were quiet, silent at the thing going on inside that I could not see. I joined them, leaned against the rarest tree for support, not even trying to look over their shoulders. Ask questions. For a long, ghastly minute, I waited.

At last Dr. Conant's voice—addressed from the door of the summer house: "Death was instanter. Skull caved in by a blunt, soft instrument. That accounts for there being no gore—except for one blood clot, eight, ten hours."

And I felt limp with relief that it was—not Linda.

A moment later the crowd opened and I could see the interior of the pavilion.

Sheriff Weymouth and Sergeant Hatch were standing to one side of it, in earnest conversation with Dr. Conant. And on a bench directly opposite the wide entrance arch Inspector Pettengill bent-ing over Burns Loring, who was slumping in his seat, bending low over a figure that lay close to them on the rough wooden floor.

For an instant everything around me blurred. My eyes were playing me tricks. I heard Sondra's soft, affected drawl: "I am certainly realized I knew—would I be in danger? And my eyes closed.

They hurt as I tried to follow Inspector Pettengill's commands when he got up—and, drawing Burns Loring with him and walked over to the corner of the shelter to join their discussion.

I couldn't understand all they said. But I caught quite a lot of it. First there was Burns Loring's stout-getting a stretcher, and an ambulance coming in the car to autopsy—resulting in the two boys assisting—sprinting off across the grounds toward the Loring house—and the question and the next of tin: Who was to be notified of Sondra's death?

"No one," I heard Burns Loring say dully. "Not even Linda. Mar-ried twice, but—one widowed, once divorced. All her near relatives are "dead. I don't mind, I'd like to take care of everything. From my home."

Then followed more talk I didn't get. It looked like a debate of the steps to be taken — to catch the murderer? Loring was taking an important part in it. He kept shaking his head at the Inspector, his voice never left the dead girl on the floor; he looked terribly weary about the eyes. He stumbled at the same time.

I couldn't read how I read his expression. Inspector Pettengill interpreted it differently.

PROCESS CHEESE MANUFACTURE TO BE LIMITED

Consumption Has Been Growing at Time When Cheddar is in Great Demand for Home and Overseas

Ottawa, March 21 (CP) — The Agriculture Department announced today that under an Order in Council, order the manufacture of process cheese will be limited, effective April 1.

No process cheese manufacturer may make any greater quantity of process cheese during any one quarter of the year than was made during the corresponding quarter of last year. Neither may he increase the manufacture of process cheese a greater amount of cheddar cheese than he used during a corresponding quarter in 1943.

Process cheese consumption has been increasing at a time when cheddar cheese is in great demand both at home and to meet overseas needs. It was understood the order was designed to ensure the largest possible supplies of cheddar would be available.

Officials said that when larger cheese factories in Canada's most important dairy areas resume operations Saturday, they probably will have larger supplies of milk available than a year ago.

Several cheese factories in both eastern and western Ontario recently have been handling larger quantities of milk than could normally be expected at this season, they said.

"Many cheese factories have kept open all winter and have manufactured cheese but to collect milk for fluid milk markets", officials said.

"Most of them will retain their receipts of milk for cheese manufacture beginning April 1".

They said they were pleased at the response of dairy farmers to the appeal for greater milk production, and added there will be ample markets for even the greatest anticipated production.

Diversion of milk to the purposes for which it is most needed such as cheese, butter, concentrated and fluid milk has been continued since September, 1943, by the Agricultural Board.

During the winter the Board has permitted fluid milk distributors to buy milk normally used in the manufacture of cheese, but most of these permits expire today", said the Board.

"Consequently, such milk will now be used in the manufacture of

WALL STREET
New York, March 21 (AP) — Selected rails, liquors, oils and specialties continued to reach for higher levels in today's stock market while assorted industrial leaders were unable to do much on the recovery side. Near the fourth hour, gains of fractions to a point, or so were the majority.

Among favorites, American Sugar was up more than 3 points at a new peak. Others in top ground for the year included Kimbar, Oil, Cuba Co. Ex-Cell-O Corp., Eastman Kodak and Wheel Baking "A". Also ahead: Goodrich, Montgomery Ward, Sunday Oil, Illinois Central, Packard Motor and Distillers Corp.

Canadian issues were spotty, with O'Brien holding unchanged, while Dome was up 2-8 but Lake Shore lost 1-4. The liquors were noticeably stronger, Hiram Walker advancing 3 1-3 points while Distillers firmed 2-4.

TORONTO STOCKS
Toronto, March 21 (CP) — The opening groups and the industrials registered moderate strength in the early session and the golds widened their gains in the early afternoon on the Toronto stock exchange. Trading today picked up a bit and turnover totalled 225,000 shares for the first three hours.

Lake Shore, Dome, Broulorne, Hollinger, Wright - Hargreaves, Kerr-Addison, Macassa, Beattie and

Weekly Livestock Report

Toronto, March 21 (CP)—Cattle prices made a new low level for the year to date, but trade on the live stock market here this week. Prices were down 25 to 40 cents on all grades of steers and heifers and 15 to 25 cents on cows. Local packing plants were overloaded with beef from western Canada, and are buying on Wednesday and Thursday requirements only. Calves were 50 cents lower.

Veal calves, hogs and sheep were steady. Lambs gained 25 cents.

In cattle trading for weighty steers $12.25 to $12.40 with most steer sales between $11 and $12. British Planes Shoot Down U.S. Plane by Mistake

Washington, March 21 — (AP) — British fighter planes from an aircraft carrier shot down a United States Army transport plane and killed 3 members of the crew and 15 of the 24 troops aboard, the War Department and the British Admiralty announced jointly today.

The fighters were protecting an invasion convoy said the announcement, and apparently mistook the four-engine C-54 transport plane for a German Focke Wulf 200 bomber when identification was not established at the transport's approach for cover.

There were no passengers on the plane, which was loaded with cargo. It was flown by a civilian contract crew, six of whom were hurt.

$1,462,250 Found In Safety Box Of Late Mayor

Chicago, March 21 (AP)—Agents from the office of State Treasurer and Attorney General and Attorney General Edward J. Hughes met in front of a loop bank yesterday to open the box in the safety deposit boxes owned by the late William Hale (Big Bill) Thompson, thrice Mayor of Chicago.

In probate court a few days ago Breen, then Thompson's attorney, had stated the former mayor had left about $140,000. He said a will had been made, Thompson's widow Lady Isabel named principal beneficiary, but no will was immediately found.

When the safety boxes were opened, bills of many denominations—large and small—popped forth as a jack-in-the-box and fell to the floor.

There were bills of $1,000 denominations, of $500, and of $100. The total was estimated to be worth $50,000. Included in the currency were gold certificates amounting to $40,000.

No will was found but Breen suggested it might be in one of three other safety boxes which will be opened next week.

Thompson died March 19.

Authority to Extend Farm Work Permits

Ottawa, March 21. (CP)—Selective service officials have been granted authority to grant extension of deferment permits to farmers in areas where the agricultural season is backward, Arthur MacNamara, director of National Selective Service, said today.

Permits issued to farmers to take other work during the winter season expire April 1. Extensions will not be granted where they are needed on the farms but they may be allowed to continue in off-farm work in areas where the season is not sufficiently advanced for them to resume farm work.

Strikes Spreading In Great Britain

London, March 21—(CPP)—British's war industry strikes spread to the coal mines and shipyards today, despite union threats and appeals for cracking-down on violating draft deferments.

At least 15,000 ship building and engineering apprentices were on strike throughout the great Tyneside and Clydeside districts and in the Huddersfield and Middlesbrough areas of Yorkshire, demanding that to exempt them from a draft to the mines.

The Yorkshire Miners' strike extended to 26,000 more men, bringing the total idle to more than 90,000. Production was crippled in 70 pits. Over the period, South Wales strike over extra pay for night work, the dispute in York shire hinges upon the miners' objection to pay deductions for coal taken to their own homes.

Meetings were called in many to-morrow's and weekend to vote on union appeals to resume work.

NOW THEY'RE MARRIED
Darling, Essex, Ireland, March 21. (CP Cable) —Twelve years ago Sydney Hardwicke asked Lydia Smith to be his wife. "Nonsense," she chuckled, "we're too young to make our own minds", or words to that effect. Sydney, now 85, married Lydia, now 82, in Dunmurry. Sydney had to be wheeled to the ceremony in a bath chair.
